Scranton's Own—Jeanne Madden

TO the people of Scranton the world premier tonight at the Strand Theater of "Stage Struck," the first picture in which Jeanne Madden has had a part, is of outstanding interest. Our people have watched Jeanne grow up. She was heard and seen here on numerous occasions in entertainments of one sort or another long before she went away to train for her Hollywood career. Her father and mother, both fine musicians, saw that her training was the best. Those who remember her before she went to New York to train and who have ard her since realize the big improvement has been in her voice and the poise with e goes about her work.

is Scranton's own gift to the motion orld. Charming of face and figure a voice that captivates, it requires no f the imagination to predict future the pictures, in fact, Warner Brothers n so impressed by her work that she n given a new contract and shortly is to r Hollywood to begin her work on a new cture. Jeanne is reported as thrilled by the spects of tonight's premier. This is not surpr ing. After all, Jeanne is only a slip of a girl and this is her debut in the picture world.

It is fitting that the world premier of "Stage Struck" should be in Scranton where the people who have watched Jeanne grow up and have been excited about her success can see the picture and tell the young lady in person that our hopes and best wishes for continued future success go with her.

3 Children, 2 Unconscious Women Are Rescued From Milling Throng Of Jeanne's Home-Town Admirers

A pushing, shouting, screaming mass of people, estimated at 15,000, last night turned the premiere of Jeanne Madden's first film nearly into a riot.

It was a scene such as this anthracite city of Scranton had never seen in its history—when the throng, wild with the one desire of seeing the little girl who made good in pictures, suddenly broke gh the police lines around the Strand Theater.

Through a pouring rain, the thousands had gathered along the valks and on the pavement of Spruce Street until only a narrow lane for automobiles was left from North Washington Avenue yoming Avenue.

An announcement had just been made that Miss Madden was ay to the theater and would arrive at 8:27. The tense crowd l waited for two and a half hours began pushing in and suddenly a shout went up:

"There she is."

An automobile with an elegantly dressed elderly lady had just pulled up to the curb and the crowd thought it was their idol. Ropes which had been stretched along the streets snapped as the thousands pushed forward.

They jammed forward around the automobile, pushed on into the lobby of the theater where two microphones were set to announce the arriving celebrities, a la Hollywood.

The air was filled with screams and shouts as some were pushed against buildings, against telegraph poles.

Ten traffic patrolmen who were on duty and five firemen rushed to try to clear a way for Jeanne who was caught with her party in the crowd up the street.

Cops Carry Children Away

Three small children, who had been in the front of the crowd on the side toward Washington Avenue, were caught and crushed, and carried out by the police. A young girl of about 18 fainted and she was carried into the theater. A young woman in her early twenties also fainted and was carried into the theater.

A riot call meanwhile had been sent to police headquarters, and Captain John Lewis and five men responded. They rushed down North Washington Avenue and

MR. DAWN ARRIVES

IN these days of tremendously pretentious productions achieving thunderous successes, requiring millions and engaging the creative efforts of armies of genius, there is spectacular contrast in a one-man triumph, won on an idea, an ability and a shoestring.

That is the story of "Tundra," and the man is Mr. Norman Dawn, cameraman.

About a year ago Mr. Dawn sold Mr. Carl Laemmle of Universal the "Tundra" project and departed for Alaska. The expedition consisted of Mr. Dawn, cameraman, also director, assistant director, art director, master of effects and whatever, and Mr. Del Cambre, who plays the role of the doctor in the piece. When the Laemmle interest in Universal was sold a few months ago, the expedition was cancelled and ordered home. Mr. Laemmle refused a two-weeks extension to finish the picture. In the rough and unfinished, the picture had no friends. Mr. Dawn, who had a share in its profits, if, when, and/or as, got permission to see if he could dispose of it. He found a patron and a customer in Burroughs-Tarzan Pictures, under whose auspices the picture was finished, probably on northern California locations.

THE result is a success, simple, unpretentious, but nonetheless a success, communicating to the audience a part of the interest behind the eager eyes of the cameraman. "Tundra" has some of the qualities that obtained in Mr. Robert Flaherty's work before the Coffee House club discovered he was an Artist, some of the qualities of Mr. Martin Johnson's adventurous records before he became an institution and annexed Africa.

So "Tundra" will be seen about, and like as not, now Hollywood will decide that Mr. Dawn shall have a new day.

DRAMATIC SECTIONS

THE metropolitan newspapers of today are having a perfect devil of a time keeping a stage coloration on the first page of their dramatic sections. The waning of the handmade show under the relentless march of domination of the screen has made dramatic editing a problem for several years, and now with the stage "on relief" and taking a WPA propaganda job, most of its tidings appear to belong rather in the political news section than in those pages devoted to the entertainment arts. The motion picture dominates the amusement sections in respect of space, display and all considerations except only position. The publishers still seem to think that they have to have the relics of the old-drama of the stage to give excuse to their dramatic sections.

THEY WON'T BE TOLD

IT is all very well for the Central Casting Bureau to issue a warning, "Stay out of Hollywood," and point out that the chances of screen fame are one in five thousand; that of 15,275 given work, 13,463 earned under $200; and that only 533 earned more than $500 in the last half-year.

The effect of such warning must be negligible.

The odds against profit on Sweepstakes tickets are even heavier, but international gambling grows apace. When millions will sacrifice scant earnings, and sometimes even stint the baby's milk, to buy tickets on lotteries and numbers games, no statistics will dim the lure of Hollywood.

Meanwhile, one must remember that classic but true story of the very pretty little lady who went to Hollywood to crash the golden gates and at the end of two years was still a waitress, but also owned two apartment houses.

DARING MISS PONS

THE ever-alert motion picture section of the Los Angeles Times one day last week unostentatiously set down in three paragraphs a remarkable screen-radio story, thus:

> Lily Pons's belief that a person is capable of doing well only one thing at a time cost her a cool $10,000 yesterday.
> Busy with the preliminary work on her new picture for RKO, as yet untitled, Miss Pons was approached by a radio representative with an offer for her to sing on the air waves from Hollywood.
> Without hesitation the operatic star turned a cold shoulder. She is a firm believer that she cannot give her best to more than one thing at the same time, and since she is tied up with her picture work she intends sticking to it without outside interference.

This will get Miss Pons a hand from that great array of anti-radio showmen, engaged in the endeavour to tear patrons away from the loudspeaker and lure them to the box office, but she can expect something less from her screen contemporaries engaged in selling their art to vendors of soap, salad dressing and headache powders.

THE drought reports are probably exaggerated. There is a bumper crop of blue grass hay in the Garden of All Nations on Rockefeller canyon roofs just south of the Music Hall and the editor's desk. The grass is, in fact, about 150 feet high, which would be tall even for the Kaw valley.

This Week

51 Million Free

Theatre owners' complaints against air appearances of motion picture stars are answered by a $51,000,000 budget set by radio and national advertisers for film, vaudeville and theatrical talent in 1936-37. The budget was completed even as the organized industry set out to determine what film stars' air appearances do to theatre box offices.

The fight of radio versus motion pictures is described on page 13.

Screen Music

One hundred and twelve songs are advanced by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers as the hits of the season; 50 per cent of them came from Hollywood and its motion pictures. Thus has the stage of Broadway and Broadway's "Tin Pan Alley" been outranked by Hollywood as the principal source of the nation's popular music.

The titles are recorded on pages 14, 15 and 16.

Mayer Honored

Louis B. Mayer, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer vice-president in charge of production, was honored last week by St. John, N. B., his home town, on the occasion of his first visit in twenty years. Friends of his boyhood, now leaders in civic and industrial activity of the city, tendered a luncheon in honor of their old friend and neighbor.

Details of the occasion, with a photographic record thereof, appear on page 36.

Production Gain

Production recovered somewhat from the slump of the preceding week with seven new features going before the camera. Prospects of further upswing were bright with 21 more scheduled to go into shooting within a fortnight. Cutting rooms are clogged with 58 pictures in the editing stage.

A detailed account of the production situation appears on page 37.

Duals Delayed

John Balaban, operating head of the Balaban and Katz circuit in Chicago, this week accounted for the organization's delay in starting its neighborhood theatres on a double-feature policy by citing a lack of available product, due in part to the holding over of pictures for extended first runs downtown. He reiterated that the policy will be installed when circumstances permit.

A complete account of the Chicago situation is furnished by William F. Crouch on page 76.

Music and Melodrama

Attention of the film colony has been drawn to the painstaking efforts of Pickford-Lasky to combine the best elements of melodrama and music, traditionally dependable box office factors, in "The Gay Desperado," in process of production with Nino Martini, Leo Carrillo and Ida Lupino in the principal roles. As the picture nears completion Hollywood is saying that the producers "have something there," to use the meaningless phrase of the moment, citing precedents.

Gus McCarthy's pictorial preview of the production is presented on pages 32-33.

Pioneers Organize

Formed at the suggestion of Commodore J. Stuart Blackton for the purpose of promoting cooperative companionship, with a secondary purpose the bridging of the gap between box office generations, the Associated Cinema Stars gave its first annual dinner dance last week at Hollywood's Hotel Biltmore Bowl. Hundreds of stars of yesterday and thousands of fans of today were in attendance.

This story appears on page 36.

Fair Practices

Exhibitor dissention over alleged monopolistic and unfair trade practices of the large distributors threatens further court wrangles between the large and small interests. Distributors were sued this week in New Orleans, were threatened with a new suit in Kansas City, and received protests from New York owners, while Detroit independents called attention of the Department of Justice to conditions alleged to exist in their territory.

The trade practice situation is viewed on page 18.

Theatre Birthday

Forty years ago this month the late Senator John P. Harris of Pennsylvania opened a museum or Curio Hall in McKeesport in connection with which the newly publicized motion pictures were shown. Nine years later Senator Harris opened a nickelodeon in Pittsburgh which is believed to be the first all-motion picture theatre to open in the United States. It formed the nucleus of the present Harris Amusement Company, one of the largest circuits in Pennsylvania. The company this week opened an exposition and entertainment at Duquesne Garden, Pittsburgh, to inaugurate a month's celebration of the anniversary.

The unique history of the company is reviewed on page 26.

When in Rome

When in Rome it's not a bad idea to drop into the International Cinematographic Institute and see what's being done about the motion picture as an art, an industry and otherwise. Founded by the League of Nations in 1928, the Institute is housed in a building on the grounds of the Villa Torlonia, residence of Il Duce, and there is conducted, with cooperation of all nations, extensive recording, analysis and annotation of motion picture affairs.

An article on the subject by Dario Sabatello appears on page 34.

Capital Premiere

Because "The Gorgeous Hussy" impinges on affairs of state, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer previewed the new production in Washington, inviting the creme-de-creme of the Capital's political, diplomatic and newspaper life. Accordingly, Motion Picture Herald assigned its political correspondent, Francis L. Burt, to report on this "Hollywood premiere" staged within the shadows of the Capitol dome.

Mr. Burt's record of the event is presented on page 31.

Move for Managers

Higher grosses have evolved from the managers sharing plan in use through the Famous Players circuit, largest in Canada. As a result, the system of rewards will continue. Checks for $30,000 were distributed to managers at the circuit's convention in Toronto.

Reports on the convention and a description of the plan appear on page 35.

Nationalization

Efforts of the industry in France to reorganize itself in conformity with governmental requirements, against which is set up the definite promise of nationalization in event of failure, have accomplished little in the way of progress on account of rivalry and dissension between the two major industry organizations, the Chambre Syndicale and the Comite Du Film. Each has expressed itself as holding the selfish motives of the other responsible for delay.

Pierre Autre's story of the situation appears on page 17.

Odeon Target

Revealed as the principal target of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association policy aimed at prevention of over-seating, Adolph Deutsch is proceeding steadily with development of his Odeon circuit, which now includes two hundred theatres in England. Southall, Oldham and Ramsgate were towns witnessing the opening of new Odeon theatres in a single week of August.

Bruce Allan's report of the industry in England appears on page 55.

Champions

Box office champions for July were, alphabetically by title, "The Great Ziegfeld," "The Green Pastures," "It's Love Again," "Poor Little Rich Girl," "Poppy" and "San Francisco."

Stills from the pictures, together with pertinent data, are published on pages 24-25.

Venice

by AIDO FORTE

United Press Correspondent

in Venice

A German film, "Kaiser von California," won the Mussolini trophy for the best film in the International Exhibition.

The Volpi trophy for the best actor was awarded to Paul Muni for his interpretation of the film "Louis Pasteur."

The Ministry of Press Propaganda awarded a cup for the best photography to Mutz Greenbaum, cameraman for the British film, "Tudor Rose."

Jury also awarded medals to three United States films: Paramount's "Trail of the Lonesome Pine"; Columbia's "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town," and RKO's "Mary of Scotland."

The Volpi trophy for the best actress was awarded to the French actress, Annabella, for the film "Les Veille d'Armes."

Jacques Feyder, French director, was awarded the medal of the Ministry of Press Propaganda as the best director for the film "Kermesse Eroique."

The German film "Schluasakord" was considered the best musical film and the German film "Jugend der Welt" merited the honor as the best documentary short.

The best Italian film was "White Squadron," a picture relating to the life of Colonial soldiers in Libya.

Offset Tactics

British distributors are reported to have begun moves designed to counteract effects of the Loew-Twentieth Century-Fox deal with Gaumont British which has been enveloped in complete silence. C. M. Woolf, head of General Film Distributors, Ltd., with a substantial interest in Universal, is reliably believed to be acquiring theatres in small groups with a circuit of 100 as his ultimate aim. Along different lines is a project being studied by John W. Gossage of Reunion Films to group a number of British producers in a joint distributing company. Mr. Gossage admits he is working on financial details and expects to be able to report progress shortly. Both developments are considered attempts to offset the move of the Schenck brothers.

British Awards

The British Institute of Cinematography has announced completion of plans for making annual awards similar, in a functional way, to those of the Academy of Motion Pictures Arts and Sciences in the United States. The British awards, incidentally, will include a gold medal for the best non-English production of the year.

Other bases of award are enumerated on page 55.

G-R Abroad

Grand National will set up its own foreign department in the home office in New York, Edward L. Alperson, president, said when he returned this week from Europe after arranging a two-year distribution deal in England with Associated British Film Distributors. He said his company would deliver 34 pictures a year in England for two years under terms of the contract which will guarantee his company a minimum of $2,000,000. Eight westerns are included in the 34 features.

Mr. Alperson is scheduled to arrive in Hollywood shortly to confer with Carl Leserman, general sales manager, on the signing of new producers. One of the deals to be set will be with Joseph Von Sternberg, who will probably make three for next season.

Distinctive Screen Attractions, Inc., with offices in Denver and Salt Lake City, have been taken over by Grand National from Lon T. Fidler, who will remain in charge of the exchanges for the new owner. The company will open its own branch in Des Moines with Lou Levy, who has been with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in Iowa, in charge. L. L. Wells and Bob Winnig, former MGM salesmen, have been appointed salesmen.

Kuykendall Withdrawal

The withdrawal of Edward Kuykendall from theatre operation may bring about his retirement from exhibitor organization work on the conclusion of his current term as president of Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America next spring. While Mr. Kuykendall is retaining his ownership of the Princess and Dixie theatres in Columbus, Miss., and his half interest in the Tupelo, Miss., theatre, the houses will be operated by M. A. Lightman in conjunction with the Saenger circuit on a long-term lease. Mr. Kuykendall said that he would serve out his present term as MPTOA president, but that his plans for the future in connection with the organization are "undecided."

By-laws of the MPTOA do not require officers to be theatre operators, but the custom has been only to elect such men to head the organization.

New Film

The Eastman Kodak Company at Rochester, according to the New York Herald Tribune, has perfected a new film for still cameras by which pictures can be taken in color, supplementing the color film which the company has had available for motion picture cameras for some time. As yet, however, no color prints can be made, so that the new film can be used only for colored transparencies, such as lantern slides.

51 MILLION FOR TALENT IS RADIO REPLY TO THEATRE

Network Advertisers Authorize Biggest of All Ether Budgets for New Season; MPPDA Probing Effect of Film Stars on Air

Radio's answer to the scores of complaints of motion picture exhibitors over film stars' appearances on the air is a $51,000,000 talent budget to pay film, vaudeville, theatrical and other performers who in 1936-37 will commercially entertain listeners to America's 26,000,000 loudspeakers for the benefit of national advertisers of merchandise ranging from tin cans to toilet goods, skin balms to soups, and hams to cheese.

Radio's invasion of Hollywood for talent in the new show season, which starts on Labor Day, will be even greater than before, despite the protestations of theatre owners everywhere that film stars who perform on the air keep the public from attending theatres.

Determination of the extent to which stars' appearances are competition to motion picture box offices, will be made immediately by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Will H. Hays, president. The MPPDA has such a study in the making, undertaken as a result of the many recent protests made by exhibitors.

Merlin Hall Aylesworth, dual radio and film executive, through his official position with National Broadcasting Company and Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, in an interview in Motion Picture Herald of July 18th, called for "a working arrangement between radio and the motion picture to enhance the business of both." Mr. Aylesworth called on Mr. Hays and the motion picture industry to sit "in friendly round table discussion" with radio interests to effect a tangible plan for bringing together America's two leading entertainment instruments so that they would work for each other, and not against. At the same time the radio-film executive observed that "radio's invasion of the Hollywood talent field is a natural development," and that national advertisers are insisting more and more on using motion picture stars for their commercial air programs. He inferred that an extended use of Hollywood "big name" talent might be looked for.

Mr. Aylesworth admitted this week that radio's budget for all networks for talent and programs would, as reported on Broadway, approximate $51,000,000.

And now comes word from national advertisers who are the biggest users of radio ballyhoo, that their plans are completed to tap the consumer pocketbook by appealing to the national ear with the mightiest and most expensive free show since radio began.

These national advertisers now report, according to Time Magazine, the publishers of which produce the March of Time newsreel, that this year advertisers will pay nearly $100,000,000 to the eight United States networks, embracing 561 stations, for time rental alone. This is in addition to the $51,000,000 that will be used to pay the talent scheduled to be used.

MANITOBA EXHIBITORS PROTEST AIR INVASION

Added to the many resolutions passed by exhibitor organizations in protest against the appearances of motion picture stars on radio programs, is a resolution passed by the Manitoba Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of Winnipeg, Manitoba, as follows:

"This association, representing every motion picture exhibitor in the Province of Manitoba, is regarded as the strongest in the Dominion of Canada and our members definitely object to radio appearances of motion picture artists, inasmuch as their programs are direct opposition and, in our opinion, unfair.

"We also contend that motion picture stars are not presented over the radio with necessary studio enhancement and the resultant opinion of the public toward the artist is detrimental, not only to the performer, but to the value of the performer at our box-offices."

"This opulent wedding of Big Business and Show Business will thus beget a lively brood of clowns and crooners, ingenues and instrumentalists, mimes and maestros who will serve as U. S. Industry's most spectacular sales crew," observed Time.

Big Names Signed

Principal Hollywood names set for series of appearances on the air in the new season, who will receive large slices of the talent budget, include Lanny Ross, Fred Astaire, Jack Oakie, Helen Twelvetrees, Joe E. Brown, Ginger Rogers, Brian Ahearne, Clark Gable, Joan Crawford, Franchot Tone, Myrna Loy, Jean Harlow, Marion Davies, Herbert Marshall, Gloria Swanson, Eddie Cantor, Shirley Temple, Jackie Cooper, Fred and Paula Stone, Patsy Kelly, Dolores Costello Barrymore, Hoot Gibson, Jack Holt, Elissa Landi, Anne Shirley, Lionel Barrymore, Norma Shearer and Grace Moore. These have already been signed; there will be many more, all broadcasting regularly, not to mention the scores of Hollywood names who will make "guest" appearances from time to time, for a price.

Demand for Hollywood Performers for Broadcasts Points to Extended Studio Invasion With Lure of Fabulous Salaries

Some idea of the fabulous salaries which radio and its advertising clients will pay "big name" entertainers can be gleaned from some of the weekly salaries to be paid. Some of them, obtained from a thoroughly reliable source, are: Major Bowes, $25,000 a week; Eddie Cantor, between $8,000 and $10,000; Fred Waring and his band, $12,000; Rudy Vallee, $10,000. Fred Astaire will contribute his talents to the marketing of Packard motor cars at the rate of $5,000 a week.

Box office grosses of motion pictures starring film headliners who appeared concurrently on radio programs during the run of the pictures are being gathered as the basis of the MPPDA's investigation to determine to what extent such film star appearances detract from box office receipts.

MPPDA Studying Grosses

The grosses of some 30 theatres affiliated with distributor-circuit members of the Hays organization, located in a strategic spot served by some key radio station, comprise the figures being gathered. They include the theatre grosses for motion picture performances before, during and after the various broadcasts in which film names were featured, and total about 6,000 individual gross figures. A complete analysis of the findings, it is stated, will take at least another week to complete.

The specific object of the investigation is an attempt to determine whether any definite indication may be had of the effect of radio appearances of film stars on theatre business. Producers' policies in connection with the radio appearances of their stars and others under contract may be guided for the future by the results of the study.

Mr. Aylesworth's plea with the motion picture business to work with radio would admittedly give radio a more friendly entry to the motion picture's great source of talent. In return, radio would give the motion picture a medium, on the air, for publicizing its motion pictures in a manner "far greater than any existing exploitation channel."

The hundreds of theatre owners who in recent days have been condemning film stars' air appearances disagree, however, with Mr. Aylesworth's contention that such appearances aid in selling the stars to a larger public, so that eventually their motion picture box office returns are greater.

Mr. Aylesworth said that the national advertisers and radio would turn a golden stream into the pocketbooks of Hollywood actors who are engaged for radio. This, he

HOLLYWOOD WRITES HALF

ASCAP Figures for Amusement Season 1935-36 Show Motion Pictures Greatest Single Source of New Popular Music

Hollywood today is writing the song hits for the nation Broadway's stage and it's "Tin Pan Alley," once the chief sources of popular American airs, are now contributing only negligibly to the catalogue of hit tunes.

One hundred and twelve songs are designated popular hits of the past season; the sources from which they emanated are as follows:

SOURCE	NUMBER OF HITS	PERCENTAGE
Motion Pictures	56	50
Stage	14	12
Film-and-Stage Plays	4	4
Independently Composed	38	34
TOTALS	112	100%

Determination of the songs as hits was made on Tuesday by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, on the basis of the number of times each song was played on the radio systems of America's two largest networks, National Broadcasting Company and Columbia Broadcasting System. Only numbers played 10,000 times or more on the air during the season were considered hits. They ranged from Sidmund Romberg's and Oscar Hammerstein's "When I Grow Too Old To Dream," from the motion picture, "The Night Is Young," played 29,161 times, and in first position, down to little Shirley Temple's "On the Good Ship Lollipop," from "Bright Eyes," by Sidney Clare and R. A. Whiting, with 10,012 air performances. In second position is "I'm in the Mood for Love" from "Every Night at Eight" with 28,537 broadcasts.

Further Aid from Films

Thus not only does Hollywood supply radio—its chief competitor in entertainment—with its best and greatest number of performers, but it is also furnishing the music by which that talent and also radio's own talent perform. Radio, with its millions of dollars of yearly income in time rentals to advertisers and sales of radio sets and parts to the public, thereby receives yet further support from the motion pictures of Hollywood.

ASCAP'S vigilance in keeping records complete to determine air performances of songs is by no means prompted by altruism. Rather, the records afford ASCAP the basis for determining what royalties are due it and its composer members from radio for the use of the music. ASCAP relies solely on the number of air performances to determine the success of new songs from the standpoint of popular demand which influences the bands and orchestras to repeat the songs on the air. The number of times the songs are played at public dance halls, cabarets and restaurants are presumably the same, proportionately.

Sheet Sale Aided

Not only is Hollywood's music the most popular on the air, but that same popularity is reflected in the more tangible form of sheet music sales. Five of the six leading music-sheet sellers in 1935-36 come from motion pictures, as follows:

"When I Grow Too Old to Dream," from the film, "Night Is Young," 500,000 copies sold; "In a Little Gypsy Tea Room," independently written, 311,000 copies sold; "Cheek to Cheek," from the film, "Top Hat," 250,000 copies sold; "I'm in the Mood for Love," from the film, "Every Night at

SONGS PLAYED OVER 10,000 TIMES

One hundred and twelve songs were hits in 1935-36, so adjusted on the basis of the popular demand which influenced orchestras to repeat them in radio broadcasts. Each was performed at least 10,000 times during the 1935-36 period, embracing 12 months. More than half of the songs came from Hollywood film product. The 112 hits are listed below as tabulated by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, according to the number of times performed over the NBC and CBS radio networks. All productions named as sources are motion pictures exclusively unless otherwise indicated. An asterisk denotes the source, both film and stage production; a dagger indicates stage only.

Eight," 200,000 copies sold; "What's the Reason I'm Not Pleasing You," from the film, "Times Square Lady," 160,000 copies sold; and "Lullaby of Broadway," from the film, "Gold Diggers of 1935," 125,000 copies sold. Total for the film five is 1,235,000.

Gross income to the publishers on the sheet music sales of the six best sellers alone approximates $300,000, eighty per cent of which accrued from sales of sheet music on songs written by Hollywood and incorporated in its motion pictures.

ASCAP, however, is not satisfied with the present situation, Edwin C. Mills, its general manager, complaining that radio continues to "murder music" by overplaying the tunes, thus shortening their commercial lives and accordingly lessening sheet music sales.

The top hit of this season, "When I Grow Too Old to Dream," as noted, sold only 550,000 copies, whereas, before radio, according to Mr. Mills, a song of equal popularity sold nearly 2,000,000 copies. The average song hit of pre-radio days sold 1,156,000 sheets. Now the average is only 229,000 sheets.

Says Radio "Kills" Songs

Hollywood today has on its payrolls—at admittedly more substantial salaries than were ever paid on Broadway or by Tin Pan Alley—the foremost composers of American music. To write the songs which were incorporated in ASCAP's record of best tunes for 1935-36, Hollywood engaged such notable composers of popular airs as Irving Berlin, Jerome Kern, Sidmund Romberg and Oscar Hammerstein, Jimmy McHugh and Dorothy Fields, Al Dubin, Otto Harbach, Abner Silver, Mack Gordon and Jack Yellen, Leo Robin, Joseph Meyer, Richard Rodgers and Lorenz Hart, Lewis Gensler, Cole Porter, Mack Gordon and Harry Revel, Gus Kahn, Arthur Freed, Nacio Herb Brown and Harry Warren, among others. Of the 19 hits which received in excess of 20,000 credits for the number of times played, 12 were written for and featured in motion pictures.

The airing of the 112 hit tunes designated by ASCAP took up 22 per cent of all the time devoted to music by both National Broadcasting and Columbia.

MGM Subsidiary Led

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's subsidiary, the Robbins Music Company, led the publishers with the greatest number of song successes in 1935-36, publishing 17 of the 112 numbers. Irving Berlin, Inc., and Famous Music Company, each, published 12; Harms, Inc., published 10; Crawford Music and Warner Brothers' subsidiary, M. Witmark, each published seven. T. B. Harms and Shapiro-Bernstein published five each.

Meanwhile "satisfactory progress" in connection with the work of agreeing on stipulations of fact in the Government's action for the dissolution of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, was reported this week. The work is being conducted by Richard Bird, representing the Attorney General's office, and Arthur Schwartz, of counsel for the society, at the law offices of Schwartz & Frolich in New York.

Indications are that the work will not be completed until the end of this week, or possibly next week. Through the stipulations both sides hope to be able to submit the case to Federal Judge Henry W. Goddard next month without the necessity of resuming trial or taking additional testimony. If no agreement on the stipulations is reached, however, the trial of the action probably will be resumed next winter.

2000-Foot Reel Now in Effect On 11 Releases

Although ordinances in New York and Chicago have not yet been revised to allow the use of the new 2,000-foot reels, the first productions to be released on the new standard spools, which go into industry-wide use this week, have been set as follows: Columbia, "Adventure in Manhattan"; Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, "The Devil Is a Sissy"; Paramount, "Wives Never Know"; Radio, "Big Game"; Hal Roach, "Our Relations"; Selznick-International, "Garden of Allah"; Twentieth Century-Fox, "Thank You, Jeeves"; United Artists, "Dodsworth"; Universal, "My Man Godfrey"; Warners, "Bengal Tiger" and "Trailing West." All feature releases of all major companies reaching theatres on and after September 1 were to be released on the new reel.

The changeover will not be instantaneous, therefore, and will not be general for several weeks. This is due primarily to the fact that some pictures designated by major companies as their first September releases to use the 2,000-foot reel are not scheduled for national release until late in the month.

The International Alliance of Theatrical and Stage Employes operators in Chicago refused, on Monday, to handle longer reels and may themselves cut the reels before putting them through the projectors. The Alliance is opposing the changeover, especially in Boston and Cleveland.

In an effort to straighten out difficulties that threaten to impede the use of the longer reel in New York, A. L. Dickinson and J. S. McLeod, of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., are conferring with Commissioner of Licenses Paul Moss on the new standard.

Loeb Suit Against Columbia Is Dismissed

A judgment dismissing the $200,000 stockholders' action brought by John L. Loeb against Columbia, was filed this week in the New York supreme court. Mr. Loeb charged in the complaint that he was induced to purchase warrants on April 17, 1933, to buy voting trust certificates for shares of Columbia common stock. These warrants, he said, were rendered valueless by the acts of Harry Cohn, Jack Cohn and Joe Brandt.

Mr. Loeb asserts that these three, in negotiating an agreement with bankers in March, 1929, did not faithfully serve Columbia, but favored their own individual interests in the deal.

An affidavit by Jack Cohn denied the charges set forth in the complaint, and further stated that because Mr. Loeb misjudged the market he attempted to fix the blame on the three individuals he named as defendants. He charged the action was based on a dubious theory and he was upheld by Justice Richard P. Lydon in his contention.

FRENCH INDUSTRY EMBATTLED IN FACE OF NATIONALIZATION

Efforts to Consolidate Two Leading Organizations in Response to Governmental Threat Impeded by Rivalry

Daily and Trade Press Loud in Protest at Delay; Old Scores in Way; Charge of Selfish Interests Hurled

by PIERRE AUTRE
in Paris

Again the threat of nationalization menaces the motion picture industry in France and again, or still, progress toward working out of a plan for presenting unified resistance is impeded by factional differences.

Bluntly, the industry has been warned that unless it reorganizes itself in a manner satisfactory to the government it will be taken over and placed directly under governmental control. This is the gist of a report presented by M. De Carmoy to the National Economic Council and adopted by that body.

There are at present two rival trade organizations. One of these is the Chambre Syndicale, made up of French producers and distributors, with which are allied a small number of exhibitors, and the so-called "heavy sections," comprising manufacturers, printers and developers. The other is the Comite Du Film, presided over by Georges Loureau, head of the French branch of Tobis, which includes the main body of French and foreign distributors, the majority of the exhibitors and a few French producers.

Consolidation Is Sought

The aim of M. Loreau would be to consolidate these two organizations in a single federation which would be empowered to represent the industry before the government. Producers and exhibitors in both organizations are largely favorable to this action. Responsibility for lack of progress toward this end is credited generally to distributors.

In the plan of consolidation under consideration there would be four trade organizations. One would include all producers, another all distributors, a third the exhibitors and a fourth the technical industry. In such an organization it would be impracticable to make a discrimination between French and foreign interests.

It has been suggested, therefore, that a special section would be formed, as a subsidiary of the federation, which would have in direct charge the French interests and, if necessary, the protection of the French film. This suggestion has been permitted to fall by the wayside repeatedly, as discussion of it leads inevitably to differences of opinion as to the deserts of the French and foreign, particularly American, interests.

Those not involved with a partisan interest in one of the disputed phases of the contemplated federation point out that, if the government takes over control of the industry, none of these fine gradations will be recognized by the men placed in charge. It is the general belief that, unless the government presently finds the industry organized in a manner satisfactory to its requirements, an inter-ministerial decree will be issued to create a Central Committee of the Cinema, members of which would have all powers that might be delegated to the proposed federation and others that might not. Many of these members might be persons not familiar with the industry and many unreasonable and unnecessary hardships would result.

NO NEW ECSTASY!

Addressing Motion Picture Herald by cable from London, David Bader, signing as "sole manager" of Gustave de Machaty, director, says:

> I greatly admire your editorial on "True Pages of Life," and as manager for M. Machaty, can wholeheartedly assure you that the brilliant Czechoslovakian has not the slightest intention of remaking "Extase," the picture which brought him fame, whether starring Miss Astor or any other Hollywood star.

Plans Are Known

Preliminary plans for government control by means of such a committee include the daily collection, in the theatres, of percentage payments due to distributors. These would be picked up by appointed collectors, as taxes are now, and the apportionment of payments would be arbitrary and in all probability often unfair.

How such an eventuality would affect the American interests has been imparted in some measure in previous articles. The plan of the Trade Unions, foreseeing a monopoly of the distribution of foreign films in France, contemplate a drastic limitation of dubbed pictures. The De Carmoy report proposes a tax of 25,000 francs on each dubbed picture.

One of the new measures considered by the government with a view to protecting French production would limit exhibitors to the use of a single feature for each performance. At the present time nearly all French cinemas, with the exception of the first runs, are showing two features on each program, usually a French picture and a dubbed import, most often American.

It is argued in the De Carmoy report that these dubbed pictures are booked very cheaply and that they serve to stop the showing of French pictures, which, under the proposed ruling, could be shown in a larger number of theatres. This assertion is much elaborated in the report.

Assertion Is Refuted

On the other side of the case, American distributors argue that the assertion is based on a false premise. They claim that proponents of this view base their conclusion on the fact that receipts of French cinemas do not exceed 850,000,000,000 francs, by which they purport to show that French pictures do not recover their cost because 45 per cent of this revenue goes to payment for foreign pictures.

American distributors point out that this percentage does not reflect a quantity but rather a quality basis of division. It follows, then, in their belief, that if French pictures were made better, and cleaner, they would earn, naturally, a greater share of the income from admission sales. And, pursuing this line of logic, they assert that at the present time only 10 per cent of the French population attends the cinema, whereas the percentage would be much greater if French films were better, and cleaner, and out of this increased revenue would come the cost of French production plus a profit.

Editorials in the daily and also in the trade journals have been outspoken in censure of the motion picture industry for its dilatory progress in working out the reorganization which the government demands as proof of its ability to conduct its own affairs without official supervision. Writing in Le Journal, the eminent cinema journalist, M. Jean Chataigner, president of the French Cinema Press Association, said:

"I do not think, and my opinion never has changed on this subject, that a quota would give useful improvement to French production. At the present time there is practically no quota, which does not stop French producers from making a goodly number of French films, of which those of the necessary quality secure easy bookings.

Invites Foreign Product

"If we suppose that foreign films invade the French market, is there not the public, and do you not think the public has the power to restrict those foreign pictures if exhibitors make up their programs exclusively with them?

"Bad foreign films have never been successful in France. Those which have stayed for long weeks in the first-run theatres and which have been liked in the district cinemas were really outstanding pictures.

"Let the foreign pictures come into France without restriction."

It has been charged that the leaders of the Chambre Syndicale are trying to delay the consolidation so that the government will have to create a Central Cinema Committee to which it could call whatever members it chose and that many of these would be the present leaders of the Chambre. On the other hand, the house organ of the Chambre has charged M. Raymond Lussiez, president of the exhibitor association, with trying to eliminate Chambre leaders in the consolidation.

FURTHER TROUBLE THREATENS IN DISPUTE OVER TRADE PRACTICES

Independent Theatre Operators Begin or Plan Action in Various Areas Against Methods Cited as Evidence of Monopoly

Signs are pointing to new and more litigation ahead as a result of the continued dissatisfaction of independent theatre owners with so-called aggressive tactics of the distributors. Resentful at the apparent procrastination of the large companies to enact the fair trade practice program advanced by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, the independents are again talking of federal court action to win protection against alleged monopolistic tendencies, and in one territory, New Orleans, suit has been filed in what appears may be the development of a new series of legal wars.

The Department of Justice is definitely known to be quietly preparing for an expression of further interest in the situation.

The New Orleans suit was filed by George Fuller of Florida, who charges the distributors and some affiliated circuits with conspiring against him in the matter of film service.

In Kansas City, independent owners are giving serious consideration to the re-filing of the Rolsky suit against Fox Midwest and the major companies, which a federal court there found in favor of the distributors.

Protest Date Extensions

New York's independents are vigorously protesting the distributor and first-run circuit practice of extending dates of original bookings at the circuit prior runs, a practice which the distributors are defending on grounds of increased negative costs.

In Michigan, independent exhibitors have forwarded a report on alleged monopolistic practices to the Department of Justice at Washington. Although the Department of Justice continues to maintain strict silence on possible action in motion pictures, it is learned that agents high in the confidence of the department have been considerably active of late in motion picture matters, presumably relating to the relations between distributors and the independent owners.

The suit of Mr. Fuller, Florida theatre operator, was filed August 28th in federal district court at New Orleans, asking nominal damages of $20,000 on the allegation that seven motion picture distributing companies had entered into a conspiracy not to furnish the plaintiff with film. His petition states that unless the court grants an injunction directing the companies to cease their alleged conspiracy that he will be forced out of business. He asks also for a writ of mandamus to force Warner Brothers to deliver 39 films he contracted for but which they allegedly failed to deliver.

The distributing companies named in the suit as defendants are Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation, Universal Film Distributors, Inc., United Artists Corporation, RKO Distributing Corporation, 20th Century-Fox Distributing Corporation, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation and Vitagraph, Inc. Two individuals, Harold Wilkes and Gaston Dureau, Jr., officers of the Saenger Theatres Corporation, are also named defendants in the suit.

Mr. Fuller, a former resident of Chicago, where he published a number of farm journals, has lived for the past ten years in Fairhope, Ala. His petition alleges that the film distributors refuse to sell him film for his shows at Warrington, Fla., Pensacola Beach, Fla., and Pensacola, Fla. He charges that the Saenger Theatres Corporation had closed both of their theatres in Pensacola as a protest against the theatre admission tax imposed recently by the Pensacola City Council, while he kept his Pensacola theatres open. J. Studebaker Lucas is attorney for Mr. Fuller in the suit.

Weigh Kansas City Appeal

In Kansas City, the independent theatre owners met this week to decide whether or not to appeal the case of E. Rolsky vs. Fox Midwest and major distributors, in which Judge Merrill E. Otis of the federal district court there recently found for the defendants. While no decision was reached, it is indicated that the appeal will be made. Another meeting has been scheduled to settle the matter finally. The suit charged unfair clearance.

Members of the Independent Theatre Owners Association of New York, meeting last week at the Hotel Lincoln, protested the alleged practice of prior runs of extending dates on pictures beyond original bookings.

While no definite action was taken, the exhibitors discussed the possibility of insisting a clause be inserted in all contracts giving the subsequents the privilege of canceling pictures held over in this manner.

The New York sales managers are defending the practice by insisting that increased negative costs on outstanding productions are forcing the extension of booking dates beyond the original bookings at New York prior runs.

In Detroit, a report on alleged monopoly in film bookings by Cooperative Theatres of Michigan, is understood to have been sent to the Attorney-General in Washington.

Paramount May Dismiss 100 in Economy Move

A total of more than 100 Paramount employes may be dropped as a result of current efforts to eliminate overlapping positions and work duplication in many branches of the company's operations. The process was begun in the home office several weeks ago with the personnel of various departments being reduced wherever possible. It has been carried since to the newsreel, laboratory, electric rate department, mail rooms and several of the company's exchanges.

Jersey Allied Sees Sales Tax Battle

Plans by Governor Hoffman to revive a move for a sales tax in New Jersey which would include theatres, will be one of the principal topics of discussion at the Allied of New Jersey convention at the Traymore Hotel in Atlantic City next week. Theatre owners in the state are preparing to fight any new moves for a sales tax which would embrace theatres.

Allied of New Jersey was recently successful in helping to ward off a sales tax which originally figured at 10 per cent on all tickets marked over 25 cents and then reduced to four per cent on all admissions over 10 cents.

Danville, Va., Kansas City, Spokane, Wash., and Dade City and Tampa, both in Florida, figured in other legislative affairs affecting theatres this week.

In Spokane, exhibitors are carrying their admission tax fight to the women of the State of Washington. The proposal is one of the initiative measures to go on the ballot at the November election. Trailers ask this question:

"Are you willing to pay an additional one-cent tax for each 20 cents or fraction thereof for admission to any motion picture theatre, or other place of amusement? This would be but one phase of another burdensome tax imposed on residents of the State. You are urged by the amusements managers of the State of Washington to vote 'No' on Initiative 115."

In Kansas City, the one per cent sales tax in Missouri, which became effective a year ago, has produced around $11,150,000, according to Forrest Smith, state auditor. This is close to the million-a-month average expected from the tax, and sufficient to take care of appropriations made upon it by the legislature which passed it. The money has gone into unemployment relief, old age pensions, care of mental patients and public schools.

In Dade City, Fla., a new ordinance was passed by the city council placing a license fee of $10 per day on sound trucks broadcasting music on the city streets. A clause, however, provides that sound wagons for religious and political purposes are exempt from the license fee.

Further south, at Tampa, public resentment against proposals for nuisance taxes, including a suggestion for a 10 per cent levy on theatre tickets, has resulted in a petition for a "charter election" to substitute a city manager for the present commission. As a result tax talk has subsided.

A fine of $25 was imposed this week on Fleet Robinson, manager of the Virginia theatre at Danville, Va., in Magistrate C. K. Cajter's court, upon conviction of operating the theatre on Sunday

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

One of the ladies from the nearby RCA Building departed for England on the Queen Mary, and thereby comes the report that the morale of the ship's staff still retains the pristine pitch of its first crossing.

Friends deluged her with flowers—she said the display gave her a pretty good idea of what her funeral would be like—and she had the bulk of them whipped off to the ship's refrigerator for future evenings on board.

Came the night, when going over the floral stock on hand, already four days old, she decided on white peonies for her dinner gown. She pinned them on, a great dramatic cluster of them, and swept to the dining salon feeling quite impressed. Later, when a distinguished and elderly, be-monocled Britisher asked her to dance, she felt the honor no more than due her.

During the dance, however, she had a premonition that all was not well. Few couples were on the floor and entirely too many eyes had somehow become focussed upon her and her partner.

She pooh-poohed the fact at first, but finally her womanly intuition came to the fore and she turned to look around. White peony petals lay behind her. With every step she took, a fresh crop floated to the floor. In her stately wake, a page, aloof and smartly attired, followed. With dignity, aplomb, and patient British air, he was carefully sweeping up the petals, as she shook them off, into a long-handled copper dustpan.

White-winging de luxe, first class.

A closer tieup between the church and the show business is all very well, but it can be carried too far, believes Harry Hirsch, exhibitor and showman who is opening the Express burlesque theatre in Kansas City, Mo., in a few weeks.

Mr. Hirsch not long ago opened a theatre in Duluth, Minn. At the same time one of the city's best churches was acquiring a new minister, and to welcome the two, the local newspaper printed their pictures. But the nightmare of a composing-room foreman's life became a reality when the paper appeared, showing "The Reverend So-and-So, New Pastor of the Blank Church" in the checkered suit, bright tie, snappy straw hat and gleaming diamond jewelry of Mr. Hirsch, while the photograph above the caption, "Bringing Burlesque to the Lyric" showed a serious man in clerical garb.

All members of theatricals, and others who have variously down through the years speculated as to the origin of the old term, "turkey shows," may now rest on the explanation of Gus Hill, pioneer showman and vaudeville producer:

"When I was a boy, some 60 years ago," writes Mr. Hill, "we used to gather talent to play holiday dates. There were few idle actors in those days, so amateurs were added.

"On those holidays everybody had turkey—even the saloons held turkey raffles, and as these were the only dates most of the amateur actors worked, they were known as turkey actors and soon the shows in which they appeared were called 'turkey shows.'"

JESSE JAMES (?) DISCOVERED!

ALFRED N. SACK, Texas motion picture exchange operator, operating Sack Amusement Enterprises, is breathlessly explaining, and so writes to Motion Picture Herald, that he has found an old gent down in his native Texas who, Sack swears, is actually Jesse James, notorious Missouri outlaw, and who, although generally believed to be dead these 51 years, has been in hiding all the while.

Mr. Sack spent eight hours with the 88-year-old veteran, who still wears a six-shooter at his side, and says that he is convinced that the grizzly gent's claims are genuine. Historians record that Jesse James was shot down in cold blood by his cousin, Bob Ford, on April 3, 1882, while he was supposed to have been dusting his mother's portait. But the old fellow now says that it's all a lie, explaining the myth in this fashion:

Jesse and Frank James, brothers, and their cousins, Bob Ford and the Younger boys, were members of the Quantrell gang. The James boys were quarter-breed Comanche Indians. Quantrell was a half-breed Comanche. The gang robbed banks, held up trains and stage coaches, engaged in guerilla warfare and otherwise terrorized the entire midwest. They were admittedly bad men and there was a fancy price on each.

Charley Bigelow, leader of a rival bandit gang, had committed many crimes on his own and had left evidence to indicate that it was the work of the James boys. This naturally infuriated the James gang, who then plotted the death of Bigelow as their revenge and also because they saw in it an opportunity for Jesse to escape the law and start anew.

Bigelow was decoyed into the James home by Bob Ford on the pretext of planning another bank robbery. Bigelow had never seen the James home and did not know that Ford was a member of the James clan. At the first opportunity Bob Ford shot Bigelow in the back, killing him on the spot. Jesse James was hiding in the next room, and, as prearranged, immediately changed clothes and pistols with the dead man and made his getaway.

Jesse appeared the next day at his own funeral in Kearney, Mo., disguised as a visiting minister. He heard his own eulogy—it was full of fine tributes to the many decent things he had done. He actually acted as the sixth pallbearer at his own funeral, claiming he even assisted in lowering the coffin supposedly containing his own body into the eight-foot grave just outside his own mother's window. Then James rode off into the night.

Under the assumed name of Jim Williams, Jesse remained in hiding for 51 years. In his new disguise, he roamed the entire United States, making his living as a cowhand and horse trader. Having been a singing teacher in his early respectable days, he managed to find employment in New York as an actor and a song-and-dance man. He later became a theatrical producer, and for a period enjoyed the thrills of the successful and sought-after Broadway playboy. Now—?

Terry Ramsaye has been talking a lot of late about the tall grass that towers into the skies from the Gardens of the Nations on the lower roof of the RCA Building, which stands under his window in Rockefeller Center. Not all of the vegetation in the Gardens, however, is as much on the up and up. The squash is in fine fettle, true. And the peanut vines are expected to keep the whole army of Music Hall chorus girls in salted nuts through the winter. But the corn is a problem child. "Scarey-Harry," the scaresparrow, is not only keeping the birds off the corn, but he keeps the sun off, too, and a crisis impends. Mr. Rockefeller is worried.

NEWSREEL MAN HELD IN SPAIN; AIDS EXECUTED

Paramount News Cameraman Jailed Following Slaying of Three Assistants by Rebel Captors; Was Seeking Shots

American newsreels have become involved yet more deeply in the bloody Spanish Civil War, with the capture by rebels of John Dored, Paramount News cameraman, and the execution of his three assistants. The incident occurred near Naval Moral in Spain, and although Mr. Dored himself escaped execution on the spot, the outcome of his seizure by the rebel forces remained in doubt until it was finally established that he had been lodged in jail at Naval Moral.

The State Department at Washington, Paramount Pictures Corporation and the American newsreels were exerting strong influences on the Spaniards to free Mr. Dored from the jeopardy of the mass executions of all prisoners who are taken by both sides in the revolt.

Private advices received by Paramount in New York on Tuesday, via Madrid, Marseilles and London, indicated that the rebels were considering releasing Mr. Dored at Barcelona, but no verification could be obtained by the corporation, either from Washington officials or American representatives in Spain.

The State Department was communicating its protest to both sides against the air bombing of the U. S. Destroyer Kane in Spanish waters last Sunday when it was asked to rescue Cameraman Dored, who had been captured in line of duty for Paramount News. His safety was still uncertain as news flashes continued to describe the mass executions by both sides of prisoners, sympathizers and hostages. He remained lodged in jail even as the loyal forces placed some of their prisoners, one of them a Spanish Catholic bishop, in the public square at Irun so that they might be targets for the rebels who were bombing the town.

Mr. Dored's dramatic capture was reported as the August 29th issue of Motion Picture Herald appeared, carrying a signed article cabled by him from Madrid, via Paramount News in New York, in which he described, directly from the front lines, how American newsreel cameramen and their assistants are receiving first-class training as newsreel war correspondents.

Mr. Dored likewise had stated that "in some respects, the trouble in Spain is very similar to the Abyssinian mess; from the cameraman's point of view, of course. The water is brackish and most of the food is poor. The Spaniards fight all over the place. One can never tell where they are likely to break out next. The Ethiopians and their ambuscades were as difficult to keep up with."

Mr. Dored reported in his article that the censorship process for the newsreels today in Spain is hardly a problem—"it's a catastrophe." He added, "There are the rebels, the leftists, the syndicalists, the anarchists and any number of smaller groups which have their various slants on life and this affair. What satisfies one faction is bound to displease another, so that when a cameraman attempts to find an orderly channel in which to export his film out of the country—well, it doesn't get out!"

The Paramount cameraman's seizure came, not while he was trying to smuggle film out of Spain for the screens of American exhibitors, but while he was on the march for material.

Aids Slain Pronto

Mr. Dored and his three Loyalist bodyguards had set out from Madrid seeking action pictures along the battlefront. They encountered a rebel outpost which surrounded them and executed the Loyalists on the spot, but elected to hold Mr. Dored for more extended investigation.

Mr. Dored flew into Spain from his headquarters in Vienna right after the outbreak of the Spanish revolt. He first went to Barcelona, and then to Madrid, where he made contact with the government Loyalists for covering their activities, while other Paramount staff men accompanied the rebels.

Mr. Dored's Spanish assignment was his first after a month's vacation which followed his return from Ethiopia, where he spent nearly a year covering the Italian East African campaign. His arrest by the Spanish Rebel leader, General Franco, is not the first time Dored has become involved in diplomatic incidents resulting from his work as a newsreel cameraman. A white Russian who formerly was attached to Tzar Nicholas' personal staff, Mr. Dored was seized by the Soviets ten years ago when he returned to Russia on assignment. At that time he was sentenced to death and was awaiting execution when the British embassy succeeded in bringing about his release on his promise to leave the country never to return.

Mr. Dored was awarded the National Headliner's Club medal in America this year for the most outstanding work of a foreign newsreel correspondent.

BULLETIN

John Dored, Paramount News cameraman, captured in Spain by rebels one week ago, and held prisoner while his three assistants were executed, is safe and is being escorted to Gibraltar, according to unofficial word received Wednesday by Paramount News in New York. The information, unconfirmed by the State Department at Washington, was telephoned from Paramount's London bureau. It had been received there by telephone from Bordeaux, from the pilot of one of the Paramount airplanes flying film out of Spain.

Nazi Censors Block Swiss Film Moves

Little progress is being made toward the establishment of a domestic motion picture industry in Switzerland because censorship in Germany is blocking accurate estimating of possible exportations to Germany, a report from the American consulate general in Zurich said this week.

One of the main arguments made in support of a domestic film industry is that films in the German language would have a large export market in Germany, Austria and other Teutonic countries. It is pointed out that owing to the rigorous system of censorship in Germany, export possibilities to that country cannot be gauged with any degree of accuracy. The exclusion of a Swiss film from the German market might mean its financial failure even though it were well received in other German-speaking countries, distributors felt.

Justice Department Seeks More Funds

Increased funds with which to expand its investigation activities will be asked of Congress by the Department of Justice in Washington next winter, it was learned this week as officials of the department initialed the development of their estimates for the new fiscal year.

A small increase for this purpose was given the department in its appropriations bill for the current year and became available July 1. The money is being used for the employment of additional staff men, but plans of Assistant Attorney General John Dickinson call for much greater expansion of the service.

At the department it was explained that no new anti-trust drive is contemplated, and that, with the present limited force, it is impossible to make complete investigation of all complaints. It is Mr. Dickinson's idea that every complaint received should be proved or disapproved.

Associate Producers To Get Film Credits

Abolishing a long established screen custom which condemns assistants to labor anonymously, Samuel Goldwyn has announced that he will give screen credits to Merritt Hulburd and George Haight, his two production aides, in all pictures on which they work in the future. In accordance with the policy Mr. Hulburd, one time associate editor of the Saturday Evening Post, and more recently story editor for Paramount, will be billed as "associate producer" on "Dodsworth." Mr. Haight, former Broadway producer-playwright, will get similar billing on the Merle Oberon picture, "Love Under Fire."

Smith Considering Plans for Theatres

A. W. Smith, Jr., who recently resigned as eastern and Canadian sales manager for Warner Brothers, is considering several theatre deals, one of which he expects to close within the next few weeks, he declared this week. He plans to take over a small circuit and develop it.

The way exhibitors all over the country are handling the launching of Simone Simon is an indication of what can be done if the exhibitor would only enthuse himself up to the point that new draws must be created, but won't be as long as they stick in a demand for players who draw top money at the studio and draw nothing at the box office, making it impossible for producers to give the unknown a break.

Circuit Celebrates 40 Years in Exhibition

Harris Amusement Co. Marks Its Beginning in 1896

The Harris Amusement Company, one of Pennsylvania's larger circuits, this month marks the 40th year since the late Senator John P. Harris, founder of the company, opened a "theatorium" in connection with the Harris Musee in McKeesport, Pa. The theatre, one of the first in the United States, marked the beginning of a long career in the motion picture industry during which the company under Senator Harris pioneered in the field with the opening of the first house devoted entirely to motion pictures, built up a strong circuit of theatres throughout the state, sold out all but a few holdings to the large interests in 1930, and then regained a place among leading exhibitors by building up the present business.

The anniversary was inaugurated this week with an exposition and entertainment at the Duquesne Garden, Pittsburgh. Early equipment, a replica of the first nickelodeon, and demonstrations of modern scientific achievements in the motion picture and theatre fields were featured at the exposition which opened the celebration, and during the month each theatre in the circuit will stage special programs. The Harris family has remained in control of the company, and Senator Frank J. Harris is the present head.

The founder had been identified with the amusement business for many years but it was not until 1896 that he finally obtained a theatre of his own. Early in that year he considered opening a motion picture and vaudeville theatre in connection with a Curio Hall, and the early files of the Kinetoscope Company contain a letter written by him on February 27, 1896, inquiring about a screen machine.

In September of that year the Harris Musee theatre opened at Locust and Jerome Streets in McKeesport, a site now occupied by the Dander Hotel. On one side of the 80-foot structure, Senator Harris installed the Curio Hall, in which he exhibited freaks of nature, Belgian glass blowers and other novelties. On the other side was the theatre, on the stage of which vaudeville acts and motion pictures were shown. Every Friday night was devoted to amateur productions.

The founder and his father also operated the World's Museum on Pittsburgh's north side, the Harris Museum on Fifth avenue, and other enterprises following the success of the parent show place in McKeesport. In 1905, Senator Harris opened the theatre which started the nickelodeon wave in a vacant store on the present site of Frank & Seder's department store in Pittsburgh.

The First Nickelodeon

Eugene Connolly, vice-president of the Harris Amusement Company, describes the historic theatre as "a remodeled storeroom, the remodeling being chiefly in the installation of a white sheet, some chairs taken from the old Grand Opera House to give a total seating capacity of 96, a crude, squeaky phonograph, a lot of stucco, some garishly painted burlap, and a myriad of incandescent lamps." The initial offering was a double feature program consisting in "Poor, But Honest" and "Baffled Burglar." The complete running time was 20 minutes.

The house opened the day before Thanksgiving, 1905, and the first day's receipts were $22.50. The box office gross the next day was $76, and after two weeks the theatre went on a daily schedule of showings from 8 A.M. to midnight, realizing a reputed profit of $1,000 a week. A bronze plaque commemorating the opening of the theatre has been placed on the site by the Pennsylvania Historical Society.

The success of the project resulted in the opening of similar "store shows" and nickelodeons throughout the country.

On April 19, 1930, the Harris Amusement Company disposed of most of their interests to Warner Brothers, retaining only a few theatres. But in 1933, members of the family started to build up a new circuit.

Staff Has Many Veterans

Four members of the family have guided the destinies of the company during its long career. Beside the founder, the late Senator John P. Harris, who was the first president, these were the late Dennis A. Harris; John H. Harris, son of the founder, and Senator Frank J. Harris, now the president.

Numerous veterans are included among the present employes of the company. Jerry Alvin, stage manager of the Alvin theatre, has been in the service for almost 45 years, having been associated with the late John Harris, Sr., father of the late Senator John P. Harris, in operating amusement parks prior to the opening of the first museum. George S. Harrison, treasurer of the company, joined the staff as a bookkeeper about 40 years ago. John O. Hooley, now manager of the Liberty in East Liberty, Pa., is completing his 25th year with the company.

Eugene Connolly, vice-president, has served the company in the capacities of publicity director, general manager, treasurer and president for more than 35 years. James G. Balmer, district manager in charge of all theatre operations, got his start in showbusiness with Harry Davis, the Harris partner, 32 years ago. Harry Seegal, recently named manager of the Strand in Youngstown, Ohio, started with the organization as an usher at the old Harris theatre in Pittsburgh

W. L. Peacock, manager of the St. Mary's, has been with the company for 12 years, and John Morin, manager of the Palace, Pittsburgh, also boasts of 12 years of service. Some of the original crew of the first nickelodeon, are still employed in Pittsburgh theatres. They include Francis Levenson Carey, Roger McKelvey, Abe Davis and William McIver.

Paramount Raises 1936-37 Schedule To 75 Pictures

The new management at Paramount under Barney Balaban, president, and Adolph Zukor, in charge of production, is extending its 1936-37 schedule to include 75 features. As the producer of the largest schedule of product in the industry, the company now announces that this season it is adopting the unit system of production and is turning to the outdoors for many of its leading pictures.

To bring about the increase, it has added to the regular list a number of producers to make pictures independently for Paramount release. Included in this group are Frank Lloyd, Cecil B. DeMille, B. P. Schulberg, Emanuel Cohen, Ernst Lubitsch, King Vidor, Richard A. Rowland, Leo McCarey and Wesley Ruggles.

Major films from these will be released along with the output from Paramount's regular producers, among whom are Benjamin Glazer, A. M. Botsford, Lewis E. Gensler, Arthur E. Hornblow, Jr., Henry Henigson, Harold Hurley, E. Lloyd Sheldon and Harlan Thompson.

Opening the season will be the Gary Cooper-Madeleine Carroll picture, "The General Died at Dawn," which Lewis Milestone directed from the screen play of Clifford Odets. Following this will be the first of the outdoor pictures, King Vidor's "The Texas Rangers," with Fred MacMurray, Jack Oakie, Jean Parker, Lloyd Nolan and others.

In addition to this list of producers, Paramount now has under contract 78 players, 14 directors and 60 writers, all of whom are currently assigned to a full year of work.

Adolph Zukor, chairman of the board of Paramount, who now is in active charge of the Hollywood studio, is due to arrive in New York on private business. He will return to Hollywood within 10 days. Mr. Zukor's trip is required to settle several private affairs before returning to the coast to establish himself in Hollywood for an extended stay.

Henry Herzbrun, general manager of Paramount production, arrived in New York last Friday morning, for a series of conferences with President Barney Balaban and other home office executives.

Mel Shauer, associate producer for Paramount, temporarily will double his duties to take charge of the reorganization of personnel of the studio talent department, according to a statement which pointed out that "stress will be laid on finding, training and development of new talent and the upbuilding of boxoffice value of present contract players." Fred Schuessler will remain as casting director of the studio.

Mr. Shauer, who was formerly in charge of talent before being appointed a production associate, will continue his preparations to film two pictures now in his charge, "This Way Please" and "Every Day's a Holiday."

WASHINGTON ELITE GOES TO SEE ANDY JACKSON'S "GORGEOUS HUSSY"

Premiere of MGM's Recreation of the Career of Peggy O'Neal a Gala Show Inside and Outside Theatre

by FRANCIS L. BURT
Washington Correspondent

Diplomats, statesmen, society leaders, newspapermen and thousands of the uninvited turned out en masse in Washington on August 27th to insure the gorgeousness of the world premiere and international press review of the MGM production of "The Gorgeous Hussy."

Literally stopping traffic on F street in front of Loew's Palace theatre, the uninvited resisted the earnest efforts of a detail of police to keep the way clear for the invited, who consisted of the cream of such society as had been able to withstand the heat of the National Capital.

All the appurtenances of a premiere were furnished—spotlights, still and sound cameras, flowers, and even a radio broadcast—to insure the success of the event, the success of which had already been insured when the White House Correspondents' Association, consisting of the newspapermen who "cover" the White House, accepted sponsorship of the affair.

Not since the formal opening of the Fox Theatre (now Loew's Capitol) nearly a decade ago, by the National Press Club, has Washington been treated to a theatrical event of such magnitude as was arranged for the glamorous story of Peggy O'Neal, laid in the Washington of a century ago, vestiges of which still remain.

Curious Hamper the Elect

Lured by the certainty that, even though President Roosevelt and many high Administration officials were absent from the city, there would yet be a plethora of celebrities to be seen, a crowd started gathering in front of the theatre long before the first arrivals could be expected, and by the time the picture was started on its first showing, the street was crowded from curb to curb, practically tying up all traffic.

So dense was the mass at the main entrance of the theatre that many of the invited guests were unable to make the "parade ground" before the cameras, and they were admitted by the side entrances.

Beneath the marquee, which was draped with the flags of all nations in honor of foreign diplomats who had been invited to attend, Maybelle Jennings and Warren Sweeney of Station WJSV, gave a half-hour broadcast of the affair, with Miss Jennings dragging to the microphone everybody of importance that she could reach. Unfortunately, most of the guests were mike-shy, and aside from Senator Robert Reynolds, of North Carolina, who fears nothing since he was robbed by Mexican bandits a fortnight ago on the newly-dedicated highway to Mexico City, most of the "orators" were newspapermen and displayed the well-known newspaperman's aversion to limelight and public speaking.

Speakers Mostly Writers

Nevertheless, Miss Jennings, herself a former newspaperwoman, induced a number of well-known writers to say a few words, including "Bob" Considine, Hollywood scenario writer and now sports writer on the Washington Herald; Miss Betty Hines, drama critic on the same paper; Nelson Bell, critic on the Washington Post; George Durno of the White House staff of International News Service; Shirley Povich, sports writer on the Washington Star; Robert Phillips of the same paper, and J. Fred Essary of the Baltimore Sun.

Others making brief appearances at the microphone included Walter Trohan of the Chicago Tribune News Service and president of the White House Correspondents' Association; Percy Crosby, creator of the "Skippy" cartoon strip; and "Bob" Hall, vaudeville entertainer, who gave his impressions of the gathering in rhyme.

Those Who Were Invited

Among the invited guests were Mrs. Virginia Woodhall, grandniece of Andrew Jackson, whose administration as President was swayed repeatedly by the then celebrated Peggy O'Neal; and another niece, Miss Elizabeth Jackson, and also other members of the family, together with descendants of Senator John Randolph, a leading figure in Jackson's administration.

Clarence Brown, who directed the picture, and Joseph Mankiewicz, producer, were on hand, having flown to Washington from Hollywood. Also in attendance were Nicholas M. Schenck, Don McElwaine, Howard Dietz, Howard Strickling, Oscar Doob, Clarence Brown, Joseph Manciewicz, Walter Winchell and Bernard Sobol.

Practically every newspaper syndicate and magazine represented in Washington had its correspondents among the guests. Others who attended were: Ambassador Troyanowsky of Russia, George Henry Payne of the Federal Communications Commission, Mrs. John J. Payette, Guy Wonders and Mrs. Wonders, Charles West, under-secretary of the Interior; Julian Brylawski and Mrs. Brylawski; Nate Golden and Mrs. Golden of the Motion Picture Bureau of the Department of Commerce; Harry H. Woodring, acting Secretary of War; H. C. Mortee and John Martin, State Department; J. B. Chevalier, charge d'affairs of Panama; Admiral and Mrs. William Standley, the former acting Secretary of the Navy; Edwin A. Halsey, secretary of the Senate; and Dr. Elwood W. Seal, corporation counsel.

Others present were the Spanish Ambassador and Senora de Calderon; the Cuban Ambassador, Dr. Enrique Patterson; Eugene Vidal of the Bureau of Air Commerce; Ralp William Close, minister of the Union of South Africa; the Mr. Dimitriu, assistant financial counselor of the Rumanian legation, and Mrs. Dimitriu.

Laid in Washington, with one of the Democratic party's famous leaders and one of the most famous women who ever graced the national capital (of whom old-timers who heard tales from their fathers still talk) as leading characters, "The Gorgeous Hussy" naturally rated enthusiastic reviews in the local papers, but those who saw the show agreed that the reviews were not unduly generous or their authors swayed by their own recollections of that "old" Washington which was not wiped out until after the World War.

The house where Peggy O'Neal lived still stands; her grave in an old Georgetown cemetery may still be seen. The White House room where Andrew Jackson's cabinet met still exists; the Capitol is the same Capitol, but with a dome. Where the Senate then met, the Supreme Court sat for many years, and the room has been set aside to show visitors. Naturally the picture had much appeal for those who knew the Washington that was.

The play itself of course showed a Peggy who was somewhat more circumspect than the tales still traveling around the National Capital and the more frank histories of her period portray her. But she was enough of the Peggy as Washington knew her to receive the plaudits of the audience as she was depicted by Joan Crawford.

Lionel Barrymore's Andrew Jackson, Melvyn Douglas' Senator Randolph, Franchot Tone and James Stewart all came in for the plaudits of an audience far more critical than will be found in the average theatre.

As a picture, "The Gorgeous Hussy" is gorgeous; as a show, its premiere, backed up by intensive publicity work which made the editor of practically every paper in the country aware of it, was a knockout. Washington, where you fall over diplomats at every event and brush against government officials in every night club, is too blasé to take kindly to "hooraw," but it went for "the hussy" in a big way.

"THE GAY DESPERADO" IS

by GUS McCARTHY
in Hollywood

ALTHOUGH the principal role is portrayed by Nino Martini, a star of grand opera and the concert stage, not to mention the radio microphone and a previous picture, "The Gay Desperado," Pickford-Lasky production for United Artists, may not be completely described as a musical production. And although Leo Carillo contributes to it one of his rousing characterizations of a bad man from south of the Rio Grande, with the story affording plenty of outlet for his versatile villainy, neither is melodrama quite the adequate word for it. It is melodrama set to music, and music set to melodrama, and to those who have been permitted to inspect the rushes the production appears to promise an exceptionally congenial combining of the better elements of each.

"The Gay Desperado" is an original story by Leo Birinski, who is to be remembered for his writing connection with "Stamboul Quest," "Song of Songs" and "Mata Hari." The screen play is by Wallace Smith, one-time newspaper artist and illustrator specializing in Mexican subjects, later employed by Douglas Fairbanks to give a dash of authenticity to his "Mark of Zorro," since then a scenarist of rank and an accredited authority on subjects in kind.

Direction is by Rouben Mamoulian, who got himself identified with upper case Art by producing "Porgy" for the stage and went on from there to direct "Kongai," "Farewell to Arms," "Applause," "City Streets," "Love Me Tonight," "Queen Christina," "Becky Sharp" and other aesthetically underscored items for the screen. This story gives him ample range for the exercise of his somewhat specialized talent, which aims primarily at harmonious blending of eye and ear entertainment, a subject on which he is given to discoursing at length and with fervor. Here he has the Martini voice and the Mexican setting with which to work out his effects. Here, too, he has the swift pace of melodramatic action and the calm of musical and romantic interlude to alternate, contrast and by other means combine for screen value. What he did with melodrama in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" is history.

The story concerns a band of Mexican desperados led by Mr. Carrillo, who possesses a knowledge of modern gangster methods and a natural love of music. He makes prisoners of Mr. Martini, who becomes the minstrel member of his outfit, and Ida Lupino and James Blakely, whom he holds for ransom. Stanley Fields, an American gangster, attempts to double cross the bandit chieftain, with resultant gunfire. Romance, arrest and other factors complicate the story, in the course of which, if there is no substantial curtailment of the picture in cutting, Mr. Martini will sing "Celeste Aida," "The World Is Mine," "Adios Mi Tierra," an original, "Cielita Lindo," "Lamento Gitano" and "Estrellita."

Players of other principal roles are Harold Huber, Mischa Auer, Adrian Rosley,

MELODRAMA SET TO MUSIC

. . . . . A HERALD PICTORIAL PREVIEW IN ADVANCE STILLS

Paul Hurst, Alan Garcia, Michael Misaroff and Frank Puglia, to name a few. The cast runs to numbers.

Advance stills, reproduced herewith, give an idea of the manner in which the picture is being produced. It is clear that there is to be no dearth of action, and it is likewise clear that high tension episodes are to be staged for artistic as well as dramatic effect. Key to the manner in which music and melodrama are to be combined is given by the still presented at top and left of the opposite page.

It has been said that melodrama never loses its box office value. Of late a parallel truism pertaining to music has been sustained by performance. "The Gay Desperado" has combined them, the box office will decide how well.

International Cinematographic Institute Objectives Outlined

Activities of Enterprise Pertain to Past, Present and Future of Screen

by DARIO SABATELLO
in Rome

In Rome, on the grounds of the beautiful Villa Torlonia, the residence of Il Duce, there is a building which houses one of the most interesting motion picture developments of our day, the International Cinematographic Institute. Founded by the League of Nations in 1928, this institute, as its name implies, attempts to better the standard of educational films as well as to exercise a unifying influence throughout the world. Trying to develop the use of small size films, and to conceive of films not only in terms of amusement value, but also in terms of scientific and artistic value, is at once an idealistic project and a long, hard road.

The machinery which Dr. De Feo, a pioneer and now the dynamic director of this institute, has set up has proven itself to be most effective and productive. Although the Italian government was the most important sponsor of the Institute, only with the aid and cooperation of the affiliated nations and the intellects which they offered could Dr. De Feo have realized this fine work.

Duties Are Abolished

The steps which have been taken by the Institute, both in the creative and research fields, are as follows:

As the result of four years' work, a convention was held in 1932 which decided to abolish the imposing of any kind of duty or limitation upon any film of an educational nature. This convention, which was attended by 29 nations, France, Italy, United States, England, etc., gave to the I.C.E. the power of judging films as to whether or not they were "educational." Consequently the I.C.E. catalogues these films.

After several lesser conferences, in April, 1934, the I.C.E. held in Rome the first International Congress of Educational and Instructive films, which was attended by 68 delegates representing 40 nations and was formally opened by Il Duce with a speech from the Capitoline hill. Two conferences resulting from this Congress standardized the 16 mm sound film (which took on the name of Standard I.C.E.) which eliminated the difficulties arising from the use of various sizes.

In August, 1932, the I.C.E. organized, in collaboration with the Biannale of Venice, the first International Motion Picture Exhibition, which since then has become annual and is one of the most important of such exhibitions in the world. Here, each year, the Mussolini Gold Cup is offered to the finest film. Last year Anna Karenina won this trophy.

Of the scientific accomplishments of the I.C.E., perhaps the most important is the work that they have done in television and the interest which they have in its future. By gathering from all parts of the world all the known data on television, the I.C.E. has established a source library which may be the finest in existence. Twice a month a chronicle on this subject is printed. In collaboration with other Italian technical laboratories, the I.C.E. is experimenting with the use of short wave in television of 60 to 90 meters.

Built Vast Library

The I.C.E. receives more than 500 movie publications from 54 countries, and has built up a library of more than 2,000 books on the movies.

During the past three years, the I.C.E. has been compiling an enclcyopedia of motion pictures from their first days until the present in all their various aspects. This work contains 3,000 articles written by the greatest connoisseurs in the world, many of which are American. This compilation, with its important articles and unique graphic documentation (more than 5,000 illustrations) will be a complete survey of the growth and development of Motion Pictures. The encyclopedia, which is now finished, will be printed within the next few months by Hoepli, the famous Italian printing house.

Publish New Magazine

The publications of the Institute include books on special subjects, such as, "Motion Pictures and Teaching," "Motion Pictures and Scientific Organization of Work," "Motion Pictures and Farming," etc. For seven years the Institute has been publishing "The International Revue of Educational Movies," printed monthly in five languages, Italian, French, English, German and Spanish, circulating throughout 37 countries.

This year, the Institute is publishing a new magazine. Its title is "Cinema" and its purpose is to collect contemporary developments in movies and television and to present them to its 125,000 readers in a popular but scientific way.

From the above recounting of accomplishments and activities, the reader may readily see the workings of an extremely well integrated machine. In this quiet spot in the gardens of the Villa Torlonia, there has grown up an institute of definite worldwide importance in the field of motion pictures.

In this building on the grounds of the Villa Torlonia, residence of Il Duce in Rome, is housed the International Cinematographic Institute.

MANAGERS' SHARING PLAN EXTENDED TO INCLUDE SAVINGS IN EXPENSES

Famous Players-Canadian Plan Liberalized in Announcement at Convention in Toronto; Bonus Checks Total $30,000

by A-MIKE VOGEL
Chairman, Managers' Round Table
MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Success of the managers' sharing plan which has proved itself in higher grosses during the two past years has definitely committed Famous Players-Canadian Corporation, with its 200 theatres, to a continuation of this unique form of personal participation for the coming year. Revised slightly for the coming year also to reward managers financially for savings in controllable expenses, the sharing arrangements plan was endorsed strongly by President N. L. Nathanson and J. J. Fitzgibbons, director of theatre operations, at the annual three-day convention in Toronto Aug. 26 to 28, for the eastern division managers of the circuit.

Mr. Nathanson made a quick trip back from Europe to arrive for the closing day's sessions, where he personally distributed checks totaling nearly $30,000, noting that for the second successive year every manager present had participated in the distribution.

The Canadian plan differs from other similar circuit arrangements in that it is based neither on net profits nor net earnings of individual theatres, but on increased grosses during the year. The participation figure is arrived at by calculating the percentage of the manager's salary against his year's grosses, and his share of the added grosses during the coming year is based on this percentage. Thus, it was stated, every manager, regardless of the size of his operation, had an equal chance in the sharing, which was further emphasized by the sizeable checks earned by men in the smaller spots.

The sharing plan and group insurance arrangements inaugurated by Mr. Nathanson, whereby each manager is given a $5,000 life policy, the company paying the premiums, are to be supplemented by another service announced at the convention, in which further low-cost insurance covering disability will be made available to the circuit's managers.

Besides being the fifteenth annual meeting of Famous Players-Canadian managers, the convention marked the twentieth anniversary of the first theatre—the Regent in Toronto—opened by Mr. Nathanson in Canada, which was made the occasion of special ceremonies.

Various phases of operation and theatre problems were discussed by the circuit executives and managers during the three days of sessions. Mr. Fitzgibbons, in his closing day address, stressed the great number of promotions announced at the meeting, saying, "My point in spotlighting these promotions is to emphasize to you that we are working definitely within ourselves. We want to bring you up if we can."

The general manager also defined different types of managers and suggested how the individual theatre man could check up on himself to discover whether or not he was functioning profitably. Pointing out the highlights of talks made by the different speakers, he discussed the necessity of watching bookings and the importance of short subjects. He also emphasized the value of air-conditioning.

He also stressed the advantages of personal publicity managers might obtain for themselves by contributing to the Managers' Round Table Club and mentioned the need of keeping in touch with developments in the industry by reading the different departments of MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

Among the speakers was Clarence Robson, eastern division supervisor, who, during his talk, announced the appointment, as his assistant, of R. S. Roddick, manager of the Capitol Theatre, London, Ontario. T. J. Bragg, secretary and treasurer; R. W. Bolstad, comptroller, and James Nairn, publicity director, also spoke.

Others included Morris Stein, eastern district manager; Ben Whitman, Ben Cronk, Len Bishop, Tom Daley, Bob Eves, Clare Appel, J. A. Troyer, Dick Geering, Noel Barrow, J. McCunn, Bill Sussman of 20th Century-Fox, and A-Mike Vogel, chairman of the Managers' Round Table Club of MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

The convention concluded with the annual picnic and games at the Rouge Hills Country Club, where the feature of the evening proved to be the presentation by Clarence Robson, on behalf of the attending managers, of an elaborate cellarette to Mr. Fitzgibbons.

Invited guests at the festivities included Leo DeVaney, RKO Radio; Morris Mulligan and Jack Hunter, Paramount; H. L. Nathanson and Walter Hayner, Regal Films; Claire Hague, Universal; Wolfe Cohen and Harry Paynter, Warner Brothers; J. J. and Jules Allen, Louis Rosenfeld and Dave Coplan, Columbia; Herb Allen and A. Perry, Empire; Oscar Hanson and Arthur Lee of Gaumont British; Jim O'Loghlin and W. Bailey, 20th Century-Fox, and Col. J. A. Cooper.

Famous Players-Canadian conventions for managers in other divisions will be held in Winnipeg, Man., and Vancouver, B. C.

Hoefler Leads Party For African Picture

Paul L. Hoefler, author of "Africa Speaks," accompanied by his assistant, Clifford Penny, and his cameraman, Walter Blunt, will leave New York next week for Africa to film and record scenes for a picture to be released by Warner Brothers, and tentatively called "Dark Empire." A special camera is being taken along to enable the men to photograph animals by remote control.

Italian Assistance Assured Americans By Visiting Envoy

Carlo Roncoroni, president of Italy's current $10,000,000 motion picture project, who is now in this country as an envoy from the Italian government in search of technicians and players and directors to journey to Rome, arrived in Hollywood this week and said that there would be no need for legislation governing the distribution of American films in Italy if American producers accept the invitation to make pictures in Italian studios.

Regarding taxes, Signor Roncoroni said that Italian artists do not pay taxes. Should such taxes be levied, he said, American artists need not worry about them. He also promised aid to producers and artists by securing reasonable transportation and hotel rates.

The Italian studio will be merely a rental lot, the envoy said. Distribution will be left to individual companies and no attempt to set up a distribution system will be made. He said that if the project materializes employment problems will thereby be settled, money circulated and Italian artists would receive the expert advice of skilled workmen. His company, Signor Roncoroni explained, is composed solely of industrialists interested in helping their country and emphatically denied any political affiliation.

Signor Roncoroni also conferred with Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., at a luncheon, but no statement was made concerning the subjects discussed or the results of the meeting.

Espy Assumes Lehr's Duties With Goldwyn

Reeves Espy, formerly Charles Skouras' assistant in Fox West Coast activities, has been named as production assistant to Samuel Goldwyn. He will take over production duties heretofore discharged by Abraham Lehr, who has resigned to enter the agency field. James Mulvey, New York representative for Goldwyn, is now in Hollywood to confer with the producer on the matter of appointing a new man to handle certain financial work formerly done by Mr. Lehr.

MAYER FETED BY HOME TOWN AFTER 20 YEARS

Civic Leaders and Business Men of St. John, N. B., Welcome Local Boy Who Made Good

by J. ROBERT HERBIN
in St. John, N. B.

Civic and industrial St. John turned out last week to welcome Louis B. Mayer, "local boy who made good," returned after twenty years to visit the city of his childhood and renew old friendships. Seated between Chief Justice Baxter of New Brunswick and Mayor MacLaren of St. John at a luncheon given in his honor, the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer vice-president responded to toasts with an address extolling the city of his youth and continuing on to sketch briefly his activites during two decades of intense application to the industry of his choice and to express his present views upon motion pictures, world peace and other topics.

In his comments on motion pictures Mr. Mayer gave major credit for the success of MGM to the courageous leadership of Nicholas M. Schenck, who, he said, had taken chances on expensive productions of unusual pattern in full knowledge of the fact that he would be held personally responsible for results.

Company Tries Innovations

His company had essayed numerous innovations, the speaker declared, stressing the filming of operetta and naming "Naughty Marietta" and "Rose Marie" as exemplary of the outcome. In the field of the classics he singled out "David Copperfield" as demonstrating the soundness of the policy which will be continued with production of "Kim" and "Captains Courageous" at a cost "around $3,000,000." With reference to "Romeo and Juliet," which had its New York premiere during the week, Mr. Mayer said, "We think we have succeeded, but we never know until the dear public—the jury—comes in."

Speaking of company policy in broad terms, he said, "MGM has been trying nicer, better, finer things, gradually to raise the taste of the public, which is one of the finer things pictures can do, for they are popular entertainment." It was not a primary purpose to make money out of "Romeo and Juliet," he said, but to encourage other companies to take chances on finer, better things, adding that he was "thankful to be head of a studio that starts these things."

Pessimistic On World Peace

On the subject of world peace, to which he came by way of brief mention of the MGM-Twentieth Century - Fox - Gaumont British alliance currently in process of consummation, the production executive was not optimistic. He expressed the personal opinion that lasting world peace will be assured only when the English-speaking nations, Great Britain and the United States, join forces to guarantee it. He believes these powers should join in serving notice on "all those mad people who didn't get a lesson from the last war that they will give them hell if they start again." It is his opinion that "if they had the money they would be at it now."

Mr. Mayer was born in Europe and came to St. John with his parents in infancy. He attended the St. John public schools and paid a visit, while here, to an elderly lady who was his teacher in the primary grades. In a round of the poorer section of the city, where he lived as a small boy, he discovered another of his juvenile confidants, a now aged hotel porter. He also visited the grave of his mother and that of John E. Wilson, a lifelong friend and his benefactor when, at 16, he set out to conduct a scrap business.

Tribute Paid Guest

Chief Justice Baxter, his friend from childhood, paid tribute to Mr. Mayer's success as that of "a poor boy endowed only with intellectual worth, moral steadfastness and tenacity of purpose." In indirect reply the guest uttered as his favorite maxim, "When you get to the end of a rope tie a knot in it and hold on." David Stoneman, Boston corporation lawyer and Mr. Mayer's counsellor in the early years of his theatrical activity, said that "Mayer is loved because, in spite of his achievements, he has remained human."

Mr. Mayer and Howard Strickling, who was present at the homecoming, returned to New York and left there on Monday of this week for Hollywood.

Blackton Founds Organization of Screen Pioneers

Formed at the suggestion of Commodore J. Stuart Blackton for the purpose of promoting cooperative companionship among screen pioneers, the Associated Cinema Stars gave its first annual dinner dance at Hollywood's Hotel Biltmore Bowl last week with more than a hundred stars of yesterday in attendance and thousands of fans of today looking on. The event, to be known as "The Close-Up" in annual recurrence, was conducted with all of the flourishes attendant upon a Hollywood premiere and broadcast over KMTR.

Commodore Blackton first broached the idea of such an organization to a small group of pioneers recently at the Riverside Breakfast Club. Response was immediate and favorable. The social side of the organization's activities is stressed as primary. A secondary consideration is the stimulation of employment for players with whom the years have not dealt kindly in the economic sense. An over-all purpose is the eradication of the imaginary but often severely drawn dividing line between box office generations, to the end that a competent player may not be penalized for past drawing power.

Among the pioneers present in addition to Commodore Blackton, to name a few, were David Wark Griffith, Clara Kimball Young, Agnes Ayres, Maurice Costello, Lillian Castle, Ethel Clayton, Charlie Murray, Kate Price, Fred Stone, Mary MacLaren, Hank Mann, Claire Winter, Flora Finch, Mrs. Wallace Reid, Florence Lawrence and Leo White, who alternated with Leon Janney as master of ceremonies. Prominent players of the present day were present in force to pay homage to the men and women who had preceded them up the ladder to screen success.

Following the dinner Commodore Blackton paid oral tribute to the departed great of the motion picture, Marie Dressler, Will Rogers, John Gilbert, Mabel Normand, Wallace Reid, Rudolph Valentino and others. Then the bowl was darkened, a screen lowered and a film program composed of early productions was exhibited.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Production

Production recovered slightly from the preceding week's letdown, with seven new pictures going into production. Twenty-one more are scheduled to start within the next fortnight, which will bring activity to the neighborhood of the all time high. As of this report, forty-four features and two shorts are in work, while cutting rooms are clogged with 58 pictures in editing.

Columbia started two of the new pictures, "Come Closer, Folks," and " The Depths Below." MGM commenced shooting on "Maytime," which will co-star Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy, and "Love On the Run," featuring Clark Gable, Joan Crawford and Franchot Tone. Richard A. Rowland started "Love and Laughter" for Paramount distribution, RKO-Radio put "Daddy and I" in work and Sol Lesser started "Wild Brian Kent" for Twentieth Century-Fox.

The following companies were responsible for the picture shooting at the weekend in the numbers given: Columbia 3, Goldwyn 2, MGM 6, Paramount 10, RKO-Radio 4, Twentieth Century-Fox 6, Universal 3, Warners 8, Independents 1.

Rome Beckons

There's a great deal of talk and very little news about Carlo Roncoroni, in Hollywood for the stipulated purpose of persuading producers to utilize the ten million dollar studio under construction in Italy. It is possible to hear that he is empowered to offer extremely attractive terms, but nobody admits having received such an offer. There are rumors and rumors of rumors, while the visitor goes his quiet way, saying nothing for publication and little elsewhere, all of which is whether he knows it or not, an excellent way to conduct a personal publicity campaign in this highly communicative settlement.

Two incidents last week brought Sig. Roncoroni into the foreground. One was an interview with Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association, regarding the subject of which no report was given out. The other was a reception, sponsored by Mr. Wanger, at which the visitor told the press in general terms that the studio project he represents has "no political connections," but that the government looks upon it favorably.

Thus far Walter Wanger, whose plans were made public some time ago, is the only producer known to have taken advantage of whatever inducements the Italian climate or Sig. Roncoroni or both may have to present for the consideration of man in the business of making motion pictures. Mr. Wanger has announced that he will make a picture in Italy next summer and that he believes the backgrounds are rich in exploitation value. That is all there is, officially, to that. It is beside the point, no doubt, and quite in keeping with the fact that Mr. Wanger's notable war record was made in various planes operating from an Italian base, that the producer has addressed at least one gathering of some numerical strength on the merits of Italy's present form of government and that, in his remarks on this occasion, he spoke extremely well and enthusiastically of the country and just about everything identified with it.

Sig. Roncoroni's visit is not, of course, without precedent. The custom of sending emmisaries to Hollywood has become more or less general. Generally, though, the emmisary masks his purpose, if he has one, behind a pretense of general interest. Not so the Italian representative. His approach is as direct as a Mussolini address. He has come to trade and makes no secret of the fact. This disarming frankness may explain, in part, the hesitant attitude of producers, trained to bargain, toward his overtures. Or perhaps they just aren't in the market, the state of affairs on the Continent being what it is at the moment, for studio space on any terms.

Back from Oblivion

Pleasant to exhibitor ears must be the story of the Carthay Circle theatre, back from oblivion to the very front rank of major American cinemas after an experience unique in the annals of the motion picture theatre.

The Carthay Circle, built elaborately in the golden days and operated on a roadshow policy, was hit early and hard by the depression. From a position of eminence among the picture playhouses of its birthtime it fell quickly into disuse. For a period of years its lights were up one or two nights a week for the benefit of studio executives who wanted to see what a picture in preparation looked like on a theatre screen. Regularly, during this period, the janitor approached the box office once each week, bought a ten cent admission ticket, went inside, sat down and listened to an organ solo. This was to satisfy the terms of a lease which made it mandatory that the theatre be operated "regularly."

Then the Carthay Circle was reopened with "The Great Ziegfeld" and the dead, dark days and nights were things of a past to be forgotten. People quickly demonstrated willingness to pay good prices for good pictures. And then came "Anthony Adverse," for the presentation of which Warners wanted the house badly enough to wait while MGM ran out a fortnight's extension of its "Great Ziegfeld" run. And now MGM finds itself doing the waiting to enter with "Romeo and Juliet."

Sweet Peace

Fears that Hollywood was in for another of those internal name calling contests in which both sides lose have been calmed by news that producers and the Screen Actors Guild have come to see eye to eye in the matter of bit players' salaries. So sweet is the peace resultant from the understanding arrived at that neither faction is shouting victory.

It will be remembered that the Guild brought an action against Columbia and Warners on the claim that certain actors had not been paid the NRA scale for speaking lines in productions, said scale having been agreed upon as continuing by mutual consent beyond the demise of the Blue Eagle. It now appears that legal action was not altogether necessary and that the whole affair might have been handled satisfactorily by direct appeal to those vaguely identified gentlemen known as the higher-ups. In any case, the story now given currency is to the effect that wage parings were ordered by minor executives and that major executives, on learning of the matter, verbally spanked the minors for "ill advised and trivial economies" and adjusted all differences forthwith.

Everybody feels pretty good about the outcome of it all. The production colony is distinctly in the market for peace. With box office grosses over the country showing consistent appreciation from week to week, Hollywood is disposed to let well enough somewhat emphatically alone.

The Gorgeous Hussy

(MGM)

Historical Drama

Skillfully and lavishly has MGM embodied every showmanship fundamental in "Georgeous Hussy" to obtain a resultant blend of name power, strong emotional drama, comedy and production values which definitely spell box office. Backgrounded by Washington political life in the early American days of 1823, when a turbulent union was struggling for ultimate unity, the film offers a colorful subject for exploitation.

Giving extraordinary individual performances are Joan Crawford as Peggy Eaton, vivid and beautiful innkeeper's daughter, who becomes a Washington political figure; Robert Taylor, dashing sailor of the Constitution; Lionel Barrymore as Andrew Jackson and Franchot Tone as John Eton.

Embellished with fine feeling, understanding and depth through direction, the picture is entitled to new laurels as class-mass entertainment. The film, with its strong dramatic appeal, smouldering emotion, blending comedy and lavish spectacle, plus cast, is a showman's natural.

As the story opens early political Washington is in the throes of a presidential election with Barrymore as Andrew Jackson opposing John C. Calhoun, played by Frank Conroy. Close to the heart of Barrymore is Miss Crawford, who knows the Tennessee senator's every odd whim almost as well as his wife, Beulah Bondi. Turned down by Senator John Randolph, played by Melvyn Douglas, because the conscious stricken politician feels too old to marry her, Crawford finally is wedded to Taylor, a young sailor, who is soon after killed in a sea battle.

Playing an extremely sympathetic role as Barrymore's wife, Miss Bondi contributes an excellent characterization as a rather coarse, pipe smoking, nevertheless humanly interesting personality and Barrymore's strongest support. When she dies as a result of vicious and catty tongue lashing, Barrymore finds it impossible to fulfill his presidential duties until Miss Crawford is by his side. Strong emotional impact features the climax when Miss Crawford and Randolph are about to be married as a culmination of their many years' romance. However, it never goes through, because Miss Crawford sacrifices her love to be at the side of Barrymore, whose Constitutional ideas differ radically from those of Randolph.

Miss Crawford finally marries Franchot Tone, but even this fails to halt vicious gossip aimed in her direction. Barrymore ultimately dismisses his entire cabinet to avenge her name and rid himself of gossiping "no-goods" who have typed the girl as a shady character. Alison Skipworth does her part well as the chief spokesman for the undiplomatic and gossipy ladies of Washington. Douglas turns in a first rate performance as the stubborn senator from Tennessee, while Sidney Toler faithfully interprets the eloquent Daniel Webster. Taylor's role is all too small for the manner in which he handles it. The other performances could not have been better.

Clarence Brown's skillful direction has at all times kept his characters restrained and yet drained the story of every emotional and dramatic value it contains. Ainsworth Morgan and Stephen Morehouse Avery showed enterprising production technique in the screen adaptation from Samuel Hopkins Adams' book.

This picture can reliably be advocated as one of the best of the year from the box office, production and straight entertainment viewpoint.

Reviewed at the Fox Wilshire theatre, which draws an upper class mixed patronage, the picture received enthusiastic approval.

Sitting On the Moon

(Republic)

Musical Comedy

The story and characters of this picture are both cut from more or less familiar patterns. Roger Pryor is cast as an irresponsible songwriter who grinds out hit tunes for pictures between drunken orgies. He is constantly shadowed by William Newell, a comedian new to the screen, who serves in the dual capacity of lyric writer and personal servant. At their studio the pair find Grace Bradley and Pert Kelton in the line applying for chorus jobs. Miss Bradley was formerly a star, but has been blacklisted by producers because she once walked out in the middle of a picture. Pryor has admired her for some time, and volunteers to help her start a new career. He is successful in obtaining a radio engagement for her, and is about to marry her when Joyce Compton appears on the scene with the claim that Pryor has married her in one of his less sober moments.

Miss Bradley, Newell and Miss Kelton then leave for New York, while Pryor in despair is left to hit the skids in Hollywood. He follows, however, when he learns that Henry Wadsworth, a band leader, has tricked Miss Bradley out of most of her salary. Things are straightened when Pryor writes a new song hit and finds that Miss Compton is a professional blackmailer and not his wife. The end also brings a happy culmination to the comedy romance of Miss Kelton and Newell, which runs through the story in the best tradition of comedy romance.

Several musical numbers are presented, and in one The Theodores, dancers, score in a specialty. The supporting cast includes Henry Kolker, Pierre Watkin and June Martel. Direction is by Ralph Staub, who has heretofore been known as a producer and director of shorts.

Reviewed at the Forum theatre, a neighborhood house, and fairly well received on a program including a revival of "The Big House."

Isle of Fury

(Warner)

Drama

This picture (formerly "Three in Eden") is a melodrama of the South Seas with two principal elements of action appearing on the surface and an undercurrent of mystery constantly present as background. Unfortunately, despite these themes, the picture never rises above the grade of average entertainment, and this also despite the fact that the production is, for the main part, pictorially interesting.

As the story starts, Humphrey Bogart is being married to Marget Lindsay during a tropical hurricane. As the ceremony concludes, word is brought that a ship is going down on the reef outside the island. At great personal risk Bogart goes out and rescues Donald Woods and Paul Graetz. Graetz is identified as the captain of the ship which has gone down, but the identity of Woods is not fully disclosed until the end, his anonymity affording the undercurrent of mystery.

When Woods has recovered from the accident, Bogart takes him and Miss Lindsay off on a pearl fishing expedition. Native divers have refused to go after pearls and Bogart, seeking the reason, goes down himself and is trapped by an octopus. Woods follows over the side and saves Bogart, later repeating the favor when native bad men try to steal the pearls.

Meanwhile, Woods and Miss Lindsay have fallen in love. Bogart has been too preoccupied to suspect, but the affair has had the attention of E. E. Clive, island doctor, who prevents things from reaching serious proportions by slyly lecturing Woods over highballs. Later Graetz, believing there is a price on Woods' heat in the States, tells Bogart of the intimacy. When Bogart goes to denounce the pair it is revealed that Bogart himself is the man wanted, and Woods is revealed as the detective sent to get him. A happy ending is effected, however, when Woods decides to leave, calling the case he had come to solve closed.

Good performances are offered by the entire cast, though the screen play, by Robert Andrews and William Jacobs from a Somerset Maugham novel, does not afford opportunity for exceptional acting.

Reviewed at Warners' Beverly Hills theatre, a DeLuxe neighborhood house, where the picture received no enthusiastic comment and was received largely in silence, sharing the program with "Love Begins at Twenty."

Old Hutch

(MGM)

Comedy-Drama

This film needs especial emphasis on the new character created by Wallace Beery to draw others than the fans who turn out for all of the star's pictures, for the chief value of the offering lies in the central character rather than in the slight plot.

For 20 years Old Hutch has developed vague pains in his back whenever the word "work" has fallen upon his shocked and unwashed ears. But his life is changed completely on the day he finds one hundred thousand-dollar bills buried on the bank of his favorite fishing stream. Giddy with sudden riches, he re-buries the fortune, and faces the unhappy fact that he must establish himself as a man of means before he can begin to cash bills of such large denomination.

First he takes a bath. Then he buys a new hat for 50 cents. By the end of the summer he is wearing a white suit and giving finery to his astonished family. Though every fiber of his lazy body rebels against the dreadful necessity, he works like a mad man. Then, when his goal is nearly in sight, the bank robbers return, recover the stolen bills and, at the point of a gun, force Old Hutch to attempt passing some of the hot money. Through his resultant panic, Old Hutch gets credit for the arrest of the robbers, becomes the town hero, collects the reward and returns in peace to his fishing.

Romance between his daughter, played by Cecelia Parker and Eric Linden, son of one of the town's leading lights, provides a pleasant little tale of young love, very nicely underplayed. Elizabeth Patterson as the sour and discouraged wife is exceptionally fine when driven to a timorous but determined outburst of protest. Virginia Grey has a telling small part as a portentously inviting travel clerk. Good in smaller parts are Robert McWade, Caroline Perkins, Julia Perkins, Delmar Watson, James Burke, Virginia Grey and Donald Meek.

J. Walter Ruben's direction places heavy emphasis on the appeal of the slow Beery delivery of lines and gets plenty of laughter for the comedy dear to the hearts of the Beery fans. The same attitude is stressed in the screen play by George Kelly from the story by Garret Smith.

Reviewed at the Alexander theatre, Glendale, following "To Mary With Love," the film met with mild but cordial response from the above average audience and a large press section.

Murder With Pictures

(Paramount)

Murder Mystery

Suitably handled through direction and performance for mystery suspense and comedy relief, "Murder With Pictures" should sustain the interest of audiences who like to figure out who did it. The picture has plenty of twists to vary the customary routine and is embellished with a novel plot wherein murders are committed with a Maxim silencer concealed in a camera box.

Exhibitors have straight out and out mystery melodrama to sell, plus the name of Lew Ayres. The title suggests a new mystery plot and, with proper exploitation, should draw this type of patronage.

The story is routine, concerning itself with a bunch of murderers and bringing every one in the cast, inclusive of newspaper photographers, under suspicion. An oil inheritance is at the root of the criminal proceedings, giving the story a logical ring. Ayres gets right in the thick of things through protecting Gail Patrick, who has been defrauded out of her inheritance and is accused of the shooting.

Playing the chief role in the film is a photographic negative, shot accidentally at the time of the murder by Benny Baker, a dumb photographer, which, when developed, points out the murderer. More murders are committed before the fadeout, which finds Ayres and Miss Patrick heading for the altar. Triangular romance is added by the annoying presence of Ayres' fiancee, Joyce Compton.

The title and mystery theme keynote the showmen's approach. Suspense and comedy have been thoughtfully blended by Director Charles Barton and performances are excellent. Ted Tetzlaff photographed the subject to advantage.

Reviewed at the Ritz theatre, where a mixed audience received the picture in proper spirit and seemed continuously interested. "Suzy" shared the bill. WATT, Hollywood.

Produced by A. M. Botsford. Distributed by Paramount. Directed by Charles Barton. Assistant director, Eddie Montague. Screen play by John Moffitt and Sidney Salkow. Story by George Harmon Coxe. Film editor, James Smith. Photographed by Ted Tetzlaff. Art director, Hans Dreier and John Goodman. P. C. A. certificate No. 2470. Release date, Sept. 18. Running time, 75 minutes. All American Chump

Comedy

This is laugh entertainment presented in an interesting manner. As the humorous story unfolds the audience feels the reaction from the performers that they are having as much fun playing their roles as the patrons are in watching them. This is definitely saleable material.

The story centers on Stuart Erwin, a rapid calculator who is wasting his adding machine talent on a 15-dollar a week bank job. Erwin looks like a good bet to put a traveling carnival back on its feet, so Robert Armstrong, Betty Furness and Edmund Gwenn, members of the troupe, take him into the fold and exploit him to the customers as a human adding machine. The idea doesn't go over as expected until Erwin uses his trigger calculations in a bridge game with a champion. Dewey Robinson and his gangsters try to chisel in on the small fortune Erwin has won in the bridge game, using Edward Brophy as the foil, and the attempt winds up in a free-for-all in which Erwin is struck on the head. The blow affects Erwin's genius. Love blooms at the right moment and Miss Furness manages to convince Erwin to this effect, which subsequently restores his gift. Miss Furness' act aids Erwin in winning another bridge game and the two take the romantic trail, leaving Robert Armstrong in the wrong corner of the romantic triangle.

Performances move along easily under the smooth direction of Edwin L. Marin. The original screen play by Lawrence Kimble is interestingly developed at all times for laugh reaction.

The title and featured name, Stuart Erwin, suggest the comedy angle as the showman's exploitation cue.

Reviewed at the Fox Village theatre, where De Luxe trade predominates. Played with "Rhythm on the Range," the picture received many laughs. WATT, Hollywood.

Produced by Lucien Hubbard and Michael Fessier. Distributed by MGM. Directed by Edwin L. Marin. Original screen play by Lawrence Kimble. Assistant director, Al Shanberg. Film editor, Frank E. Hull. Photographed by Charles Clarke. Art director, Cedric Gibbons. P. C. A. certificate not yet issued. Release date undetermined. Running time, 70 minutes. General audience classification.

Three Married Men

(Paramount)

Sophisticated Comedy

This picture is definitely for adult purposes. While nothing in the dialogue itself is offensive, the attitude of the film is to the effect that there is something intrinsically funny about a wedding night, and it is upon this premise that the comedy is built.

Romance in plumbing and garage circles is represented by Roscoe Karns and Mary Brian. Their families have enjoyed a long standing feud, and the hatchet is not buried at the wedding. Karns has been guided in his matrimonial venture by a series of victrola records. Following their canned advice, Karns appears in pajamas which he fondly hopes will strike an exotically romantic note. His surprised bride collapses into hysterical laughter. Evidently she had no records to guide her, for after a heated quarrel she tosses a sports coat over her negligee and runs home to mother. The next day both families leap to far more extravagant conclusions than are contained in the dialogue.

William Frawley and Lynne Overman provide humor as disillusioned benedicts. George Barbier, Marjorie Gateson, Betty Ross Clarke, Mabel Colcord, Bennie Bartlett, Gail Sheridan, Cora Sue Collins, Donald Meek and Charles Wilson complete the cast, which deserves better material.

Skittishly farcical and far too knowing comedy of this calibre is certainly not proper entertainment for children and adolescents, not so much for what is actually seen and heard, but for what is implied by the lumbering vulgarity of the entire approach.

Reviewed at the Alexander theatre, Glendale, following "To Mary With Love," the picture drew plenty of laughter, but it contained as many guffaws as chuckles.

The Song of Freedom

(Hammer-British Lion)

Drama

Here are Paul Robeson and four songs of the type Robeson can sing better than anyone else on earth. "Lonely Road," "Song of Freedom," "Sleepy River" and "Stepping Stones" are good songs. Particularly is this true of "Sleepy River," a verse of which in one scene is also sung solo by Elizabeth Welch. It has melody, rhythm, popular appeal.

Also to sell are African backgrounds, an atmosphere of witchcraft, the theme of a lone man fighting the powers of darkness and winning. The back-stage alternates with the jungle as the setting.

Robeson is cast as Zinga, a negro dock-laborer in London, who is haunted by a melody which he can never remember to have been taught. "Discovered" and grown into a famous opera singer, Zinga learns from a famous traveler that the elusive tune is the royal chant of a tribe living in an African island. He gives up his career and, with his wife, goes in search of his people.

The islanders, in the grip of superstitions fomented by their witch doctor rulers, deride and imprison the newcomer with his claim to be their king but, with the spears at his throat and his wife about to be tortured to death, Zinga breaks into the King's song and is accepted by the tribe. Thereafter he sings only to provide money for the modernization of his kingdom.

Ingenuous in a dramatic sense, and with a great deal of very labored dialogue, "The Song of Freedom" has, in addition to the special assets already mentioned, a very effective African background and a strong appeal deepened by Robeson's excellent acting. Some of the white support is very stagey.

Reviewed at a night trade show, Piccadilly theatre, audience reaction suggested that the songs, and the fact that Robeson sings them, will make it a usable feature in the States.

The Novelty Shop

(Columbia)

Very Good

While the theme of this short subject, as indicated by the title, is worn on the edges through usage, and especially during the Christmas season, it is well done and deserving of attention. When the old toy maker locks up his shop for the night, the toys come to life and have a great time until morning when the toy maker returns. Laurel and Hardy and the quintuplets are well represented by their toy counterparts. Running time, 7 minutes.

The Backyard Broadcast

(Vitaphone)

Clever Kids

A fairly large contingent of clever youngsters have been gathered together here to "strut their stuff" through the medium of the amateur hour craze. Singing, dancing, comedy of sufficient variety, are all on the program. The scene opens in a hastily constructed setting where an amateur broadcast is in progress and then shifts to a nightclub, when the performers are hired as regular entertainers. Running time, 20 minutes.

Sunday Go To Meetin' Time

(Vitaphone)

Entertaining

An entertaining "Merrie Melody" cartoon in color, this concerns the trials and tribulations of Nicodemus, a black boy, who prefers to steal chickens than go to church. Nicodemus is shooting craps when the Missus finds him and drags him off to church. Nicodemus sneaks out and heads for the crap game but on the way he stops to steal a chicken. The black boy runs headlong into a fence and while unconscious dreams that he is in hades and being punished for his earthly missteps. On awaking Nicodemus makes a bee line for the church.. Running time, 7 minutes.

Bored Of Education

(MGM)

Very Good

"Our Gang" heralds the approaching reopening of school with a comedy that has a schoolroom for background. In this, two of the more recalcitrant members of the gang devise a plan whereby one of them will be excused from school for a toothache, the other to accompany the sick one to the dentist. The new teacher overhears the plan and promptly orders ice cream for the class. The two are excused, but as they are leaving the ice cream wagon arrives. The toothache magically disappears and the two scheming members return, but not reluctantly, to the schoolroom.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Harnessed Rhythm

(MGM)

Equine Training

Besides being interesting, this Sports Parade short subject is an education in the training of a trotting horse from the time of birth to the three-year-old stage, when the real racing begins. After two years of extensive preparation the big day arrives and the horse is at the barrier. He's away and soon is leading the field but a lost shoe throws the horse out of stride. In succession the wheel of the sulkie falls off, the driver is spilled and the horse is no longer leading the field. Courage and training drive the horse on, still trotting, to finish second.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Violets In Spring

(MGM)

Excellent

An excellent Miniature Musical Comedy, this has to do with the romance of a boy and a girl who work side by side, day in and day out, in a modern high-pressure business office. Part of a machine-like existence, the boy and girl consider each other as belonging to the system until a psychologically-minded janitor plants a valentine in the boy's coat and signs the girl's name on it. The boy invites the girl to an evening's entertainment and the romance is begun. When they plan to marry and the girl intends to quit her job the boss pleads with the janitor to do something. Some more phychology and the romance is ended. The boy hands in his resignation. It all ends happily, however, when some additional psychology, plus love, brings the boy and girl together again to the satisfaction of the boss.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Swing Banditry

(MGM)

Music and Comedy

Swing music as played by Georgie Stoll and his orchestra combined with a comedy background adds up to good entertainment. Stoll's band traps a broadcasting executive in an elevator and proceeds to play for him. The executive, as soon as he's free, calls the police to arrest the entire orchestra. Through trickery another orchestra, about to go on the air, is arrested instead. Stoll's orchestra is substituted and scores a hit. Running time, 11 minutes.

How To Vote

(MGM)

Timely

That perennial funster, Robert Benchley, flits his ethereal course through another pertinent subject, this time a diverting and completely baffling exposition on the advantages of voting for his candidate in the coming election. Quoting figures and extemporizing on their meaning in the best tradition of campaign speakers, Mr. Benchley, in his accomplished nonsensical manner, does another excellent job of making fun.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Behind The Headlines

(MGM)

Interesting

An interesting angle of newspaper work is depicted in this Pete Smith Specialty. A paper with a headline in large type is flashed on the screen. The paper with this particular headline has "scooped" the town. The story behind the headline is then traced from its inception to the time the paper is on the street. The transmitting of a wirephoto from London to New York, then to Los Angeles, and the intricacies involved in the mechanical process are a feature of the subject. Directed by Edward Cahn.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Mad Money

(Columbia)

Drama

Announced as first of a series of 13 monthly releases based on the radio program, "Court of Human Relations," with the plots taken from Bernarr McFadden's True Story Magazine, this short subject does not augur too well for the rest of the series. The hackneyed plot of the unhappiness that follows easy money is unconvincingly acted. A hard-working electrician wins the sweepstakes and loses his wife, daughter and home. When they have spent all the money they return to him, tearfully admitting their mistake. He appeals to the Court of Human Relations to help him decide whether or not to forgive them.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Killer Dog

(MGM)

Realistic

Realistically portraying the story of a dog accused of murdering sheep, this short subject parallels the "Idaho" dog trial at Brockport, N. Y., and was probably instrumental in the eventual acquittal of "Idaho." Silver Wolf, a police dog, strays from home one night and returns next day with a back wound. A neighboring rancher finds two dead sheep and accuses the dog. The dog is brought to trial for murder. The judge agrees to follow out a plan whereby the dog will be let loose and his movements carefully watched. The dog is freed at night and immediately it heads for the sheep. The sheep are attacked by a coyote. The dog kills the coyote and is absolved of the sheep-killing.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Set Sound Instructors

L. E. Clark of RCA will conduct the advanced course in sound recording to be conducted again this fall in Hollywood by the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Science. A. P. Hill of Electrical Research Products, Inc., will resume his preliminary course. John Hilliard of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will assist Mr. Hill, and Fred Albin of United Artists will work with Mr. Clark.

Few Fights Over New Union Scale

Labor Day arrives with virtual quiet on the labor front in exhibition, a rarity in view of the usual wide divergence of opinion that prevails at this time between exhibitors and union projectionists, stage hands and other crafts over rights on working hours and wages.

In Newark, N. J., the local projectionists' union has served a demand on theatre owners in Newark and Essex county for a 25 per cent increase in pay starting in September. It is expected a meeting of all theatre men will be called to discuss the matter before any action is taken on the union's demands.

At the same time in nearby Manhattan, Abraham Rosenson, ousted recording secretary of the Empire Motion Picture Operator's Union, appeared in mandamus proceedings in supreme court before Justice Charles J. Dodd to compel the union to restore him to his office. Abraham Kinzler, president of the union, testified that the dismissal charges against Mr. Rosenson were made on July 7, and that on July 21, after a complete trial under the bylaws of the organization, in which both sides of the question were heard, he was relieved of his post. The court reserved decision.

Clarifying the settlement reached in Pasadena, Calif., recently between Local 150, IATSE & MPMO, and the California Amusement Company, following a year's picketing campaign, Ray Miller, stockholder in the company, said the deal was a compromise which resulted in the division of labor in the theatres between both the amusement company's workers and union labor.

In Kansas City, no first-run contracts have been signed as yet and the theatres will probably continue to operate on last year's contracts.

"Ecstasy" Court Test

In order to get a court decision which may clear the way for a showing of "Ecstasy," Breckenridge Fagin, manager of the Royal in Kansas City, exhibited the film, was arrested, fined $50 and released on a bond of $100. Mr. Fagin appealed the fine from the police to circuit court. A jury will hear the case next week and will view the picture to decide whether city censors Guy Holmes and Mrs. Eleanore Walton and the city appeal board appointed by City Manager McElroy were justified in banning the picture early this week.

Friedlander to Hospital

Al Friedlander, former vice-president of First Division Exchanges, is in Medical Arts Hospital, New York, for several weeks rest. Mr. Friedlander, in charge of advertising, sales and exploitation of First Division, settled his contract with that company a few weeks ago and when he has fully recovered plans to enter business for himself.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

FEATHER IN HER HAT, A: Pauline Lord, Louis Hayward—Can't remember a picture that was as tiresome as this. Played on double feature and second night lowest since sub-zero weather. Bad news spreads fast. Running time, 75 minutes. Played August 19-20.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

HELLO TROUBLE: Buck Jones, Lina Basquette—Good western. Lots of action. Running time, six reels. Played August 16-18.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

MEET NERO WOLFE: Edward Arnold, Lionel Stander—With the exception of Lionel Stander, who is a big ray of sunshine in any picture, this is very ordinary entertainment. Running time, 72 minutes. Played August 12-13.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Ore. Small town patronage.

MR. DEEDS GOES TO TOWN: Gary Cooper, Jean Arthur—Very good picture. It is slow moving up until the last two reels. Did average business but is not the money getter Columbia would have you believe it is. Most of the customers were pleased.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kansas. Small town patronage.

MR. DEEDS GOES TO TOWN: Gary Cooper, Jean Arthur—Too bad Columbia couldn't turn out more like this. Only B. O. show they have had this year for me. Comments were exceptionally fine and our guess is that this will easily rate as one of the 10 best in 1936. 118 minutes and not a dull moment.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

SECRET PATROL: Charles Starrett, Finis Barton—Very good Mounted Police picture. Starrett is building up nicely. Hope his new series rates with the three or four we have played so far. Running time, six reels. Played August 9-11.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

SUPERSPEED: Norman Foster, Florence Rice—Not much to this. O. K. for double bill if the number one feature is extra good. Running time, 58 minutes. Played August 12-13.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

WESTERN COURAGE: Ken Maynard—Ken not as popular as Buck Jones. Did average week-end business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage

First National

BRIDES ARE LIKE THAT: Ross Alexander, Anita Louise, Joseph Cawthorn—Very good comedy. Amusing story and good cast with Joseph Cawthorn stealing the show as usual. Pleased the cash customers. Running time, 70 minutes. Played July 29-30.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

BULLETS OR BALLOTS: Edward G. Robinson—Good action picture with plenty of shooting and killings and that's what they like in this neck of the woods. Average business. Played August 8.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

GOLDEN ARROW, THE: Bette Davis, George Brent—Good picture, amusing story and good cast. Pleased those who braved the hot weather to come. Running time, 68 minutes. Played August 15-16.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

HEARTS DIVIDED: Marion Davies, Dick Powell—Have wasted ten minutes trying to think of a fair report for this picture but it doesn't come. It really was average entertainment but no more than that. Davies and Powell seemed sadly miscast. The brightest moments were those when Napoleon (Claude Rains) was on the screen. Running time, 70 minutes. Played August 18.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Ore. Small town patronage.

LAW IN HER HANDS, THE: Margaret Lindsay, Warren Hull—Okay programmer. Nothing big but manages to entertain. Played August 18.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

MURDER BY AN ARISTOCRAT: Marguerite Churchill, Lyle Talbot—A mediocre program picture with little drawing power. But nevertheless, believe it was well liked. Running time, 62 minutes. Played August 12-13.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

SNOWED UNDER: George Brent, Genevieve Tobin—Did better than average business. Played August 13.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

GB Pictures

FIRST A GIRL: Jessie Matthews, Sonnie Hale—This was a common musical and not a very good one in our estimation. Sold as a special and did not do average business. Running time, 78 minutes. Played July 1-2.—Beatty & Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Canada. Small town and rural patronage.

FIRST A GIRL: Jessie Matthews, Sonnie Hale—Very good. Music, dancing, comedy, everything that goes to make entertainment. Running time, 72 minutes. Played August 12-13.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

IT'S LOVE AGAIN: Jessie Matthews, Robert Young, Sonnie Hale—Were it not for a few stray English accents and the GB trademark, the average patron would assume this to be an American production, so closely and expertly does it follow the Hollywood film-musical pattern. We imagine, however, Miss Matthews would be amazed beyond words if her producers provided a new story for her films. The latest is practically the same as "Evergreen" and "First a Girl." Good audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

ABSOLUTE QUIET: Irene Hervey, Lionel Atwill—Absolute Quiet is right, especially at the box office. No business at all with this one, although the few who came to see it were pleased. Played August 4.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

BOHEMIAN GIRL, THE: Laurel and Hardy—Another good one from this team and worthy of time in any small town theatre. Running time, 72 minutes. Played July 3-4.—Beatty & Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Canada. Small town and rural patronage.

MOONLIGHT MURDER: Chester Morris, Madge Evans—About the average murder mystery story to fair business. Played July 28.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

ROBIN HOOD OF EL DORADO, THE: Warner Baxter, Ann Loring—Good picture although a little too long winded. Did good business here. Played July 11.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

ROBIN HOOD OF EL DORADO, THE: Warner Baxter, Ann Loring—Not a woman's picture by any means. Heard many comments of this nature and many women stayed away. The trailer told them enough to know that. But it is a swell picture for the men. Running time, 86 minutes. Played August 16-17.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

ROSE MARIE: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy—One of the finest pictures we have ever played. Beat "Naughty Marietta" at box office for us. Comments all good and business good. Running time, 113 minutes. Played July 9-11.—Beatty & Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Canada. Small town and rural patronage.

SAN FRANCISCO: Clark Gable, Jeanette MacDonald, Spencer Tracy, Jack Holt—The first really big picture we've had from Metro this season. It is splendid entertainment. Played August 16-17.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SPEED: Wendy Barrie, James Stewart—Good program picture to average business. Played August 11.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

THREE GODFATHERS: Chester Morris, Irene Hervey—Another picture that did not mean anything. The plot has been worked to death. Running time, 82 minutes. Played July 13-16.—Beatty & Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Canada. Small town and rural patronage.

THREE WISE GUYS: Robert Young, Betty Furness—Excellent programmer. Should satisfy any audience. Young and Furness make a good team. Played August 12-13.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

TROUBLE FOR TWO: Robert Montgomery, Rosalind Russell—Personally liked this picture but believe we had as much adverse criticism on it as any picture in a long time. When will distributors come to realize that most patrons do not care for ancient pictures, that is, pictures of old times. Running time, 75 minutes. Played August 14-15.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

WIFE VS. SECRETARY: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow, Myrna Loy—A fine cast and a well made picture that did not do business. Running time, 88 minutes. Played August 6-8.—Beatty & Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Canada. Small town and rural patronage.

Paramount

AND SUDDEN DEATH: Randolph Scott, Frances Drake—If you can satisfy your patrons with this sort of thing you have the best of it, because my patrons will not take this and like it.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

BRIDE COMES HOME, THE: Claudette Colbert—Further proof that an outstanding star won't always draw them in. Picture pleased generally but the cash drawer said the lowest gross in more than 4 months.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

DRIFT FENCE: Larry Crabbe, Katharine De Mille—One of the most satisfactory westerns we have had in a long time. It pleased the action fans and also those who are more conservative in tastes. It should do good business in almost any situation.—George E. Copenhaver, High School Theatre, Damascus, Va. Small town and rural patronage.

FLORIDA SPECIAL: Jack Oakie, Sally Eilers—Nice little entertainment aboard a special train. Something of interest all through the picture with comedy and mystery situations to hold interest. A good deal better for my audience than trade report gave it. Oakie gets a lot of laughs and is still a favorite. Running time, 66 minutes. Played August 16.—John J. Metzger, Oriental Theatre, Beaver City, Neb. Small town patronage.

GIRL OF THE OZARKS, THE: Virginia Weidler, Henrietta Crosman—Virginia Weidler's first starring picture makes one thing certain. She's a great trouper, and if we were Paramount we'd make absolutely sure she got only the best of material with a good supporting cast. If they do right by her, she might become their most valuable star. The audience is already her friend. Now go to it, Paramount, and give her the best you can. Played August 21-22.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

HANDS ACROSS THE TABLE: Carole Lombard, Fred MacMurray—An exceptionally fine picture. We played it old, but on account of the numerous good reports on it. I would say next to "Trail" Paramount's best for the present season.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

SOAK THE RICH: Walter Connolly, Mary Taylor —The title of this evidently kept the rich people away and most of the poor people stayed home to sympathize with them. However, those who came felt that they must have been rich for they surely got soaked. It was the smallest and most dissatisfied house we have had in two years. Played July 9-10.—George E. Copenhaver, High School Theatre, Damascus, Va. Small town and rural patronage.

TOO MANY PARENTS: Billy Lee, Frances Farmer —Played along side "Private Number." There were those who said they enjoyed it the better of the two. Very good, anyway, and together we had a nigh perfect show. Played August 14-15.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE, THE: Sylvia Sidney, Henry Fonda, Fred MacMurray—By far the biggest business we have experienced in the 10 years we have been in this business. No special advertising campaign, either. We had the first checker in more than six years on this one, but there was plenty for both sides. Ideal show for small town. A sort of glorified western.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE, THE: Henry Fonda, Sylvia Sidney, Fred MacMurray—I do not believe that the merit of the picture is as great as the box-office here and elsewhere would indicate. It's some different. The color adds attraction. Yet, it is overdrawn in places. Our patrons objected to the extremely modernized version of "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine." Perhaps, we people here in southwestern Virginia, near the setting of the story, expect too much. Anyhow, it drew them in and, after all, that counts.—George E. Copenhaver, High School Theatre, Damascus, Va. Small town and rural patronage.

TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE: Fred MacMurray, Sylvia Sidney, Henry Fonda—And did they eat it up? Bought it flat much to the disappointment of Paramount, who, nevertheless, found it necessary to check it from the outside. It is a swell picture and a grand box office attraction. Only one objection. Sylvia Sidney certainly cannot cry prettily. Her emotional scenes almost spoiled the show. Running time, 106 minutes. Played August 9-11.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

RECKLESS WAY, THE: Marian Nixon, Kane Richmond—Deah, deah. Hollywood is exposed again. The sweet little goil spurns love for the bright lights only to realize in reel six that fame ain't what it's cracked up to be. Our patrons' remarks concerning this film are unprintable.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Republic

CAPPY RICKS RETURNS: Robert McWade, Florine McKinney—Good action picture that pleased all who saw it. Business fair. Running time, 66 minutes. Played July 6-8.—Beatty & Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Canada. Small town and rural patronage.

COMIN' 'ROUND THE MOUNTAIN: Gene Autry, Ann Rutherford—These are the subjects that fill up the empty spots in a small town that has now entered on its seventh year of drouth and poor prices for wheat. Very good drawing card, but why so short if they are not on a double bill, which very few small towns can afford to have, especially in Western Canada.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Canada. Small town and country patronage.

GUNS AND GUITARS: Gene Autry, Dorothy Dix, Smiley Burnette—Agreeably western entertainment that should satisfy on a Friday-Saturday date. Autry's loyal following came in full force and gave the picture a satisfactory response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

LAWLESS NINETIES: John Wayne, Ann Rutherford—Excellent as are most Wayne pictures. Running time, 60 minutes. Played August 21-22.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

LAUCHING IRISH EYES: Phil Regan, Evalyn Knapp—Right up the alley for a small town. Good comedy, music and a special appeal to ordinary folks. Play this and meet your patrons going out with a smile. Everybody whistling the theme song.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Canada. Small town and country patronage.

SINGING COWBOY, THE: Gene Autry—This was not produced on a large scale, but how the western fans ate it up. Comedy, music, a few thrills and spills and they come out telling you how good it was. After playing some of the million dollar babies we small town exhibitors have to shoot in a western to make up the loss. Looks like the box office will be hit by a large number of so-called specials this year. Look over your list. Running time, 58 minutes. Played August 1.—John J. Metzger, Oriental Theatre, Beaver City, Neb. Small town patronage.

"Herald" as Text Book

From the school field, currently looked upon as an increasingly important factor in motion picture affairs, comes the following expression over the signature of George E. Copenhaver, principal-manager of the Damascus, Va., High School:

"I have been helped much by your publication. It has been my main point of reference since I became the principal-manager of the High School Theatre about fifteen months ago.

"Our theatre is somewhat unique, since it is operated solely for the benefit of the school and we show the best of sound pictures right in our river-rock school auditorium. In our town of approximately two thousand population there is no other theatre and we have a very good rural section to draw from.

"At this time I am also writing a few contributions for 'What the Picture Did for Me.' This section has helped me greatly. I thank you for the splendid service you are rendering."

TICKET TO PARADISE: Roger Pryor, Wendy Barry—Better than "$1,000 a Minute." Roger Pryor undoubtedly has no regrets for signing with this company as the stories given him have been far superior to those of his major company assignments. Fine audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

$1,000 A MINUTE: Roger Pryor, Leila Hyams—Good program picture, but why does Republic have such short features? This picture has plenty of action which goes over 100 per cent in a small town show. If you don't run double bills, you have to make a good program from larger number of short subjects.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Canada. Small town and country patronage.

RKO Radio

DANCING PIRATE, THE: Charles Collins, Steffi Duna—Good enough for any theatre, anywhere. Beautiful color effects. Plenty of action. Good singing and dancing. An unusually good production. Suitable for any theatre. Played August 8.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

DANCING PIRATE, THE: Charles Collins, Steffi Duna—First feature length musical in Technicolor. Personally I enjoyed every moment of this beautiful picture. Color far ahead "Trail of the Lonesome Pine." A good story, good music, beautiful settings, but absolutely no drawing power. The poorest trailer I have ever seen on a good picture. Hope the next will do better. Running time, 86 minutes. Played August 12-14.—John J. Metzger, Oriental Theatre, Beaver City, Neb. Small town patronage.

FOLLOW THE FLEET: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—Good picture, but warm spell kept them away. No fault of the picture. You can't sell ice-cream to the Eskimos.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

HIS MAJESTY BUNKER BEAN: Owen Davis, Jr., Louise Latimer—Another picture that RKO bet their money and mine on unknown names. Consequently, the poorest business that we have ever experienced on a Sunday opening. If this is worth anything to you exhibitors do not expect too much.—W. H. Brenner. Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

M'LISS: Anne Shirley, John Beal—Was afraid of this one for Saturday, but a good many among the rural population have read the story and a better turn-out than anticipated. No complaints and many nice comments. Played August 8.—John J. Metzger, Oriental Theatre, Beaver City, Neb. Small town patronage.

MURDER ON THE BRIDLE PATH: James Gleason, Helen Broderick—An excellent little murder mystery that is strong on the comedy. Helen Broderick does very well as the sleuthing friend of Inspector Piper (James Gleason). The folks enjoyed this fine.—Played August 21-22.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SILLY BILLIES: Wheeler and Woolsey, Dorothy Lee—The sort of entertainment most patrons expect on bargain nights and usually get.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

TOP HAT: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—Best picture yet made by these two stars. Has everything to please almost any kind of patronage. Old but excellent. Played August 22.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

Supreme

ALIAS JOHN LAW: Bob Steele—Average Steele western. Biggest complaint on his pictures is fact that audience laughs every time five-foot Bob licks two and three six-foot bad men. Played August 14-15.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

EVERYMAN'S LAW: Johnny Mack Brown—This did not please the fans Brown has made since becoming a western star. They thought the story unconvincing.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

LAST OF THE WARRENS: Bob Steele—Although Bob Steele does not have a great deal of box office value at our action house, his westerns seem to be appreciated. This, his latest, received a very nice audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

CAPTAIN JANUARY: Shirley Temple, Guy Kibbee—The "other" salesmen say that Temple is slipping. I offer in evidence this to the contrary: "Captain January" did 20 per cent more than any other Temple and we have played every one except the last release. This picture gave us the third highest gross we have ever had. No percentage so we bought Mama a new Frigidaire.—L. V. Mergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

CAPTAIN JANUARY: Shirley Temple, Guy Kibbee—The usual pleasing picture we always expect from Shirley. Good story and several good songs and dances. Ran this during a carnival and baseball tournament and the little girls all came, but the merry-go-round and rides proved too great a counter attraction for the boys. Pleased all who came, however. Running time, 77 minutes. Played August 7-9. —Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan.

CHARLIE CHAN AT THE CIRCUS: Warner Oland—The circus element was appealing to the children. Fair picture, a little better than the average Charlie Chan production. Played August 1.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN AT THE CIRCUS: Warner Oland—A very good Chan series. We've played better. Double billed it with a western.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

CONNECTICUT YANKEE, A: Will Rogers, Myrna Loy, Maureen O'Sullivan—This did a fine Friday-Saturday business. The best we have had for those nights this summer except the fight pictures. Being a costume play, it did not please as much as most of Rogers pictures. More than five years old, I was surprised at the exceptional sound. We did 50 per cent more this time than we did in 1931.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

CONNECTICUT YANKEE: Will Rogers—These reissues are all the same. No business. Have tried several and not a one made any money. Played July 14.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

CONNECTICUT YANKEE, A: Will Rogers, Myrna Loy, Maureen O'Sullivan—Ran this during the peak of the heat wave and not even Will Rogers could bring them in. This is his poorest picture, but he is such a favorite that it seemed to please. Running time, 85 minutes. Played August 12-13.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

COUNTRY DOCTOR, THE: Dionne Quintuplets, Jean Hersholt—Fine show to extraordinary business. Fifth highest gross on record here. Twentieth Century-Fox certainly gave us the B. O. shows on its 1935-36 line-up. I used six of the major companies this year and Fox supplied seven out of the 10 highest grosses.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

COUNTRY DOCTOR, THE: Jean Hersholt, Dionne Quintuplets—A splendid picture. The story was good. All those people who expected to pay their money for a glmpse or two of five tiny babies in as many small beds were pleasantly surprised. It is a strong picture without them. It mixes pathos and humor in such a way as to appeal to everyone—and those babies—to see them on the screen is to love them. A most satisfactory picture which every theatre should present as a special treat. Played August 17-18.—George E. Copenhaver, High School Theatre, Damascus, Va. Small town and rural patronage.

EVERY SATURDAY NIGHT: June Lang, Thomas Beck—Disappointed in this. Quite the weakest show we have had from Fox this season. Had I seen it before playing would not have used. Not awfully bad, but with a selective contract one should pass this.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

FIRST BABY, THE: Johnny Downs, Shirley Deane —Humorous story of a young couple and their in-law trouble. Johnny Downs does splendidly as the young father. Only fair business, however. Played August 19-20.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

GENTLE JULIA: Jane Withers, Tom Brown—This one made a grand hit with the rather limited turnout. Played just ahead of the county fair and believe that hurt the gate. Not having heard much about this one, I was more than pleased with the picture and the roars of laughter it brought forth gave evidence of a well entertained audience. By far the best from this little star.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Casson, Minn. General patronage.

GENTLE JULIA: Jane Withers—The cash customers thought this was okay and the box office statement proves it. Played July 7.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

GENTLE JULIA: Jane Withers, Tom Brown—A small town natural. Jane Withers as the heroine of Booth Tarkington's novel made the audience forget the heat, crop failure and grasshoppers. That little lady is fast becoming a favorite here and she can certainly act the part of the average, not too angelic, live wire kiddie. Running time, 63 minutes. Played August 5-6.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

GENTLE JULIA: Jane Withers, Tom Brown, Marsha Hunt—This is one of those folksy little pictures that Twentieth Century-Fox is so adept at producing. All of the varied characters of a small town in the good old days are presented in a lively, if none too original, story which is somewhat remiscent of "Ah, Wilderness!" Be sure to note that Jane Withers is not Gentle Julia, a character portrayed by Marsha Hunt. Business and audience response excellent.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

IN OLD KENTUCKY: Will Rogers—Good picture. Pleased everyone. Good box office. Running time, 84 minutes. Played July 23-25.—Beatty & Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Canada. Small town and rural patronage.

IN OLD KENTUCKY: Will Rogers—Old but good and they still do better than average business by 100 per cent and that goes for the other Rogers picture, "Steamboat Round the Bend." Every exhibitor should play them if he has not done so.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kan. Small town patronage.

IN OLD KENTUCKY: Will Rogers—Did not have a Fox contract last year. Picked the Rogers and Temples up after all surrounding towns had played them. Venture to say I did as much business as some of the theatres playing near me several months previous which goes to show there are still hundreds of people who do not get to see certain good pictures because they are not brought to the local theatre. Running time, 90 minutes. Played August 18-20.—John J. Metzger, Oriental Theatre, Beaver City, Neb. Small town patronage.

KING OF BURLESQUE: Warner Baxter, Alice Faye—Good picture, but only average business. If your customers like musicals, play it. For me, it was just a program picture.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kan. Small town patronage.

KING OF BURLESQUE, THE: Warner Baxter—It has almost everything to please the average movie fan. Plenty of singing, comedy and action. I rate it as above the average film. Played August 15.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

MESSAGE TO GARCIA: John Boles, Wallace Beery—As many other exhibitors have reported, this is no draw and it is hard to explain why. A great cast and an outstanding production in every way. Be sure to play it, but don't expect to overwork the ushers.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

O'MALLEY OF THE MOUNTED: George O'Brien, Irene Ware—Pretty good Mountie story. Did a bit better than expected. Played August 11.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

POOR LITTLE RICH GIRL, THE: Shirley Temple—This little girl drew them in and sent them away satisfied as usual. She may not make the biggest pictures, but they have what it takes for a spot like ours. Running time, 79 minutes. Played August 16-17.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Ore. Small town patronage.

PRIVATE NUMBER: Loretta Young, Robert Taylor—Very fine picture with good box office strength. Played August 14-15.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

PROFESSIONAL SOLDIER: Victor McLaglen, Freddie Bartholomew—Used this with the fight pictures and the gross was high, but on account of the latter. This is a dandy show, however, and made a real hit here.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

THANKS A MILLION: Dick Powell, Ann Dvorak —A very good musical which did only average business. Not worth the rental charged me. Musicals, no matter how good, fail to get any extra business for me.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kan. Small town patronage.

THIS IS THE LIFE: Jane Withers—A good program picture. Withers is getting a following. Did 40 per cent more business than "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town," which was played a week before.—Walter Hohlfeld, Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kan. Small town patronage.

United Artists

BREWSTERS MILLIONS: Jack Buchanan, Lili Damita—Another picture I played real late, but nevertheless still good. Saturday crowd enjoyed it. Story well known and there is plenty of music, dancing and comedy in the picture. Played August 15.—John J. Metzger, Oriental Theatre, Beaver City, Neb. Small town patronage.

CALL OF THE WILD, THE: Clark Gable, Loretta Young, Jack Oakie—Too good. Played third run in town and most people had seen it, this being an old release. I'd like to get something off my chest right now. A few of the local exhibitors (around Cincinnati) rib me about reporting on such late pictures. Being a small house and selling at low admissions, naturally, we are months behind release dates. But I like to believe that other exhibitors are in the same boat and that sometimes get a little help from our reports. How about it? Anyone care to drop a line and let us know? P. S. The boys who do the kidding all agree that "What the Picture Did" department gives them a load of help in booking. But, I have yet to see a report from any of them. Running time, 91 minutes. Played August 23-25.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

DARK ANGEL, THE: Fredric March, Merle Oberon, Miriam Hopkins—Another good picture that did not do business. Needed some comedy relief to lighten it up. Running time, 105 minutes. Played August 13-15.—Beatty & Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Canada. Small town and rural patronage.

MELODY LINGERS ON, THE: Josephine Hutchinson, George Houston—The audience response on this picture was much better than we anticipated. Its appeal is completely feminine.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

THUNDER IN THE EAST: Charles Boyer, Merle Oberon—Every one who stayed awake through "Feather in Her Hat" enjoyed this picture. One of the few "different pictures" that is different. Running time, 72 minutes. Played August 19-20.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

Universal

DON'T GET PERSONAL: Sally Eilers, James Dunn—A much better picture than I expected. In fact, one of the best program shows from Universal this year. Drew about average business when I expected considerably less.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

LOVE BEFORE BREAKFAST: Carole Lombard, Preston Foster—Carole Lombard is at last beginning to mean something at our box office without the assistance of a big name actor. This picture permits her to be comically sophisticated. Our patrons loved it.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

PAROLE: Ann Preston, Henry Hunter—These two excellent players surrounded with a lot of folks that can do their stuff, coupled up with interesting story, gives, besides good entertainment, the movie fans an insight into the inner workings of prison parole. Business good two days middle of week.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

SHOW BOAT: Irene Dunne, Allan Jones—Good but not colossal.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

SUTTER'S GOLD: Edward Arnold—One of the finest pictures of the kind to reach the screen. Just why they stayed away from this one is more than I can figure out. You would naturally expect lovers of western pictures to fall for the title of "Sutter's Gold," but still it failed to click. Played on a Wednesday-Thursday-Friday. No doubt will go better on a Saturday, but too high price for even a two-day run. Played August 5-7.—John J. Metzger, Oriental Theatre, Beaver City, Neb. Small town patronage.

Warner Brothers

BOULDER DAM: Ross Alexander, Patricia Ellis—Mighty good action picture with thrills, romance and tragedy. The shots of Boulder Dam are excellent and my patrons liked it. Personally, I would say that Warner Bros. are super-optimists if they think they can make a star of Patricia Ellis. Ross Alexander is good. Running time, 70 minutes. Played August 19-20.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

GREEN PASTURES, THE: Rex Ingram—Although this picture received divided comments, that it is a splendid production and capably enacted and produced goes without saying. Business here was above expectations, and although some patrons considered it sacrilegious, the majority enjoyed it. If the minority had accepted it in the spirit in which it was produced, a reverent conception of the negro's belief that heaven and earth as depicted in the Bible was similar to their every-day life, they perhaps would have enjoyed it better. But they didn't stop to think of that. Another thing, some patrons are so accustomed to the usual romantic dramas that when something unusual and different comes along, they hesitate to accept it. Warners deserve all the credit in the world for having the courage to produce this picture, regardless of patrons' reactions. Running time, 93 minutes. Played August 16-19.—Ralph Cokain, Indiana Theatre, Marion, Ind. General patronage.

I MARRIED A DOCTOR: Pat O'Brien, Josephine Hutchinson—This is really a good show and was well received. The story was real and interesting. It was full of the human element. You can't go wrong with this one. Played July 31-August 1.—George E. Copenhaver, High School Theatre, Damascus, Va. Small town and rural patronage.

I MARRIED A DOCTOR: Pat O'Brien, Josephine Hutchinson—An excellent feature from the novel "Main Street" by Sinclair Lewis. Pat O'Brien gives his best performance in this one. Josephine Hutchinson is very good while the small town citizens couldn't be better. Very satisfactory comments for. believe it or not, this is the kind of picture the small town audience wants to see. Running time, 83 minutes. Played August 1-2.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

I MARRIED A DOCTOR: Pat O'Brien, Josephine Hutchinson—From the story "Main Street." A swell small town story that pleased immensely. Business picked up after first night. Every town has a cast of characters just exactly like the picture. Dad Jenkins of Neligh wanted us to send in more reports. If Dad ever passes our way and don't stop in I'll send my subscription direct to the home office. How about it? Played July 12-13.—John J. Metzger, Oriental Theatre, Beaver City, Neb. Small town patronage.

SATAN MET A LADY: Warren William, Bette Davis—The splendid cast and story drew well the first day, but the picture was such that we hardly took in enough to pay for the electricity we used the second day. It is a shame Warners even released it because it will hurt them, their stars and the exhibitors. Running time, 74 minutes. Played August 9-10.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Ore. Small town patronage.

SONS O' GUNS: Joe E. Brown, Joan Blondell—Nothing wrong with this one. It's a real good comedy. Brown is in top form. Played August 23-24.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

J. C. JENKINS—HIS COLYUM

Neligh, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

Yesterday the weather man said "much cooler tomorrow." He was right about it. The mercury was up to 110, and today it has gone down to 109. Anybody can guess on the weather. We believe it was Mark Twain who once said, "Everybody talks about the weather but no one seems to be able to do anything about it."

This middlewest has had 40 successive days that the mercury has ranged from 98 to 116 with not enough rain to wet an undershirt, except in a very few spots about the size of a dishpan, and yet some writers contend that the middlewest will harvest at least a third of a corn crop. We don't know where they get their information. It must be that our knowledge of proportion has been sadly neglected, for we have found in our travels west of the Mississippi river that one field out of fifty may have a little corn and that the other forty-nine will yield little but fodder, if anything at all. Crop prospects may be fine back east, we don't know, but out here we do know, and when this country loses a corn crop all lines of business are bound to be affected.

Both Dakotas are burned up. A large part of Minnesota is in the same condition. Outside of the irrigated districts, the Nebraska corn crop is practically gone. The same is true of most of Kansas and a large part of Missouri, unless they have had rain since we were there, and we have seen no reports of rain. We are told that some seed companies are offering $5 a bushel for seed corn.

This price ought to be fine for the fellow who has seed corn to sell, but, unfortunately, very few have. This isn't a pessimistic view; it's simply a statement of a fact.

If the HERALD will permit us to do so, we'd like to thank all of you boys for the many letters (you didn't write us). Some of you did. That boy up at Appleton, Minnesota, gave us a good panning for not calling on him, and he was right about it, but he failed to remember that the heat was so intense that we were on the verge of heat prostration and we were trying to get to a lake where we could cool off and so we didn't call on anybody who wasn't on a direct road. We became so dizzy we could hardly drive April Shower, but one fellow said that was nothing, for we are dizzy all the while. He must have been following this colyum. But, anyhow, we wish you all lots of good luck.

Last night we hobbled down to the Moon theatre to see Kay Francis in "The White Angel." This picture is a war picture and Miss Francis played the part of Florence Nightingale and she played it very ably, too. Some there are who don't care for war pictures, and some don't care for gangster pictures, but to us they both have a certain element of education in them that we believe the public needs. We can better understand the workings of the underworld and the horrors of war by visualizing them on the screen than by any other way. Newspapers tell us, but the screen educates us.

Time was when producers regarded "triangle" subjects as subjects for entertainment, but they only entertained the gum-chewing Lizzies and hairoil Charlies, and they disgusted the better thinking element of the people and the producers have come to recognize that.

A picture of a married man making love to some other man's wife is neither entertaining nor educational, and it is only appealing to the baser minds of an American audience.

It isn't our belief that pictures should be strictly educational, not at all, but should be built largely for their entertainment value, but it is our belief that every picture should contain at least some educational value, for we regard the screen as the world's greatest educational factor. Travelogues and newsreels prove this.

But then, maybe we don't know anythink about it. Some will say we don't, but we have always held to the view that every man had a right to his opinion, regardless, and before we leave the subject we would like to again say that it is our opinion that "The White Angel" will prove to be acceptable entertainment, and we believe also that you will agree with us that Miss Francis plays the part of Florence Nightingale very nicely. And now, Brother Jones will please take up the collection.

Here is one that you mathematicians can figure on.

If it rained for forty days and forty nights, as the Bible says it did, and if it hasn't rained here for forty days and forty nights, as we say it hasn't; and if an alley cat has some Angora kittens; and if a bullfrog starts crooning on the radio, how long will it take the grasshoppers to finish eating up our wire fence? Remember to send a carton with each answer. No carton, no answer.

ODEON CIRCUIT'S 200 CINEMAS TARGET OF LIMITATION POLICY

Oscar Deutsch Opens Three New Theatres with Total Capacity of 5,000; Will Continue Chain Expansion Plan

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

Real target of the two year old agitation by the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association to limit the erection of new cinemas, Oscar Deutsch of the Odeon Circuit, undeterred by the well-sounding word "redundancy," and even by its every-day synonym, overbuilding, has in five years created a theatre chain now numbering just under two hundred establishments.

This week he opened three new Odeons, at Southall, Oldham and Ramsgate, with a total capacity of over 5,000. Once before in its history the Odeon organization reached three a week, but that was before the building limitation policy of the C.E.A. reached its present rumored efficiency.

At this very moment over 30 more Odeons are in various stages of construction and there seems no obvious reason why Deutsch, who has all the money he wants, from the Halifax Building Society, chiefly, it is said, should not go on until his chain is as big as that of GB or ABC—and a great deal more modern.

Has Product Tie

With a product tie to United Artists based on an investment in Odeon by that concern which has never been exactly defined, Deutsch may still be affected, like all other independent theatre interests, by the approaching establishment of a Metro-Gaumont-Twentieth Century-Fox identity here, and he becomes an increasingly important factor to other production interests with that problem facing them.

A trade joke current these past two years is that Deutsch builds theatres in rural districts where the population cannot be expected to reach cinema density for a very long time, but, in fact, in making his Odeons features of development schemes in new residential areas, Deutsch has not only reduced his construction costs, but in frequent instances has proved that he can draw paying audiences from the beginning, at the expense of adjacent heavily populated areas linked by road or rail to his sites.

Fulminate the C. E. A. as it may, Deutsch will continue to grow and, in his present stage of growth, to loom large in the thoughts of those whose ponderings in general at this time are concerned with just how the Schenck-Ostrer deal will finally shape and just what other distributors and other theatres owning combines will do about it.

Gets Grand National

Announced by R. P. Baker and Basil Dean from a chronmium and steel board room table graced also by the unusual presence of Stephen Courtauld, financial support and fairy godfather of the Associated Talking Pictures and Associated British Film Distributors enterprises, the releasing contract arranged by the latter company for E. Alperson's Grand National output seemed a good story to the trade press representatives among the thirty or more film scribes who had squeezed in to hear the big news.

BRITISH TO FOUND ANNUAL AWARDS

The British Institute of Cinematography has worked out a system on annual film awards similar to that of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences in Hollywood. A gold medal for production of the best non-British picture is included among the awards to be made, which will be for the best film, direction, art direction, photography, recording, acting, editing and the best contribution to directing technique.

Not so impressed were the national paper representatives when it quickly appeared that the possibility of a reciprocal arrangement whereby Grand National gave a steady release to ATP films in America was likely to remain a possibility. True that Mr. Alperson was taking two of the new pictures from ATP's Ealing studio back to the States with him, but specifically, said Baker and Dean, there was no contract for an American release.

Some time in the future, it seems, Mr. Alperson may send one or two of his star producers to help Ealing learn how, but in this present the only contract is one by which ABFD straightway become British distributors for GN, with a guarantee from the latter of thirty-four pictures before July 31, 1937, a similar number in the second year of the two years' contract, and a guarantee from ABFD of a minimum payment to GN in the two years of $2,000,000.

Important in the deal is that it gives ABFD, now at the end of their releasing contract for Republic, a fifty-two weeks a year film supply from a promising American source. Understood, said Mr. Dean, was that reciprocal release for ATP in America would immediately follow.

Exhibitors to Finance Production

British exhibitors will meet Sept. 9 to consider a scheme for participation and flotation of a company called the Independent Exhibitors Distributing company, organized by Capt. A. F. Dixey with capital of £100,000 and a production program of 21 features annually by various independent producers.

This is an outgrowth of a plan for cooperative production confidentially discussed at the C. E. A. convention at Eastbourne a few weeks ago. Although the C. E. A. cannot be officially connected with this or any other similar venture, Theodore H. Fligelstone, president of the exhibitors' association, and other C. E. A. leaders are believed interested and will attend the meeting.

The proposal calls for independent exhibitors to contribute 25 per cent of the capital, which would work out between £50 and £100 per theatre provided all of the independents in the Kingdom joined up. No further capital obligation on the theatre operator would be necessary. Neither would it be obligatory for the exhibitor to take the product. The inducement which is dangled, however, takes the form of promised lower rentals because of promised lower distribution overhead.

"Reciprocity" Agreement Is Not a Part of the Associated Film Industries and the Grand National Releasing Co. Tieup

The scheme provides that the chairman of the company will be an exhibitor and three other theatremen directors,

Production tieups claimed to have been arranged already include Associated Artists, recently floated by Leslie Howard and Dudley Murphy, for six a year; two with Paul Robeson, from Ensign Prod.; six Liberty Films, including two "supers"; three from Bebe Daniels and Ben Lyon and three or four from Franco London, producers of "Guilty Melody."

Financial Items

At the annual meeting of Associated British Pictures decision was announced to issue the 1,800,000 ordinary shares at present in reserve, which will be offered first to existing ordinary shareholders on bonus terms.

Sound City Films, Ltd., reports a new profit of $87,705 and will pay a three per cent dividend.

Union Cinemas is expected to consolidate with its subsidiaries, Oxford and Berkshire Cinemas and National Provisional Cinemas, on the basis of a share for share exchange.

Kane to Make Three More

Robert T. Kane, on the completion of "Wings of the Morning" for New World Pictures—it is due back from Hollywood color-processing for a Royal premiere at the Piccadilly theatre on Oct. 28th—is organizing for the production of the Stanley Weyman story, "Under the Red Robe," with Conrad Veidt, Raymond Massey and a Hollywood feminine star at present unchosen. A nine weeks' shooting schedule begins in September, from a Lajos Biros-Philip Lindsay script.

In November Mr. Kane will go to work on "Cyrano de Bergerac," on a twelve weeks' studio schedule. Harry D'Arrast will direct and there is a bit of mystery about the star with the current news that he will be "an internationally famous actor and a sensational new star development." Mr. Kane has for selection scripts from Humbert Woolf, famous British poet, Lajos Biros and Arthur Wimperis.

To follow is a subject not yet announced, but which will be directed by Harold Schuster and probably star Annabella, star of "Wings of the Morning."

With the Karl Grune unit on this Schach-United Artists effort complete, it is evident that very special efforts are being made to get a result good enough for America.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1935, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parenthesis after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers. Dagger symbol indicates picture is of the 1935-36 season.

HOT DOG!

The ROAR of Leo the Lion gives way today to the BARK of a dog!

Listen! In Brockport, N. Y. a dog actually goes on trial for his life in a real court room.

M-G-M swings into action!

We have an absorbing short-subject, PETE SMITH'S "KILLER DOG" that closely parallels the case.

A print by plane to Brockport! A screening for the Judge right in his own court room! The dog's life is spared! The story with pictures crashes newspapers throughout the country!

HERE'S WHERE YOU COME IN: Contact your M-G-M Exchange without delay. Special "Foreword" footage available linking up the short-subject with the news story. Special press sheet telling you how theatres are getting EXTRA BUSINESS by capitalizing on this human-interest event. It's easy to do and it's sure-fire! This is only the first of Pete Smith's Showmanship Shorts for the new season and typical of what's to follow from M-G-M.

C. Rau and S. Evans reply to Section A, "Testing for an out-of-round commutator may be done by resting a piece of chalk on some solid, immovable support so that it just touches the surface of the commutator. By rotating the armature, the mark made by the chalk will disclose any out-of-roundness present. A solid other than chalk may be used, but it must be such as will do no damage to the commutator surface."

A. F. Sprafke says, "The way the brushes ride will tell whether or not the commutator is true or out-of-round."

P. and L. Felt reply, "If the commutator can be reached for such a test, secure the loan of a billiard cue. Let one side of its butt end rest upon the under side of the commutator and six inches or so away, let it rest upon some sort of solid support that will not move. Then slowly rotate the commutator, watching the outer end of the cue. If it does not move up and down the commutator is true. If it does, it is not true, and a simple calculation based upon the distance from its point of contact with the commutator to the fulcrum, the distance from fulcrum to end of cue, and the distance the tip of the cue moves up and down will disclose the precise amount of the fault."

Well, well! That is a new one, anyhow, and a good one, too! Also, it is workable, for the cue butt may be held in contact with the top of the commutator if its lower side cannot be reached.

D. Pollock offers a very practical method: "Get a stick of ordinary school crayon and attach it to the end of a piece of wood. I used an old hammer handle, filed flat on one side so I can hold it perfectly steady. I bored a hole of proper size in one end about half an inch deep, inserted a crayon and poured a bit of plaster paris in around it. This I keep laid away in a suitable box ready for use once each month, on the first day thereof.

"I just hold the handle against the frame while a helper rolls the armature over a few times as I advance the handle and chalk by tapping lightly with a very small hammer until a mark just begins to show. If it extends clear around on the first go-off, all is well. If not, I know there is some fault, the distance the line extends giving me a very good idea of how much it is. Some rely upon watching the brushes, but I do not regard that as reliable, for the reason that brushes cannot be so closely fitted into their holders that they can be used for a precision test in such a matter."

Excellent, Friend Pollock. Your plan also is very practical. All three thus presented involve no possible danger to the commutator. Yours is, I think, essentially what Brother Rau and Evans use, except that your chalk-in-a-stick is an improvement.

W. H. Edmonds says, "If a commutator is suspected of being out-of-round, an easy way to check up is to hold a colored pencil on some part that is solid, as a brush holder, for example, sliding it slowly forward until a mark appears upon the commutator, being careful not to use too much pressure. If the mark extends only part way around, or appears only in spots, the commutator is in urgent need of attention. If the mark is even in width and extends clear around, all is well."

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 39

(A) What is the effect of resistance in conductors? What becomes of the power consumed in overcoming resistance? Why do wires become overheated when overloaded?

(B) Describe an electrolytic condenser and tell us why it cannot be used on an a.c. circuit.

(C) Explain why working distance and diameter of projection lenses may be of large importance.

To join the Bluebook School merely send in answers. Place name and question number upon first sheet. Address F. H. Richardson, No. 3 Tudor Lane, Scarsdale, N. Y.

That, too, is good. More than 200 favored either the chalk or pencil method, but only one thought of the scheme presented by P. and L. Felt.

(B) H. B. Smith answers, "Sparking causes the commentator to roughen and pit, which will increase the sparking. Sparking causes the brushes to wear away more rapidly because of the abrasive character of surface it sets up. Sparking is evidence of improper relation between brushes and commutator, and as a consequence there is increased resistance at that point. The efficiency of the machine is therefore decreased by sparking."

T. Turk says, "I think, Mr. Richardson, the answer to this would be somewhat dependent upon the cause of the sparking. As you know, sparking may be due to several rather widely different causes. There is that induced by improper brush setting—too far advanced or retarded. This induces relatively little heat, but burns the edges of the commutator bars rapidly, as ordinarily it occurs at every bar. Of course, however, if long continued it will roughen the whole surface of the bar more or less, and will then generate a lot of heat because of poor contact. Secondly, there is the sparking caused by insufficient brush tension. This may induce sparking over the entire area of the face of the brush, or at least high resistance. If the former, then the whole surface of the commutator will be roughened very rapidly; if the latter, then the added resistance will generate heat, which means loss in input power and lowered current production. Sparking may also be due to use of a wrong kind of brush, its result being much the same as deficient tension."

THRILLS FOR YOUR EARS!

UNDER the great Acoustic Shell of the Hollywood Bowl, Leopold Stokowski conducted a memorable concert on August 17. The technical equipment used for the sound enlargement of the music was based on the revolutionary principles of Stereophonic—"third dimensional"—Sound, first successfully demonstrated by Bell Telephone Laboratories before the National Academy of Sciences on April 27, 1933, a single-channel adaptation of which is now available to theatres in commercial form as MIRROPHONIC.

MIRROPHONIC'S Living Sound DEMONSTRATED IN BOWL

Thousands are thrilled for the first time by Western Electric's new sound reproduction.

Again!—proof of the box-office value of the new dramatic sound reproduction!

In the famous Hollywood Bowl, on August 17, the thrill of a full symphony orchestra was enlarged to reach every ear in the bordering hillside, retaining every vestige of the faithfulness, the tonal purity, the undistorted quality, of the living sound itself!

The spellbound listeners, hearing this miracle of sound, enjoyed the experience that patrons will get—when your theatre is equipped with MIRROPHONIC, the perfected sound system that for the first time brings to every seat in your theatre a massive, undistorted illusion of reality itself, a true reproduction of the original sound!

MIRROPHONIC—Western Electric's epoch-making sound system—brings to exhibitors everywhere the first new large-scale money-making opportunity since Western Electric first gave sound to the silent films!

Backed by E.R.P.I.'s world-wide service facilities, and by a powerful exploitation campaign, MIRROPHONIC sets an entirely new standard of sound reproduction. An illustrated booklet will be mailed on request.

HOLLYWOOD A BROADCAST CENTER observed, "will be a boon to the studios who heretofore have been confronted with the all too numerous financial demands of stars and featured players who feel that their income is insufficient."

Radio a New Eldorado

As a result of the huge talent budget now set by advertisers for the new year, Time reports Hollywood actors are gazing "bug-eyed" with joy on the promised golden harvest.

As evidence of radio's Hollywood trend, advertising men have pointed to a dozen important programs scheduled to be regularly broadcast from Hollywood this season, in comparison with last season's four or five. Some of the programs will give Hollywood actors as much as 39 weeks of work. Programs which Time admitted produce strife in the motion picture industry were described as follows:

"Most ambitious dramatic broadcasting by cinemactors is done in the 'Lux Radio Theatre,' which started modestly two years ago as a program emanating on Sunday afternoons from Manhattan's Radio City. Policy of the program was to pick up cinemactors who had gone east for some fun. Top for an actor's appearance on the Lux programs is now $5,000.

"Last June the Lux program moved to Hollywood. In its Manhattan run, the 'Lux Theatre' had supposedly been administered by one 'Douglas Garrick,' a fictitious character created for advertising purposes. In Hollywood, the 'Lux Theatre' also had a dummy director, but this time he could walk and talk. While production was actually handled by J. Walten Thompson men, it was announced that oldtime Cinema Director Cecil B. De Mille was putting on the radio show. For his opening program from Hollywood, California's De Mille presented handsome Clark Gable and long-legged Marlene Dietrich, in a radio version of the six-year-old cinema, 'Morocco.' Miss Dietrich, whose voice is not her most celebrated asset, fascinated listeners with a mysterious whispered drawl. The Gable personality, currently one of the most popular at U. S. cinema boxoffices, registered more favorably on the air. Since then, on a talent budget whose maximum is said to be $15,000 a week, Lux has favored the listeners of the country with an hour of high-priced acting each week from a cross-section of the cinema's most glittering stars. Since radio advertisers are quick to drop a 'flop,' the Lux show clearly demonstrates that certain cinemactors make excellent salesmen for certain products. In the coming season, Lux plans to offer listeners such Hollywood celebrities as Jack Oakie, Helen Twelvetrees, Lily Pons, Joe E. Brown, Ginger Rogers, Brian Ahearne.

"On the heels of the Lux hour, the 'Camel Caravan' trekked to Hollywood for a new start last June 30. Resulting show was a 'clambake' (radiomen's term for a program with many unrelated items), featured two bands, vocalists, and, as master of ceremonies, Author Rupert Hughes whose flat, querulous voice suggests Donald Duck's. There were cinema stars in short, glamorous radio dramatizations of crowd-pleasing plays and pictures. So well had Clark Gable helped launch Lux in California that he was signed to appear in Camel's opening Hollywood show at the same price Lux had paid him. 'Men in White' was the Gable vehicle, British Cinemactress Madeleine Carroll the Gable leading lady, $6,250 the Gable fee.

"Easy-going and informal, Clark Gable is credited with breaking the Hollywood taboo against permitting audiences at broadcasts. He made his radio debut two years ago. Since then, Gable's radio appearances have been judiciously spaced. Like most stars, he is as well pleased with radio as radio is with him. The work is light, two or three rehearsals and a performance from a written script. The monetary windfall comes in handy, even for one who earns some $150,000 a year from screen work.

Gable Programs Limited

"By the terms of his Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer contract, Actor Gable may now make four annual commercial radio appearances. This year's two remaining broadcasts have already been engaged by Camel. This week, Actor Gable was thoughtfully thumbing the scripts of 'The Last Mile,' 'What Price Glory,' 'Little Old New York,' 'Journey's End' and 'One Sunday Afternoon.' From this list of dramas will come the radio adaptations used by Gable in his appearances in the Camel hour between now and Christmas. After that, any other sponsors who can pay his price may bid for Actor Gable's services. The Camel program also has in store for its listeners Joan Crawford and Franchot Tone, Myrna Loy, Jean Harlow, Marion Davies, Herbert Marshall, Gloria Swanson.

"Maxwell House Showboat is noteworthy in the new season's radio alignment chiefly because, beginning next fortnight, it will be playing on N. B. C. 'opposite' the redoubtable Major Edward Bowes, still Radio's No. 1 attraction with his famed Amateur Night. Under the sponsorship of Walter P. Chrysler, Major Bowes will move his show from Sunday to Thursday nights, from N. B. C. to C. B. S. There the bland master of ceremonies of the amateur hour will compete for listeners with a 'Showboat' captained by Yale's Singer Lancelot ("Lanny") Ross.

Cantor a Good Salesman

"Texaco opens its autumn radio season next fortnight with banjo-eyed Comedian Eddie Cantor and his company of funnymen on C. B. S. Reflecting the satisfied attitude of most advertisers toward their cinema salesmen, Texaco's George W. Vos announced: "Mr. Cantor is more than a comedian. He realizes that his job is to sell Texaco products to the public, and he brings us a sound background of actual business experience and an unusual knowledge of sales-promotion technique—a rare trait among so-called 'show people.'

"Packard announced that the cinema's Dancer Fred Astaire would represent its cars this autumn in 26 weekly one-hour broadcasts originating in Hollywood. Now a good singer, versatile Actor Astaire will vocalize, dance, read funny lines, play the piano, other instruments, for a reported weekly $5,000. Light-footed Fred Astaire got his radio start last year with Lucky Strike.

"Hollywood's child actors have also benefited from the radio boom. Though cautious handlers kept Clark Gable's female box-office counterpart, little Shirley Temple, off the air, 13-year-old Jackie Cooper last week landed a $10,000 contract, had to have it approved by a court. For Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Coal Company young Actor Cooper will next month make a series of recorded programs with such of his older Hollywood colleagues as Fred & Paula Stone, Polly Moran, Patsy Kelly, Dolores Costello Barrymore, Hoot Gibson, Jack Holt, Elissa Landi. For working in Jackie's program, Cinemactress Anne Shirley has already been promised a $600 fee.

"Even a Hollywood Gossip, Hearst's Louella O. Parsons, landed herself in the big radio money two years ago as guiding spirit of Campbell Soup's 'Hollywood Hotel.' Beside this weekly program, the soup-makers present an annual Yuletide broadcast in which Actor Lionel Barrymore (for a reputed $1,250) wheezes, growls, grunts and snuffles his way through the part of Scrooge in a dramatization of Dickens' 'Christmas Carol.' Last week's 'Hollywood Hotel' offered an adaption of 'Dodsworth' with Walter Huston and Ruth Chatterton. Next week: Norma Shearer as Juliet, to a radio Romeo as yet unchosen.

Free Talent Threatened

"If for no other reason, 'Hollywood Hotel' is notable because it is credited with having wangled $500,000 worth of free cinema talent since its inception, through the persistence of Gossip Parsons. Paying no money to weekly guest stars, Miss Parsons is supposed to bring ungenerous cinemactors into line through their fear of unfavorable publicity in the Hearst papers. One of Hollywood's most derided and dreaded characters, chunky, many-chinned 'Lolly' Parsons gives in her column an astounding daily

CUBA MAY COMPEL VAUDEVILLE ACTS

A proposed law under which motion picture theatres would be compelled to show variety or musical vaudeville acts featuring Cuban artists and musicians has been drawn up in the Cuban Congress according to a report to the Department of Commerce from assistant commercial attache Charles H. Ducote in Havana. The acts would be required to be shown at least once a day and the cost would be borne on a fifty-fifty basis by the theatre operators and the film distributors.

show of uncritical gush. Great and good friend of William Randolph Hearst, Miss Parsons also professed great affection for Hollywood's grande dame, Cinemactress Mary Pickford.

"Last March the Pickford-Parsons, friendship struck a reef because Miss Pickford had begun paying real money ($1,000 to $3,000) for guest appearances on her 'Parties at Pickfair' program in the interest of National Ice Advertisers Inc. 'Lolly' Parsons threatened to blackball anyone who showed up at 'Parties at Pickfair.' This epic controversy was terminated when the Pickford program went off the air. Meanwhile, under the guidance of famed Radio Producer William (Bill) Bacher, a onetime dentist, with Crooner Dick Powell and 'Lolly' Parsons as continuing talent, Campbell's clambake goes serenely on its way.

"Latest of Radio's so-called 'Crossley Reports,' which attempt to determine the percentage of radio listeners attending a certain program during its time on the air, gives Major Bowes a rating of 27%. Nearest rival, Lux Radio Theatre, had 17.4% of listeners queried."

Exhibitor Writes Protest

The motion picture fan magazines are encouraging the radio appearances of Hollywood stars, asserts Earle M. Holden, Capitol Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., in a letter to the HERALD this week. Mr. Holden writes:

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD:

The fan movie magazines, it seems, are trying to kill the goose that laid the golden egg. Very much so. For instance, pick up any of the later magazines, especially those that might come under the classification of being the leaders in their field. Thumb the pages and what do you find? A grand and glorious exploitation excursion into the field of radio, radio in Hollywood. The magazines now devote considerable space to Hollywood radio. They explain every detail as to how the stars prepare for their broadcasts. They explain to the reader just what program so and so will be heard on. They glory in printing great big adjectives over the advent of radio into the motion picture field, adjectives that seem to encourage instead of deplore the practice.

"Perhaps as time goes on these movie magazines will see the light of day. Perhaps, too, the stars themselves, backed by pressure from exhibitors all over the country, will see some sort of light. It may be light that has been extinguished on the marquees of theatres which once spelled these star names, but who in turning to radio let down the very idustry that started them on their way to success.

"They, too, will kill the goose that laid the golden egg. When a theatre stops exploiting a star or stars their popularity still stop. They won't even be good for radio, because it is the build-up of movie stars by the theatres throughout the land that has brought them fame and fortune, a build-up that has won them a place on a radio program.

"The radio moguls just sat back and rubbed the palms of their hands in great glee. They watched certain stars. They watched the publicity that was thrown around this and that star and, when the time was ripe, they struck. The movie star was signed for radio. They appear on big commercial programs. They care not that their pictures might be playing in certain towns and villages the same night they are on the air, as long as they can get the almighty dollar extra that radio is quite willing to pay, and why not! But in the town and village the prospective patron don't bother to go to the home town theatre that night to see John Moviestar. They can hear him on the radio. Who is left holding the bag? Well, the theatre owner, of course.

"But what about later? If Mr. John Moviestar keeps folks away from his picture that night there's only one thing Mr. Exhibitor can do. He will, of course, complain about the appearance of stars over the air injuring his business. But he can and will refuse to play any more pictures starring John Moviestar, and why should he? No one wants to play a picture that fails to draw patronage. And what might happen in that village or town can happen to hundreds all over the country. Soon John Moviestar will find himself out on a limb. Radio is not and never will be strong enough to properly publicize a star. In time even radio will not want the services of John Moviestar, and why should they? Theatres are not showing his pictures because people won't go to see them. Radio fans, however, will listen to John Moviestar for a few more broadcasts and then they, too, will lose interest in him.

"Yes the movie magazines are starting to shout the praises of radio. They have strayed from the path that has furnished them their life's blood. When a fan magazine encourages radio publicity it encourages patrons to stay away from theatres and tune in on their radios. It doesn't help the movie industry. It doesn't help the magazines, either.

"Exhibitors all over the country who are joining in a great movement to protest about the stars making radio appearances are right for once. It is to be hoped that they will stay together, that they will see this thing through. And if enough protests are raised something is going to pop out there in Hollywood. Even some of the big name directors have gone radio. They, of all people who produce pictures, appear on the radio and then wonder why people don't pay admissions to see what they produce. They probably never stopped to think that the operation of a radio for a half hour or hour's program costs less than a movie ticket.

"In this great day of stars going for radio they are writing their own finish. When exhibitors bring enough pressure to bear the stars will be put back in their place. A good slogan could be easily devised from the one about the little boy, changing it thus to read, 'Stars should be seen on the screen and not heard on the radio.'"

Very American "Show Boat" Hits In Foreign Parts

Regarding the international performance record of "Show Boat" with an interested eye, R. H. Cochrane, president of Universal Pictures Corporation, remarked this week upon some whimsical facts.

"'Show Boat,' which is doing so well in so many lands," he said, "is probably the most typically American story since 'Uncle Tom's Cabin.' And of course the world expects Hollywood to be a bit mad, so we turned the direction of it over to an Englishman, and one not even naturalized, James Whale. Of course the commercial fact is that we make all our pictures with one eye on America and the other on the rest of the world.

"The interesting result in this case is afforded in the success of this very American 'Show Boat' in some of the most remote foreign parts. It is now opening day after day in foreign countries and it is establishing new box office records.

"'Show Boat' opened at the Liberty theatre in Sydney, Australia, on June 30th, to capacity busineses. On the first day of its ninth week it played to more people than it did on the first day of its run. It is now in its tenth week and is booked solid at the Liberty until Christmas.

"At the Winter Garden in Brisbane it is playing its third capacity week. It is still playing at the Ambassadeurs theatre in Paris under the title of 'Gala Boat.'

"In Mexico City it played two standing-room-only weeks at the Olympia. It is the only picture, with one exception, to play the Metro theatre in Calcutta for more than one week, and during its two weeks there it broke all records in the theatre.

"'Show Boat' opened the Opera theatre in Buenos Aires. This is the most magnificent theatre ever built in South America and there was a big rivalry among available pictures for the honor of opening the house.

"In Rio de Janiero 'Show Boat' has just opened at the Plaza theatre, breaking all records for the first week in the face of heaviest competition.

"'Show Boat' had a record-breaking run at the Leicester Square Theatre, London, of six weeks, and it has just opened big in Oslo and in Ostend."

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

PATRONS OF THE FUTURE

Though it's a good one, theatre going is nonetheless a habit and as such must be encouraged right along through every navigable channel. And as the younger generation is to be numbered among the theatre's best friends, wise managers lose no opportunity to strengthen juvenile contacts. The child patron today is indeed the adult patron of tomorrow. Thus, the Saturday morning clubs.

High in rating, therefore, is to be placed the "Pop Eye" organization gainfully fostered by Guy Martin and his house manager, Ray Wheeler, at the Colfax Theatre, in South Bend.

How well these showmen have labored is told in the excellent article on a following page wherein the Club's importance locally is indicated by the fact that successful meetings are being held throughout the summer months, a period in which such activities are usually discontinued. The reasons for such success are not hard to find in the Martin analysis of the subject from which we quote. Writes the Round Tabler:

". . . After all, these children are our patrons of the future and I consider they have been overlooked for too long. . . We older ones are inclined to accept it (theatre going) as a matter of fact procedure and our attitude is absorbed to some extent by the younger folks. . . We, the masters of the situation have sat by and allowed circumstances to control our actions with little or no thought of this coming generation. . ."

Fingers in many directions may justly be pointed in substantiation of Martin's charges of neglect. Too true it is that insufficient consideration is given the place of the child in the theatre.

The proper organization and conduct of the juvenile club is to be included among the safer kinds of theatre insurance for future patronage.

THE SPARK AND THE SINEWS

It can hardly be denied that universal spread of general promotional activity is due in no small part to the impetus given such exploitations in the beginning by speedy theatremen. The success of tieups engineered by showmen in the early 20's opened up a new vista of high-power promotion to advertisers in other lines with the result that it's a small outfit today that doesn't endeavor to beat the drum.

The influence of the showman in community drives also has long been felt. An excellent recent example is the advertising given the city of San Antonio at the Texas Centennial expositions in Dallas and Fort Worth through the sponsorship of Interstate Theatres heads Karl Hoblitzelle and R. J. O'Donnell. The campaign credited to Raymond Willie, Interstate's San Antonio city manager, was recently told.

Your theatreman is essentially one who provides entertainment. But happily for the good of his community he does not stop there. Today's showman is looked to by local prominents for the spark and often the sinews of many civic projects that otherwise might never see the light of day.

TOUCHED WITH AWE

Not to be included among the things that rank exactly as sinecures is the getting out of regular issues of circuit house organs. Whether they be weekly or monthly, the fearsome cry of "deadline" is never silent and few are the editors whose sleep is untrammeled and brows unwrinkled.

So, kind readers, we give you, "Loew-Down," published daily for the information of Loew theatremen and turned out last week for the thousandth successive issue by ad head Oscar Doob aided in due measure by Ernie Emerling.

Deep bows touched with a bit of awe are therefore indicated in the direction of the Loew-men for a bangup job amazingly well done.

VERY CHEERFULLY, INDEED

To build in 20 short years a circuit, from one house to 200, that spans a continent is one thing. To do so and at the same time retain the services, the loyalty and affection of men who have been in the ranks since the early beginnings is another, and possibly of greater importance.

In Toronto last week at the Famous Players - Canadian convention that marked the circuit's twentieth anniversary, your Chairman, sitting with headman N. L. Nathanson, spoke of the remarkably few replacements made among his managers and the devotion to their cause. To which "N.L." replied: "We have the responsibility of watching their happiness and to see we do nothing that will break up their lives."

Copies of the above startling sentence will be forwarded cheerfully to any theatre executive to be placed above his desk and to be read out loud immediately after bawling out a manager who is doing his durndest.

"RANGERS" PREMIERE WELCOMED BY TEXANS

Director and Players Take Part In Ceremony; Texas Governor Invites Notables to Attend

With United States Senators among the guests invited personally by Governor of Texas, James V. Allred, the world premiere of Paramount's "The Texas Rangers" was put on at the Majestic Theatre, in Dallas, as the climax of a tremendous campaign executed under the supervision of Paul Short, manager.

For the opening from Hollywood came director King Vidor and players Jean Parker, Lloyd Nolan and Bennie Bartlett. They were met at the station and escorted to Ranger Hall in the Texas Centennial grounds where crowds gathered to witness the presentation of the Texas Ranger statue to the state by Vidor and the unveiling by Senator Morris J. Sheppard.

Texas Rangers Parade to Theatre

Following the ceremony, a parade to the theatre was formed led by a detachment of Texas Rangers, old-time state rangers in fighting garb and a real covered wagon of the Indian war days. National Guardsmen, Boy Scouts and other organizations were also represented in the line of march. At the theatre, celebrities were introduced over the p. a. system which broadcast the entire program. The lobby was decorated with a masked log effect to represent the Centennial Ranger Hall, set pieces were planted in the inner lobby and the foyer mirrors covered with maps of the state.

Local radio stations cooperated with coverage for four weeks ahead as did sponsored programs, local and netwide. The official Ranger song was plugged daily and the Dr. Pepper program over 29 stations also featured the song hit and distributed thousands of imprinted copies. The Kellogg Company program "Riding With the Texas Rangers" was also tied in with the food company, the cast of the radio show attending the opening in Dallas and in other spots.

The local dailies of course properly "went to town" on publicity with the Dallas Dispatch running a page one story and page streamer with photos of many of the notables. The Dallas News arranged with American Airlines to fly the print of the picture to town in a special plane named "The Texas Ranger" and another newspaper tiein was arranged to find the oldest living Texas settler. The serial also was run and newspaper representatives from Fort Worth, Houston and San Antonio were on hand for the opening.

Other tieins included display of original costumes in prominent stores, distribution of bookmarks and bulletin board notices at branch libraries and distribution in many spots of reprints of larger ads. Western Union got out jumbo telegrams and Postal Telegraph placed three teletype machines in the theatre lobby (see photo) to receive messages on the opening from all over the country. Boys and girls of house personnel all wore Ranger costumes.

Short's billing campaign was widespread blanketing city and surrounding area. Cars and busses were placarded, tire covers on cabs and bumper strips also planted with thousands of halves, one's and many sixes and 24's placed in addition to the national campaign.

Contests Highlight "Mohicans" for Vogel

Down in Memphis, Cecil E. Vogel at Loew's State for "Last of the Mohicans" planted a "role memory contest" in the Daily News, which gathered a lot of space several days before opening. Cecil also ran a song contest for three days over radio station. Both the amusement and radio sections of the press gave the film prominent mention with liberal art thrown in.

In addition to stencilling the important business corners, Vogel had a circus band truck parade town and plastered the city with 24-sheets. Tieups were made with leading merchants, window displays installed, counter cards, cutouts and throwaways planted in hotels, cigar shops and restaurants.

Gala Hollywood Premiere For "Mary of Scotland"

A gala opening was given "Mary of Scotland" by Hardie Meakin, RKO Keith's Theatre, Washington, D. C., with festivities starting early when radio announcer gave a 15-minute description of the scene at the theatre and later another period was broadcast at house with celebrities greeting the public.

As an added attraction Hardie brought the Yonkers Kilty Band to theatre for a personal appearance and entire opening was played up in papers, cracking the society, news, gravure and dramatic sections of dailies.

Hudson Previews 'Anthony Adverse' For 35 Authors

Many different ways there are to land motion picture publicity and among the unusual angles up at the top must be ranked Earl Hudson's for the advance on "Anthony Adverse" at the United Artists, in Detroit. An investigation was effected to discover those Detroit residents who are writers by profession and have had their works published either in books or in national magazines. Thirty-five were located, all qualifying under the specifications and a private screening arranged ahead for them with Alvin Hamer, famed radio book reviewer as host. Hudson says that the local papers were unaware that Detroit numbered that many distinguished writers among its citizens and as a result many excellent story breaks and pictures were secured in the news and society pages. Book angle was carried further with displays in leading book shops, star and scene stills used generously to decorate.

Radio was employed and in addition to the usual announcements for the opening day, a special broadcast was used frequently being handled as though it was coming from the rear of the theatre and describing the reactions of the audience.

For opening night, Earl put on an extra fancy Hollywood party. For this he used sunlight arcs, p.a. lobby system with popular radio announcer doing the comments, announcing arrivals of prominents and otherwise selling the highlights of the picture. By arrangement with the police department all parking was prohibited for the evening within a block of the theatre with special traffic officers assigned to handle the crowds. Other angles of the campaign were in keeping.

Standout tiein for the date at the New York Strand was a six column wide, full page style ad planted by Macy's in the Times and Herald-Tribune. Flash was illustrated with star and scene stills plugging modernized versions of the gowns and accessories in the picture, with generous mention of theatre and date. For further buildup, theatre was closed day ahead of opening for redecoration and preparation for the premiere. Inner lobby was draped in velvet and hung with original sketches from which sets were made.

World Tour for "Horizon" Show Begins in A. C.

First gun in the world-wide exploitation campaign planned by Columbia Pictures on Frank Capra's "Lost Horizon" is announced by Hy Daab, ad head, in the exhibition at the Garden Pier in Atlantic City of more than 50 original water color sketches and art camera studies representing preliminary research work and technical arrangements on the picture, to be released shortly. Exhibit is free to the public and accompanying photo shows some of the crowds taking a look.

Direct advertising tieup is effected by having visitors sign their names and addresses in special book registers provided for that purpose. Later, these persons will be notified of their home-town bookings and lists turned over to local managers to aid advance campaigns. Attendance at first week of the show was said to represent every state and many Canadian provinces. Electric sign outside building calling attention to the exhibit is the equivalent of four 96-sheet boards. With the annual Showman's Jubilee scheduled for the second week in September and the Labor Day crowds, final attendance of over 50,000 at the show is looked for.

Show entitled, "The Making of a Famous Motion Picture" is set for three weeks at the seashore preliminary to a world tour to open in Chicago in September and to cover all American key cities before the London opening in January, 1937. Schedule also calls for a showing in Sydney, Australia, some time next June.

TWO OPENINGS HELD ON 'GORGEOUS HUSSY'

Advance Drive by Washington Loew-men Creates Demand for Capital Double Premiere

With the sponsorship of the White House Correspondents' Association, the world premiere of MGM's "Gorgeous Hussy" was staged at Loew's Palace in the Capital with so strong an advance campaign by publicist Ray Bell under Carter Barron's supervision that the demand for tickets by official Washington necessitated for the first time a double premiere. First showing was at 8:30 and the second at midnight. List of notables in attendance was said to be the greatest at any such event held locally.

Much out of the ordinary publicity was promoted by Bell, typical of which was the column written by prominent sports writer devoted to sports that were popular in the days of Peggy O'Neale, the film's heroine, played by Joan Crawford. Topping this was a special feature carried by both INS and AP wire services and due to a discovery by Bell while reading the book in which the film was based. Story said the heroine was buried in an unmarked grave and on a hunch the publicist investigated to discover the grave unmarked in a local cemetery. Papers went after it sending reporters to the cemetery with Bell which brought a pip of a yarn the next day. The Loew-man is now arranging to have local organizations contribute to a tombstone fund for additional breaks.

Strong Cooperation From Papers

Helping out further, the Washington Post for the first time ran a serialization on the 12-chapter picture story distributing reprints of first chapter. The Herald went for a movielogue contest, readers asked to submit dialogue for untitled scenes from the picture. The Times hooked up on a classified contest with a distribution of Crawford autographed photos and the Daily News printed thousands of "Movie Loew-Downs" on the picture and coming Loew product.

Radio program was promoted for the opening and news shots taken. Reviews were written by prominent legislators for use by papers in other spots. Other slants included prominent debutante modeling dress worn by star in picture, heralds stuffed in fan magazines, menus imprinted, book marks and all branch libraries and displays of stills. Bell also reports four page one breaks in five days, with the society editors on all sheets running wild with names and photos of those at the opening.

Barron Host at Dinner

Preceding the festivities, a dinner was given by Carter Barron for the White House correspondents, film and drama critics and heads of the National Press Bureau. Lobby was decorated with unique display of stills and studio souvenirs, the flash playing to a steady crowd all day in advance of the first showing. Streets were jammed with platoons of extra police on hand to keep things in order. Attendance was reported to have included some 400 publishers, editors, ambassadors, ministers, attaches and other officialites.

Besides selling "Gorgeous Hussy," in fine shape for the local date, Bell's campaign also created momentum nationally for other showings and for which he rated bows from Carter Barron.

Home Town Cheers Local Girl Click

Hailed as one of the most exciting events happening recently in Scranton, the world premiere of Warner Bros. "Stage Struck" was put on at the Strand Theatre in honor of Jeanne Madden, local girl who appears in the picture with Jeanne at the opening in person to take bows. Whole town got behind the welcome to the new star and much was done.

Mayor Davis issued a proclamation setting aside the celebration as a "Jeanne Madden Day" and officially took pride in the achievement of the young star "who brought national prominence to her native city." For the occasion, house was scaled to a dollar and reported sold out two hours ahead. Police, firemen and ambulances were all on hand to cope with the crowds.

Merchants went for co-op welcome ad with papers also contributing heavily, running page one stories and photos of the opening, which was broadcast over local station in the best approved Hollywood manner.

Contests Highlight Martin's "Frisco" Date

A free trip to San Francisco and return, with hotel accommodations for three days was promoted by Guy Martin, Colfax Theatre, with the cooperation of nine South Bend merchants and planted in the News Times. Merchants were provided with "San Francisco" trip slips which were given away at each of the stores for one week at the rate of one slip for each dollar purchase. The holders of slips deposited them in locked box in lobby and person with largest number of slips at end of week received the trip.

Tieup was made with radio company and broadcasting station beginning five days ahead. Listeners had to identify name of song, picture in which it had been sung and write a fifty-word letter telling which McDonald opus they enjoyed most. Tickets were awarded winners.

Beginning opening day and through date, all local street cars carried signs front and rear with copy reading "Take this car to San Francisco and ride home free, ask motorman for details." All motormen gave riders transfer slips which when properly stamped by theatre entitled holder to free ride home after seeing picture.

Rialto Goes Marine On "Down to the Sea"

For the initial New York showing of Republic's "Down to the Sea" at Arthur Mayer's Rialto, lobby and front was transformed into a marine display. Stills from the production featuring under water scenes were used profusely with large blowups of action scenes set against a painted marine background.

Figure of authentically clad miniature diver in a glass tank (see photo) was set in the center of the circular lobby. As the diver rose from the "depths" he released air-bubbles to make the display more realistic.

Spot announcements were made over station CHWC, in addition to the regular theatre broadcast. Cards were placed in libraries and book stores, and blotters and programs were distributed to offices, cafes and shops. The theatre set up a lobby display using the August issue of Good Housekeeping with the six-page article lauding film. This was available to patrons on the lobby reading table.

Eleven by fourteen's were placed in street cabinets and in selected windows at strategic points. On the main photo display board was pointed the full-page trade ad announcing holdover engagements in key cities.

Parents and Teachers Encourage Continuation of Activities During the Vacation Months

by GUY MARTIN
Mng. Dir., Colfax, South Bend, Ind.

I trust that this outline may be of some benefit to those managers who feel as I do—regarding the importance of getting the children into our theatres; educating them to the fine masterpieces which the producers are giving the public and introducing these youngsters to the stars.

After all, these children are our future patrons and I consider that they have been overlooked far too long. I do not feel that the theatre has lost one particle of glamor. It is still the beautiful edifice and has more to show than formerly, as the advancement in pictures has been marked and the skill of the technician has made us all marvel.

We older ones are inclined to accept it all as a matter of fact procedure, and our attitude is absorbed to some extent by the younger folks. Even though box office receipts have been increased materially by the installation of Screeno, Bank Nights and other diverse legitimate gambling games, I feel that the theatre has been made less attractive by the use of such giveaways. Under the existing circumstances, it will not be easy for us to resume our showmanship when the "well runs dry."

We, the masters of the situation, have sat by and allowed circumstances to control our actions with little or no thought of this coming generation, our future theatre patrons. The great avalanche of ballyhoo must be supplanted by real showmanship. We seem to be advancing into the "forgotten army"—and have overlooked some very important details. To me the children of today represent that very thing.

If we can succeed in this, and my experience the past year has indicated it is an open venture, there seems no reason why this situation cannot be taken in hand. We must gain their confidence and by so doing, it will create a new lot of picture fans. This will be a reflection on our box office; it will add to the stars' fame, lend new interest and appeal to their diverse pictures and greatly prevent stagnation of star material.

Newspaper Co-sponsors Club

In South Bend, the Popeye the Sailor Club was inaugurated during the week of December 31, 1935, and has been running continuously since that time. The opening ceremonies were very elaborate and the co-sponsoring newspaper lent every assistance to firmly establish the club as the outstanding child organization of this city.

The South Bend News Times is the co-sponsor of the Popeye Club. Each and every week we are furnished with a gratis three column by ten inch ad, which explains the activities of that particular week's meeting. Ever since the Popeye Cartoon was originated, and this newspaper inaugurated the Cartoon strip in their columns, we have had a tie-up whereby each time a Popeye cartoon was used on our screen, the newspaper furnished gratis this same three column ten inch ad, plugging our current attraction. In return for this, theatre gave the newspaper a short flash trailer strip following the showing of the cartoon, explaining that Popeye Cartoon strips were featured daily in said paper.

With the inauguration of the Popeye Club itself, this tie-up has continued and formed the basis of our regular weekly ads. Each week, in addition to the large ad (which incidentally is not placed on the theatrical page), theatre uses a smaller one column by five inch ad on theatre page plugging the club's activities for that particular week.

Routine Follows Schedule

The presentation of the Popeye Club Meeting follows a scheduled routine each week consisting of the following:

Meeting is called to order with singing of the Star Spangled Banner, accompanied by organist, and illustrating of brenograph slide of the American Flag on the Screen.

Following this, the Popeye Club salute and the Popeye Club handshake is given by all the members.

Birthday greetings are then given to members of the club celebrating birthdays during that week. Happy Birthday to You is sung by all members, accompanied by organist.

Following is sung the three theme songs of the club, words having a local color and pertaining to the club, following the melodies of Hail Hail, and East Side West Side.

Club Band Organized

Then follows the presentation of local kiddie talent on the week's program. In this connection, it is worthy of note that each and every week, the number of acts presented and the quality of the entertainment presented is truly outstanding. We receive the cooperation of local dancing schools, etc., in presenting their best array of talent, with specialties, song and dance numbers, imitations, recitations and practically every imaginable type of performance by a youngster. It is really surprising the amount of interest that prevails in this particular phase of the club.

Following the talent, there is a new contest each week for the boys, and one for the girls. Prizes are presented to the winners of the various contests. Following is a special short subject program consisting of two or three cartoons, followed by the regular current house program.

At this time we have been successful in organizing a Popeye Club band. This organization at the present time consists of approximately twelve members; however its membership is increasing rapidly. We believe that within a short time we will be presenting one of the finest musical aggregations of its kind in the city.

One of Martin's Four Column Ads

It was our intention, with the closing of local schools, to suspend the club's activities for the summer; however, the amount of comment received from parents, teachers and townspeople at large prompted us to continue the club throughout the summer months.

We have not had cause to regret this move as the attendance, even during the extremely hot weather, has been gratifying and conclusively proves that our club is the outstanding child organization in this city. Our price of admission is 10 cents each week for members, with all kiddies birthdays occurring during said week, being admitted free. Letters are mailed to members enjoying birthdays, and post cards are mailed to membership list.

Much publicity was received on the "Popeye Club Follies," which was presented during the week that local schools closed for the summer. This special kiddie program was presented on the mid-week engagement, three days with one performance at nine in the evening. This presentation was greeted with excellent comments from all patrons and was one of the most successful programs ever staged from a box office standpoint. Our feature attraction for the engagement being an ordinary program picture, we definitely knew of the success enjoyed on the kiddie program.

Mr. Ray Wheeler, my house manager, acts as master of ceremonies and directs activities of the club. Through his untiring efforts the club's success has been assured from the beginning. Naturally, all members of the staff have a keen interest in the activities of the club in addition to the actual running of same.

Chairman Visits With Theatremen At Toronto Meet

by A-MIKE VOGEL

Once again your chairman, honored with an invite from headman J. J. Fitzgibbons to the annual convention of Famous Players-Canadian eastern managers, hiked himself to the Toronto sleepers and early (too early) in the dawning of August 28, was deposited in the Ontario metropolis to partake of that famed Canadian hospitality and to say a lot of hello to the attending theatremen.

First stop on arriving was made at the circuit home offices to greet the genial "Fitz" and that paragon of welcomers, circuit publicity head, Jim Nairn. Headquarters was in a state of pleasurable excitement occasioned by the arrival of President N. L. Nathanson, who made the last lap of a speedy trip back from Europe by special train in order to personally distribute to the boys the thousands of dollars earned by them in the famed circuit managers sharing plan inaugurated by Mr. Nathanson and Mr. Fitzgibbons two years ago.

These awards of course proved one of the highlights of the last session to which we were then escorted of the three-day convention in the King Edward Hotel where a lot of important business was discussed and straightened out under the able direction of Clarence Robson, Eastern division supervisor. With him on the dais were executives R. W. Bolstad, T. J. Bragg, Morris Stein, Ben Geldsaler, among others.

Nathanson Addresses Convention

Presentation of the checks to managers by Mr. Nathanson followed the president's fine talk to the assemblage in which he expressed his pleasure at being back and also discussed theatre conditions locally and abroad. The convention also marked the 20th anniversary of the circuit to which Mr. Nathanson also referred, pointing out that a number of the attending theatremen had been with him during the years of progress. Previous to the president's address, Mr. Fitzgibbons spoke at length taking up various matters of circuit interest and reviewing the service talks made by department heads, detailed otherwise in this issue.

The general manager also indicated the value of studying Motion Picture Herald and Better Theatres regularly and also encouraged the managers to contribute to Managers' Round Table as part of his analysis on man-power and how managers could improve their effectiveness.

Stressing of picture exploitation was keynoted by your chairman in his address to the convention, emphasizing the danger of concentrating too much on institutional and service advertising to the neglect of the individual picture. Exploitation values of the coming Twentieth Century-Fox product were pointed out by Bill Sussman, Canadian and eastern sales director.

Topping the list of promotions announced at the session was that of R. S. Roddick, from manager, Capitol, London, to the home office as assistant to Mr. Robson. Other advancements included A. E. Cauley, to manager, Capitol, Peterboro; T. McCoy, from assistant to manager, Tivoli, Kingston; M. Margolious, from home office publicity to manager, College, Toronto; R. S. Smith, from assistant to Ray Tubman in Ottawa to manager, Regent, Ottawa; R. McKibbon, from Capitol, Hamilton, to manager, Strand, Hamilton; F. Trebilcock, from assistant to Jack Arthur to the Hippodrome, Toronto; Ken Beach, from home office to representative for Mr. Bolstad in Winnipeg; H. Neun, to Ottawa. W. K. Trudell, to the Capitol, Ottawa, and J. McDonagh from Capitol, Kingston, to manager, Capitol, Cobourg.

Much Fun at Picinc

Lunch followed the final session and then to the big event of the day, the annual picnic and games at the Rouge Hills Country Club. Despite the fact that the weather was not at its best, the folks all had a pleasant time during the day. Your chairman renewed a lot of friendships made last year and made new ones with the visiting brothers. Much good talk was in order.

Dinner was served in the ballroom and accompanied by an old-time "community sing." Jack Arthur's band furnished the music for dancing. Highlight of the evening was a presentation to J. J. Fitzgibbons by Clarence Robson on behalf of the managers of a beautiful cellarette. It was a swell gift to a swell guy.

The short time allowed us the next day before train time was taken up with visits to some of the theatres, with a special trip out to see the new Eglinton, and a honey it is, too. Tooled around by Jack Purves we wound up at the station and sank into the hay after a marvelous time.

"THE GORGEOUS HUSSY"

Speaking of figures, have you seen those that grace our new carpets? "Gorgeous" is an apt description, and they have the added advantage of attracting women as well as men. . . one reason why you'll find them in so many of the country's most successful theatres.

PARAMOUNT BOOKS CALLED ADVANCED

Dear Mike:

No doubt you have seen Paramount's new Press Books on "My American Wife," "Texas Rangers," "Lady, Be Careful" and "I Give My Life."

I believe that these Press Books are a distinct step forward and are the most advanced of any nature we have ever come across. I think they merit a little praise.

Note the space left for second-feature and especially the fine revamping service which they offer, which brings the use of their material into the hands of all kinds of theatres, from cathedrals to plain, ordinary "shotguns." With kindest regards.—Harry Botwick, Manager, State, Portland, Me.

TOM EDWARDS' LETTER STRIKES RIGHT NOTE

To the Editor, Round Table:

The article "Favors Commercials" in the issue of August 5 strikes a right note in connection with a phase of the business that doesn't seem to rate much comment from the trade papers.

Like any other kind of advertising, commercial films of the short-length or any other type can be pleasing, bad or indifferent. Getting big city distribution has encouraged our ad-trailer company, a Colorado studio, to make 30 to 90 films that are head and shoulders above the type that once were current. Photography, sound and even the acting are good, and on the whole our ad presentation gets a very favorable response. On some of them we even get compliments.

One thing that has improved our ad program considerably is the fact that we are supplied with the monologue or newsreel type of short film, in which from three to five quick-changing scenes are screened while the off-stage commentary carries out the sales story. This practice breaks up the presentation so that our audiences always have something new to observe and do not get restive from too much footage given an ordinary scene. I believe this to be one of the main reasons our customers give the Alexander program about the same attention they give the average newsreel.

One of the reasons Motion Picture Herald is the top journal of our trade, in my opinion, is the fact that it carries a fair amount of comment from exhibitors, and in running this clearing house, the editors are not too high up in the big-time circles to keep their feet on the ground when it comes to the problems of the average situation.—J. H. Thompson, President, Martin & Thompson, Inc., Hawkinsville, Ga.

EXCUSE IT, PLEASE

In detailing accounts of Les Pollock's excellent "Mohican" campaign in last week's issue, Les was erroneously listed as holding forth at Loew's Theatre in Syracuse. Les, of course, is situated in Rochester.

Excuse it, please.

SAYS AUDIENCES ENJOY BRIEF COMMERCIALS

Dear Mr. Vogel:

I like Tom Edward's suggestion in your August 1st Round Table that exhibitors should welcome attractive commercials of the brief, one minute variety in view of the fact that this service to the big national advertisers would win us considerable financial support and no doubt some protection from the politicoes.

The post office carries periodicals and newspapers at a billion dollar loss every year because they carry the advertising of the large national concerns. We could use more influence against tax raids.

As far as we can see the audiences get a kick out of many of these trailer showings and they know that much of the revenue goes to buy them better pictures and to improve the comforts of the patrons by the installation of new equipment.

In the old days, perhaps, the exhibitor never knew whether the commercial distributor was on the square or not unless he dealt with a company that had been in the business a long time. Some of them may still be guilty of racketeering our merchants with false promises, but we have done business with one old-timer, the Alexander concern, for a number of years and we have never had any serious cause for complaint on any score.—H. M. Richey, General Manager, Allied Theatres of Michigan, Inc.

GETS NO COMPLAINTS ON SCREEN ADVERTISING

To the Editor, Round Table:

When a source of revenue can be found that will bolster a theatre's weekly receipts and overcome the ill effects of our weak nights as reflected in the bank balance, I think that source should be given every consideration by the exhibitor.

Reading the Round Table of August 1st, I noticed a showman's favorable comments on screen advertising. I wish to heartily endorse his statements. We have a patronage consisting of "well to do" families mostly and in all the time we have been running Alexander Film trailers we have never received a complaint from them. This is possibly due to the fact that the Alexander playlets are intelligently produced, short, interesting and artistic.

This is a real legitimate and dignified source of revenue applicable to any class house. If you're not already running advertising, why not commence right now.—Jos. M. Hickey, Manager, Times Theatre, Milwaukee, Wisc.

FAVORS FRONT, LOBBY FOR LIMITED BUDGET

Dear Mike:

Your editorial "Those Extra Dollars" in the August 15th issue of Motion Picture Herald was read with much interest.

I am inclined to agree with the branch manager. Especially wherein he mentions fronts. I might add that lobbies should be included. It has been my observation, through service with major and independent circuits, that the smart manager is the one who displays his showmanship at these two points of contact.

The reason is obvious. I have seen more managers commended and promoted through diligent attention to their lobbies and fronts than any other duty of theatre operation.

Attractive fronts and lobbies are vitally important. They are the show-windows of the business . . . impressive to every patron and passerby.

This point of opinion is not expressed to question the value of lobby displays, fronts, etc. Nor, to infer that managers who have attractive selling lobbies do nothing else. Merely, to tell Mr. Branch Manager that, if it's a toss-up as to where to spend a limited budget (at the theatre or away from it) the smart fellow knows where it is most appreciated.

I wonder how many agree?—Long Island Round Tabler.

CHICAGO DELAYS DUAL MOVE; LACKS PRODUCT

IATSE Forbids Operators to Use 2,000-Foot Reel; Wage Argument Continues in Force

by WILLIAM F. CROUCH

in Chicago

"We very definitely plan on starting double-features as soon as enough new product is available," said John Balaban, head of the Balaban & Katz theatres, when asked if the circuit had given up plans for twin-bills as has been strongly rumored during the past week.

The exact date for starting the dual policy has not been decided. At present few pictures are available and until more are through with their Loop runs the duals will not be instituted in the outlying theatres. To date no definite bookings of double-features have been given the exchanges, but when the time comes this will be done on a few hours' notice, it is predicted.

New pictures which are now playing in the Loop and which will be available for double-feature showings shortly are as follows: "To Mary—With Love," "Road to Glory," "His Brother's Wife," "Girl's Dormitory," "My Man Godfrey," "Texas Rangers" and a few others.

Regarding the raising of prices gradually, in B. & K. theatres Mr. Balaban stated this plan had been in effect for a number of weeks and would probably continue. He refused to make any statement regarding its effect on the clearance situation, which is gradually being ironed out by this price increase.

The raising of prices from 20c-30c, in B. & K. "C" week houses to 25c-35c, is clarifying the situation, exhibitors say, and as a result gives B. & K. the clearance they wish without causing any difficulties for the independent "C" week theatres, the majority of which operate on the 20c-30c basis. This advance in prices gives the 25c-35c houses seven days clearance over the first week of release and creates what might be called a "B-C" week.

This ironing out of clearance difficulties will make it unnecessary for Allied to go ahead with the legal action they had planned to halt B. & K. from getting the extra clearance. From the looks of things, all parties concerned will find the situation to their liking.

Two thousand-foot reels, recently adopted by the MPPDA, will not be used in Chicago theatres. A message from George Browne, head of the IATSE, advised officials of the local operator's union not to let their members run any 2,000-foot reels here. This decision applies to all union projectionists and makes it necessary for operator's to cut and rewind on smaller reels all product which comes in on the longer reel.

Frank Clifford, business manager of the local union, advised all operators Monday that they should use no reels over 1,000 feet. As a result, new pictures arriving at the exchanges on the 2,000-foot reels are being cut before previewing, as are the pictures which are shown before the censor-board.

With the general usage of the 2,000-foot reel by the distributors and the necessity of having to cut each reel and cue it, considerable difficulty in handling and showing the films is expected.

Current with the 2,000-foot reel problem is the making up of the new operator's contract for the coming year. The old agreement expired at midnight August 31st. Negotiations are now under way for the making of a new contract and meetings between the union officials and exhibitor leaders are being held daily in an effort to reach a satisfactory agreement.

Foremost among the various demands is that of the union for restoration of a 20 per cent salary cut made in 1931. The union claims that "the depression being over," they are entitled to the former wage scale.

Morris Leonard, president of the Chicago Exhibitors' Association, was emphatic in saying his group did not feel that the "depression was over." He asserted that the operators' present wage scale is higher than any other form of organized labor when compared on a basis of hours and working conditions. His group along with the Allied organization headed by Aaron Saperstein, is asking for a 10 per cent decrease in salaries for projectionists. They say the booth men are overpaid for the work they do and that their wage scale is much too high.

Local exhibitors are understood to be definitely opposed to any increase in wages and argue that it takes very little training and effort to operate the modern projection machines. Some exhibitors say that the use of "subs" in local theatres is so prevalent that in many instances the men who get the pay checks rarely operate the machines at all, leaving their hirelings to do the work at whatever price they wish to pay. This practice, they claim, is one reason why they do not wish to allow any wage increase, feeling it is unwarranted.

Outside of the wage situation, there are but few changes in the terms of the new contract. As soon as the wage problem is solved the new contract is expected to be drawn and put into effect. In previous years the parleys have lasted for several weeks and it is not unlikely that it may be some time before an agreement is reached.

Theatre business in Chicago's Loop, and neighborhoods as well, continues to be of the record-breaking variety. Last weekend found Loop business soaring to new heights for the year despite the fact that most of the Loop theatres were showing holdover pictures. "His Brother's Wife" at the Chicago continued strong, "To Mary—With Love" kept a fast pace for the fourth Loop week, "Ziegfeld" running three hours, continued unabated at a top figure, as did "Road to Glory," which was taken out mid-week for "Texas Rangers," despite the fact that the third week of "Glory" was comparable with the second week.

Starting Friday at the Chicago, "My Man Godfrey," with Art Jarrett and Eleanor Holm on the stage, is the attraction. This is the first time in some years that a Universal picture has had a Loop opening in the Chicago theatre. This product is bought for first run by RKO for the Palace, and were it not for the fact that "Swing Time" opened on the same date at the Palace, RKO would have used the picture. "Swing Time" is expected to run from six to 10 weeks at the downtown RKO house and, following it, the French Casino stage show is slated to open for a run. This would have made it necessary to hold back the Universal picture at least two months and that was thought to be much too long. In exchange for this picture it is expected that B. & K. will let RKO have one of comparable attractiveness later on this year, from their list of bookings.

Mrs. Richard M. McClure, president of the Better Films Council of Chicagoland, was the principal speaker at a tea held at Mandel Brothers Thursday. Mrs. McClure gave a very interesting address on "The Modern Pied Piper." Don Vestal's Marionette's were seen in the Balcony scene from "Romeo and Juliet." The tea was held in connection with the exhibit of costumes, properties and historical studies made in the filming of the picture.

At the next meeting of the film council the matter of double features will be discussed and it is thought that definite action towards persuading B. & K. to drop their plans for using them will be suggested. Four years ago, when double-features were dropped here, it was largely through the efforts of the film council and other women's groups that this was done.

The picture is being made by the Burton Holmes company and is being directed by Elmer Clifton of Hollywood. It will be released through various branches of the Y. M. C. A. throughout the country.

Library Curator Returns

John E. Abbott, director, and Mrs. Abbott, curator, of the Museum of Modern Art Film Library, returned to New York this week from a tour of European cities in search of old and rare films.

When you see a HERALD review quoted:

You know it has already been published and that the show world has seen it—in full.

You know that it was not written to give out in advance carbons to kid the producers.

When the Herald prints it the show world knows it—the first time.

Herald reviews are inventories on paper of product that showmen have to sell—on their own judgments. Herald reviews seek to supply facts on which showmen form their own opinions.

The Herald review aims to take the reader to the pre-view, to see for him, not to think for him, to be his eyes, not his mind.

Fox Theatre Men Conclude Annual Sectional Meets

The annual sectional meetings of the division heads and managers of the various Fox Theatre circuits controlled by National Theatres, under the direction of Spyros Skouras and his brothers, George and Charles, were concluded this week with the gathering in Los Angeles. The first of the two sessions was held in Kansas City and was attended by men from the Fox Midwest, Fox Intermountain and Fox Wisconsin groups. At Los Angeles, Fox West Coast executives were in the majority.

The Kansas City gathering, which lasted four days and was devoted to discussions of circuit problems, of new product and special handling of certain pictures, drew to a close with the comment from Spyros Skouras that "it more than justified expectations."

"We hope," said Mr. Skouras, "for greater uniformity in affecting policies of extended runs at each theatre for big pictures, this being a policy which we have followed to some extent during the past season."

The raising of admissions on certain outstanding pictures may be used as a means of paving the way for a general admission increase in all Fox houses, although Mr. Skouras' only comment on this point was that increases will be left to the discretion of divisional managers, whose grasp of local conditions enable them to know when and if such increases are justified.

Sales executives, including Gradwell L. Sears, Ned E. Depinet, and Al Lichtman, addressed the delegates.

At Los Angeles, the meeting was held at the company offices, with the sales executives from the various major companies also attending. Among those present were Spyros and Charles Skouras, J. J. Sullivan, William T. Powers, Edward Zabel, George Baldson, Aubrey Schenck, Arch Bowles, Will Steege, Mike Rosenberg, Frank Newman, Sr., Mr. Lichtman, Mr. Depinet, Jules Levy, William Kupper, Mr. Sears and S. Charles Einfeld.

Trailer Company Reorganizes

Mark Block of the Lyric and Station theatres, Newark, N. J., has been made president of the Theatre Trailer Corporation of New York and has brought new capital into the company. Plans are being made for immediate expansion.

Walter J. Freudenberger, formerly general sales manager of the Advance Trailer Service Corporation and more recently with National Screen Service and Master Art Products, has been appointed general sales manager of the corporation.

Cooper Action Demurrer

Herman P. Selvin, associate attorney for Loew, Walker and Loew, representing Samuel Goldwyn in Hollywood, has filed a demurrer in the federal court there to Paramount's recent suit regarding Gary Cooper's contract with Mr. Goldwyn. Mr. Selvin said that the paper listed various legal aspects of the case.

WARNS OF GIVEAWAY EFFECT ON AD WORK

"Bank Night, double bills and giveaways have had a tendency to lessen, in the manager's mind, the importance of good advertising," H. E. Jameyson of Wichita told the Fox Midwest Theatres convention.

"If I were a prophet, I would say that Bank Night, giveaways, and possibly double bills, are transitory propositions; they are not of lasting importance. To be sure, they fill our present needs. But our present needs are predicated upon the slim purses of our patrons. Let the public purse once more be filled, as it was in the days of prosperity, and we will not require these added inducements. The theatre will again be a place of entertainment; patrons will come solely to see a picture and to have a good time. They will not look for the extra inducement of a pot of gold, a radio, an icebox, or a cup and saucer.

Atlas and RCA Oppose Shift Of RKO Assets

Atlas Corporation and RCA plan to contest the RKO trustee's right to take possession of RKO's principal assets when and if the federal court in New York authorizes the retirement of the final $850,000 of RKO gold notes which are secured by practically all of the working assets of the company.

The $850,000 of RKO gold notes now outstanding are held by the Bank of America National Association. A hearing which was scheduled for this week at which RKO was to petition for leave to retire the notes has been postponed until October. The delay is being sought in order to permit Federal Judge William Bondy, who has jurisdiction over RKO's reorganization proceedings and who is now in Europe, to return.

The Irving Trust Co., RKO trustee, informed the court in the petition that the retirement of the notes at this time would effect an interest saving of approximately $40,000 in 1937, and an additional sum in 1938. RKO has been reducing the notes for several years at the rate of $25,000 per month. The trustee asked the court to direct the Chemical Bank & Trust Co. to deliver to Irving Trust all of the collateral securing the notes, in the event the court approves the retirement of the notes outstanding.

The collateral includes all of RKO's investments in its going subsidiaries, including obligations of the subsidiaries to the parent company. RKO's debentures, which are owned principally by Atlas Corp. and RCA, are secured by a second lien on the assets pledged as collateral on the gold notes. They will ask the court to appoint a trustee for the collateral in the interests of debenture holders, in opposition to the RKO trustee's move to obtain possession when and if the collateral is released.

Bloom Addresses Final Session of ERPI Sales Meet

Electrical Research Products, Inc.'s, first national sales convention, which was held at the Hotel Pierre in New York throughout last week, closed with addresses by company officials headed by Edgar S. Bloom, president of Western Electric and Erpi.

Mr. Bloom expresses his appreciation for the development of the new Western Electric Mirrophonic sound system and complimented the sales department on its convention spirit, asserting that it would be reflected advantageously throughout the entire Erpi organization.

By means of a direct wire from the convention hall, Mr. Bloom sent the congratulations of the sales force to George S. Pratt, western vice-president, who was being tendered a testimonial luncheon at the Hotel Victor Hugo, Beverly Hills, on the occasion of his 30th anniversary in the Bell System service. Mr. Pratt, who has been general counsel and secretary and a director of Western Electric, thanked the New York group over the same wire.

The final day of the convention was occupied with discussions of sales policies for the new Mirrophonic system, and an open forum on technical phases of the new reproducer. Divisional sales meetings followed, one under the direction of L. W. Conrow, general manager of the eastern division, assisted by Bert Sanford, Jr., northeastern division sales manager, and W. E. Woodward, southeastern division sales manager; a second, conducted by Stanley W. Hand, general sales manager of the central division, and a third by Harry W. Dodge, general manager of the western division.

Concluding addresses were given by Whitford Drake, executive vice-president; H. G. Know, vice-president, and C. W. Bunn, general sales manager.

ODETS IN MOVIE LAND

A REAL hell of a dither has arisen among the cinema critics of the Left concerning the screen labours of Mr. Clifford Odets, their playwright hero, as presented in his first effort, "The General Died at Dawn." Then, too, it was directed, for Paramount, by Mr. Milestone, who also has high rating, also on the Left.

Someway, one gathers from the public prints, the Leftists, grateful for what they got, think they should have had more.

Turning to the New York Herald Tribune's Section VII, amusement section, never, no never, to be confused with the editorial page, one finds a dissertation by Mr. Howard Barnes, on the right hand side of the page, the place of the cinema leaders, previously filled by Mr. Richard Watts, who succeeding to the post of dramatic critic, has, most appropriately, moved to the left hand side of the page. Mr. Barnes upholds the tradition of his space with this comment on Mr. Odets in his first picture work:

". . . What makes his Hollywood debut a matter of definite import, however, is the fact that he has burdened his lines, when he had the chance, with clear echoes of this portentous period in world history, standing resolutely for the position he has taken in all of his plays. . . ."

There follows a not very exciting quotation of lines from the character "O'Hara" shouting his love for oppressed peoples, as an "American fighting for democracy."

"THIS sort of talk," observes Mr. Barnes, hopefully, "is enormously intriguing in a medium hemmed in by censorship. If Hollywood producers are wise they will give Mr. Odets the opportunity to employ his gifts of dramaturgy on more pointed material than the Booth narrative."

That, parenthetically, reminds one of a recent news story in a Hollywood publication announcing that Mr. Odets had a stage play in the making which achieved its high point in a love scene between the corpse of a slain striker and his widow.

Returning to "The General Died at Dawn" there is further but sardonic journalistic illumination in the treatment given the piece by Mr. Frank S. Nugent, heir to the New York Times motion picture page which used to be written largely with the left hand.

Mr. Nugent reports the attendance of a Leftist claque, seated on the left at the Paramount theatre's opening of the production, having "come to hear their prophet of social reform in his first sermon from a cinema pulpit."

WHILE Mr. Nugent has not thus far indicated that he is a really profound conservative, one fears that he had considerable impartial amusement in observing his Leftist friends that evening. Through the first "incendiary ten minutes," he found the claque "breaking out the bunting at Mr. Odets' first hint of class struggle" . . . that they "whooped with joy and looked over to the center orchestra to see how the capitalists were taking it," . . . that "the claque was ready to tear the carpets up, glared defiantly at the loges and was thoroughly convinced it stood in the presence of a social document. . . And then, suddenly, the Odets group fell silent and remained silent for the rest of the picture."

All this because, in Mr. Nugent's opinion, the picture "continued as a straightforward melodrama, told with as much action, suspense and interest as its producers, director, writer and cast could cram into it."

It seems, as the critic observes, that Mr. Odets found that celluloid is not inflammable, that Hollywood, engaged in making entertainment, prevailed. "Let us," asks Mr. Nugent, "be charitable about his Hollywood interlude and merely say 'Odets takes a holiday.' "

And if the New York Times keeps on kidding the Leftists it will lose its Cameo and Union Square following.

DISCIPLINE

SINCE there are now and again murmurings in movieland about various internal regulative efforts in behalf of the common good of the industry, it will be of interest to regard for a moment the recent action of the Automobile Manufacturers Association in a resolution affecting advertising. In its resolution the motor organization, remarking that "reserves of performance" were in fact a part of the safety equipment, decided:

"In line with the automobile industry's highway safety policies, the Board of Directors of the Automobile Manufacturers Association recommends to its members that they eliminate from their advertising and publicity all reference to vehicle top speeds."

The motor makers recognize a public relations problem, and see legislative threats around the coroner.

LOUDER AND FUNNIER

THE cables quote Hans Hinkel, Administrator of Culture, as issuing orders to the film producers of Germany to seek more charm and humor for their output. We can look for the same efficient administration of the art over here as soon as the agitators for federal control of the screen get legislative support.

This Week

Musicians' Demand

The American Federation of Musicians with its 16,000 members is going about the business of expending $250,000 in a campaign to bring back jobs in theatres, by forceful picketing where necessary. An army of five thousand pickets already has been enlisted in the new fight on "canned" music.

Details on page 13.

Hitler's Film Plans

Adolph Hitler's plans for advertising Germany through the Olympic Games motion pictures, to which American newsreels were forced to contribute, are now disclosed as being even more comprehensive than at first suspected. Germany as Der Fuehrer views it will be depicted in films that would require the time of 20 ordinary full length evening programs at an established theatre.

The plans are divulged on page 15.

U.S. Standards Win

Standards for 16 mm. film and equipment, formulated several years ago by the American Society of Motion Picture Engineers, were unanimously adopted as the world standard by the 19 nations comprising the International Standards Association at a meeting in Budapest this week. The adoption marks final victory in the efforts to obtain a uniform standard instead of the two in general use; the American, and specifications laid down by the Deutscher Industrie Normen, German standards body.

A review of the difficulties which preceded the final adoption is on page 33.

Exhibitors Meet

Double features and the appearance of film stars on radio programs were attacked by individual speakers at the first annual convention of the Theatre Owners and Managers of the Rocky Mountain Region at Denver, but no resolutions relating to the two problems were passed. A. De Bernardi, drama critic of the Denver Post, told delegates that most of their attendance problems will be solved by a return to exclusive use of newspaper space for advertising. Members of the New Jersey division of Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors assembled in Atlantic City this week for their 17th annual convention. National leaders of the organization urged support of the campaign to press passage of Congressional legislation designed to eliminate producer-distributors from the exhibition field.

Details of the two exhibitor conventions are given on page 52.

Air Salesman

Weekly over Omaha's WOW "Your Hollywood Tatler" gossips for fifteen minutes about motion picture matters. No sponsor of the program is announced, but the voice at the microphone encourages the seeing of films which happen to be in exhibition at the cinemas of the Tri-States Theatres circuit in the area. "Your Hollywood Tatler" is Charles Schlaifer, the circuit's advertising manager, who writes his own stuff and gets fan mail. The program, presented as a supporting feature, is a commercial in point of fact.

An account of how it's done and came to be is published on page 60

River Propaganda

Despite the political ado aroused by the Government's picture, "The Plough That Broke the Plains," Washington's Resettlement Administration is about to try the other side of the question and screen the effects of too much water along the Mississippi. Again the Administration will attempt to obtain distribution through the industry's companies, regardless of the earlier rebuff.

The Government's plans are reported in the article on page 28.

Reel Trouble

Boston and Chicago operators continued last week and this in their opposition to use of the 2,000-foot reel adopted as general practice by the industry September 1st on recommendation of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. In Chicago operators were cutting the films down to 1,000 foot length arbitrarily. In Boston the projectionists declared the long reel a fire hazard and sought a ruling from the Massachusetts Department of Public Safety.

Developments are chronicled in detail on page 42.

Music Code

A voluntary agreement to refrain from extending money, service or favors in return for free exploitation of music by any agency including motion pictures has been signed by major music publishing firms. The agreement has been drawn up in the form of a fair practice code by the Music Publishers Protective Association and is regarded as part of a campaign to avert a threatened investigation of the industry by the Federal Trade Commission. All publishing firms owned or controlled by motion picture interests have signed the agreement.

Details of the code are reported on page 18.

Labor Day and Labor

Relations between exhibitors and unions were particularly peaceful this year as several contracts were renewed. In Cincinnati a three-year agreement under which graduated increases in weekly pay will be made is now in operation, having been signed by independent exhibitors and representatives of the Operators' Local 327. Local 306 members are picketing several theatres in the Times Square section of New York and in Brooklyn and Long Island in an organization drive. State leaders of the operators' union succeeded in having the state Federation of Labor convention approve a resolution calling for legislation to require two men in booths in first class cities.

A survey of new union developments in the nation is made on page 64.

Production Up

Production of feature product, lately desultory without evident reason, rebounded smartly last week. Nine companies were represented by eighteen pictures placed in work, Paramount and Warners leading with four each. RKO-Radio led in the number of films finished, taking three to the cutting room. Six others completed during the week were the works of five other companies.

Gus McCarthy's survey of the production situation is published on page 39.

Giannini Broadcasts

Dr. A. H. Giannini, president of United Artists corporation, was introduced and interviewed by Cecil B. DeMille, Lux Radio Theatre master of ceremonies, last Monday evening. Mr. DeMille's introduction reviewed his guest's life history in detail. Dr. Giannini's remarks dealt with the motion picture and banking.

The story is on page 64.

Schenck-Ostrer

Terms of the Schenck-Ostrer deal linking Twentieth Century-Fox, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Gaumont-British in an international alliance have been reduced to paper and tentative drafts of the transaction have been brought back to the United States by attorneys for the American parties involved. Statement of counsel is to the effect that negotiations have proceeded without important departure from lines laid down in the preliminary announcements.

The story is on page 44.

Films in Barcelona

Barcelona's 117 cinemas reopened on August 9th with half of the first day's receipts going to survivors of a conflict which had kept screens dark since July 19th. Trade representations to the government bureau in control of the industry were predicated on the argument that maintenance of cinemas on a high standard was of vital importance as evidence of governmental stability.

Harry Chapin Plummer's summary of the Spanish situation is presented on page 38.

Pooling Deals

Six competitive circuits figure in pooling deals launched in six states in the past week. Figuring the deals, affecting theatres in New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Iowa, Ohio and Virginia, are Loew's, Warner, Paramount, Ike Libson and William Skirboll, Si Fabian, and Wilmer and Vincent.

The details appear in the story on page 30.

Lawyers Agree

Trial of the Government's monopoly suit against the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers will not be resumed, it is indicated by attorneys for both sides. The attorneys have agreed on stipulations of fact to be entered in the evidence in sufficient degree to preclude the necessity of resuming the hearings in Federal court in New York. Final approval of the papers, however, is not expected before the end of the year.

Developments in the prolonged action are told on page 53.

Universal Issues Stock

Universal Corporation, the new Cowdin-Cochrane-Rogers regime in control of Universal Pictures Corporation, announced on Wednesday an issue of 280,869 shares of voting trust certificates for $1 par value common stock. The certificates, priced at $10 each, are being offered by Hammons & Co., Inc., of New York, and Dulin & Co. of Los Angeles.

Net proceeds of this financing, which constitutes a part of a program of general revision in Universal's financial structure, will provide additional working capital to be used as required for production and for improvements to property and equipment.

Upon completion of the financing Universal's outstanding capitalization will consist of $4,000,000 of 10-year five per cent convertible debentures, the total authorized, and 600,000 shares of common stock of $1 par value (voting trust certificates) of a total of 2,000,000 shares authorized. In addition 100,000 shares of no par value preferred stock are authorized, none of which are presently outstanding.

Paramount Merger

Famous Theatres Corporation, holding company for Paramount theatre interests, will be abandoned after its merger with Paramount Pictures, Inc., the parent company, it was announced this week. The step is part of a process of simplification of the Paramount corporate structure.

British Raid

Back from London, Jesse L. Lasky has given as a result of his observations his conclusion that British producers have set out to compete for the world market and described them as "willing to make any sort of concessions that are fair and equitable" to secure directorial tempo, story construction and film editing in which Hollywood excels. "But," he continued, "if the British can't make it, they're going to raid—in fact, the raiding is on right now."

Complete text of Mr. Lasky's utterance is given on page 39.

Hollywood Confident

Encouraged by increasingly frequent reports of broken box office records and by a steadily swelling total gross revenue, Hollywood is going forward in a spirit of confidence unmatched in years if ever, according to Adolph Zukor, chairman of the board of directors of Paramount Pictures, in New York for a ten-day stay prior to returning to Hollywood to resume direction of production activity for that company.

Mr. Zukor's observations are recorded in detail on page 27.

Public Televising

First public demonstration of television in England recently was met with keen public interest that kept a waiting line constantly outside eight small booth "theatres" in the Radio Manufacturers' exhibition at Radiolympia, London, screening pictures transmitted from the British Broadcasting Corporation's station at Alexandra Palace.

This and other developments in England are detailed on page 74.

Gains in China

Despite the myriad problems of censorship and restrictive measures, foreign motion pictures in China have experienced their best six months of business in the last three years.

J. P. Koehler's latest report from Shanghai is on page 36.

Screen Stories

Although the plans of Hollywood producers to meet commitments of 1936-37 are well under way at this point, the studios in California and home offices in New York still are busy buying vehicles for their stars for the new season. During the month of August, 73 purchases were made, including 20 novels, five magazine stories, five plays and 43 original stories, chiefly from the pens of studio writers.

A complete list of the studios making the purchases, and the individual acquisitions, with all the available filming credits, appear in the story beginning on page 61.

Australia Arbitrates

As a result of recent unsuccessful efforts to obtain arbitrary assistance from the New South Wales Government the trade has formed a Film Board of Trade to settle disputes without recourse to political participation. Decisions of the new tribunal will be effective throughout the Commonwealth and it is possible that New Zealand also may come within its jurisdiction later.

Details of the board's organization and other news from Australia appear on page 32.

LABOR TO USE $250,000 TO FORCE MUSIC ON THEATRES

Army of 5,000 Pickets Organized to Push Campaign for Restoration of Jobs for Federated Musicians

Drive Against "Canned" Music Starting under Local 802 in New York Is To Be Spread Over Entire Country

The American Federation of Musicians—16,000 strong, and claiming millions of sympathizers—will spend at once at least $250,000 to bring "non-canned" music back to America's motion picture theatres, in a wholesale attempt to foist upon exhibitors everywhere, by forceful picketing wherever necessary, a policy of "living entertainment" along with films, in order to relieve the Federation's vast ranks of unemployed. The public will be asked to aid.

The Federation will have the backing of thousands of members of allied theatrical crafts, and their millions of sympathizers, conducting its preliminary campaigning at the outset through its Local 802 in New York, where the field is believed to be more fertile for planting musicians in the long-dusty pits of film houses. There is now but a handful of theatres using musicians.

It promises to be the greatest campaign to be conducted on behalf of music in film theatres since sound routed the musicians practically everywhere back in the late 1920's, and from appearances it will be labor's strongest contest in exhibition, an army of 5,000 pickets having already been enlisted.

Of the opinion that "the present time is propitious" for starting such an extensive campaign to "encourage" theatre owners in the use of music, the New York local, No. 802, with full support of the American Federation of Actors, among other unions, was to fire the opening gun Thursday evening with a mass meeting in Manhattan Opera House, New York. Mayor F. H. La Guardia, of New York, is to be a principal speaker. Others who are scheduled to address the meeting include: Joseph P. Ryan, president of the Central Trades and Labor Council; William Mahoney and William Collins, representing the American Federation of Labor; Jacob Rosenberg, secretary of Local 802, and Ralph Whitehead, secretary of the American Federation of Actors.

20 Theatres To Be Picketed

The Actors' Federation and other artists' organizations, it is claimed, will be naturally interested in backing and aiding the musicians' movement, because it is intended for the benefit of all performers. The proceedings at the mass meeting are to be broadcast over radio station WEVD and the sponsors of the movement have arranged for four 15-minute broadcasts subsequently in delivering the appeal to the public.

"More than 7,000 musicians, actors and their friends and sympathiezers are expected to attend this meeting," said an announcement from the New York headquarters of Local 802, which also admitted that motion picture theatres will actually be picketed by the musicians and allied crafts in the move to bring music back to film houses.

"Twenty theatres in Manhattan, Bronx and Brooklyn will be picketed," said the musucians' union, but no indication would be given of the identity of the theatres to be selected. Evidently they will be chosen arbitrarily, in strategic locations, and probably in those sections where labor has its strongest influence on neighborhood merchants and local exhibitors.

"We regard this drive, of which the mass meeting is the opening gun, as a life and death matter for musicians, actors and allied theatrical crafts," Mr. Rosenberg said. "We believe that the time is ripe for this drive. Certainly our membership is ready for it and is wholeheartedly supporting the drive. More than 5,000 of our members have already pledged themselves to work and picket in this drive and more are signing up daily; all this on a voluntary basis.

"If we had waited for 15 years, we could never have chosen a better moment. We fully expect the general public to support us, and we are certain that the drive will end in speedy success."

Active picketing and appeals to the public to support the drive were to begin early Friday morning, the union announced.

The American Federation of Musicians' membership, estimated at between 16,000 and 17,000, the majority unemployed, already has budgeted $200,000 as a starting fund for the drive, but will spend much more before the campaign is concluded, union executives said.

No set period has been determined upon, progress depending on how far Local 802 progresses. Union headquarters, however, intimate that if the New York movement is successful and more musicians and stage performers are brought back to the theatres, then the move immediately will be spread until the whole nation has been covered.

First Campaign Fruitless

Some years ago the AFM undertook an expensive and extensive campaign against sound motion pictures, spending over $1,000,000 in institutional advertising which sought public support against socalled "canned music." Carried out by the parent musicians' union shortly after sound was introduced, that campaign proved not only costly, but equally as fruitless, in the face of the new medium of entertainment.

Profiting, apparently, by that experience, the AFM Local 802 now is preparing for a drive that differs from the previous one in many respects. Primarily interested in increasing employment for its musician members, Local 802 will try to convince theatre operators that they should install "living" entertainment in some form or another to go with the pictures. The inference at union headquarters is that the local stands ready to cooperate with theatres to the extent that a policy of stage bands, pit orchestra shows or similar form of presenting stage entertainment can be presented.

Employment of more organists, once a regular feature in practically all houses, is also to be considered.

Cite Theatres' Success

The union thinks that the time is here for the return of stage entertainment both in a modest and in the deluxe manner, depending on the theatre and possibilities. It points to the success of the Paramount in Times Square with a program of presenting a "name" dance band every week on the stage, following several comparatively dull months, from a box office standpoint, of straight picture programs. The State, Loew's leading Manhattan house, also continues with vaudeville, the only theatre in the Broadway district to present variety programs, and this is pointed to as rolling up significant grosses for the last year or so. Too, the success of the Roxy theatre is ascribed to the continuous use of stage shows, although not of an expensive grade.

That the public is "hungry" for stage shows and will support "living" entertainment in any form, and that patrons are more and more in favor of eliminating double features, will be used as arguments.

In addition to going on the radio, the union plans to reach the public in other ways: contact consumer groups, citizen groups, theatre circuits and operators and publish a four-page tabloid paper which will be circulated widely. The paper will be called Theatre Pit and will be edited by Bob Gardner.

POLICE FILM PLAN TRAPS JAILBREAKER

The effectiveness of motion pictures in the apprehension of criminals was strikingly demonstrated in New Jersey this week when a New Brunswick detective arrested John A. Byers, a fugitive from the Middlesex County Workhouse, after recognizing him as one of five criminals who posed last May for an experimental sound film taken by the New Jersey State police.

The use of motion pictures as a means of spotting criminals is now seriously under consideration by the Bureau of Criminal Identification of the Department of Justice in Washington. The process was developed by Colonel H. Norman Schwarzkopf, former superintendent of the New Jersey State police.

MAXWELL INCITES BRITISH PRESS TO ATTACK CODE ADMINISTRATION

Charges "Banning" of Film; Production Code Office Promised Certificate When Minor Editing Is Completed

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

The international motion picture industry is witnessing the unique spectacle of a London producer, John Maxwell, asking and inspiring the British press to assail and ridicule the American Production Code Administration in the public prints on the charge of "banning" one of his pictures, which production not only has not been "banned," but on which the Production Code Administration has spent decided cooperative effort in trying to make it marketable in this country under the same standards of social and moral decency which govern all pictures here.

Even now, Budd Rogers, the American sales representative of Mr. Maxwell's company, British International Pictures, Ltd., is progressing in negotiations with the Production Code Administration for a certificate of approval for the production, and is in possession of the written statement that such a certificate will definitely be granted on the accomplishment of some minor editing suggested by the Administration.

The Production Code Administration in New York is at this moment awaiting Mr. Rogers' resubmission of the picture so that the certificate may be granted.

Yet, Mr. Maxwell's British International Pictures and his Wardour Films distributing affiliate, in London, have supplied the British news and trade press with publicity containing the statement that the picture has been definitely banned by what he is pleased to call "The American Purity Code Authorities," and furthermore that "the banning in America means a considerable monetary loss to BIP." The picture in question is "Living Dangerously."

No Authority to "Ban" Film

In fact, neither the Production Code Administration nor any other motion picture trade association or agency in America has the power to arbitrarily "ban" any picture. That power rests alone, in the matter of importations, with the United States Government, through its Customs Bureau of the Treasury Department.

True, the producer-distributor-exhibitor members of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America have agreed among themselves not to handle either for distribution or exhibition any production to which the Production Code Administration had refused to issue a certificate of approval. But from that point there is no motion picture trade power existing to deter any importer, exporter or non-MPPDA member from distributing in America any picture, whether approved or not by the Production Code Administration. One of the most sensational examples of independent action in this connection is "Ecstasy," likewise an importation for which the Administration refused a certificate.

Regardless, at no stage of the discussions between the Administration and Mr. Maxwell's interests was there ever a question of refusing a certificate for his picture. To the contrary, negotiations apparently had been proceeding smoothly with the view in mind of revising the objectionable features of the production to conform with the American standards, precisely in the same treatment applied to all important American productions.

The Production Code Administration at the headquarters of the Hays organization in New York was startled to learn on Tuesday that Mr. Maxwell's Wardour-BIP Films in London is widely publicizing the statement that their film, "Living Dangerously," had been banned by "the American Purity Code Authorities." A publicity release in the campaign has been received in New York.

Script Submitted

Early in July, Budd Rogers, for Mr. Maxwell, submitted to the New York Production Code Administration a script for "Living Dangerously." The eastern Production Code machinery, created specifically to aid foreign producers in the marketing of their product here, refused at that time to approve the script as a subject for the screen on the grounds that it dealt almost exclusively with the subject of illicit trafficking in narcotics, in direct violation of Section 3, Article I of the Production Code, which says:

"Illegal drug traffic must never be presented."

The Code Administration informed Mr. Rogers that, while it did not and could not recommend the subject for production, it would decide on the issuance of a certificate upon the submission of the completed picture if made.

Changes Recommended

On July 15th, Mr. Rogers, for Mr. Maxwell, submitted to the Code Administration the completed "Living Dangerously" motion picture, and was advised at that time that the picture could receive a certificate of approval when some changes and elimination had been made.

On July 22nd, Mr. Rogers submitted a re-edited version and was then told that, with two or three minor eliminations, the picture would receive a certificate. Mr. Rogers, however, on his own initiative, decided that in view of the final minor editings as suggested by the Code Administration, the picture would have better commercial possibilities if a change could be made in the ending. Accordingly, Mr. Rogers returned the print to Mr. Maxwell in London with the advice that some scenes be re-shot for a new ending.

On July 27th the Production Code Administration, from New York, advised Mr. Rogers again that with the final minor revisions effected, the Administration would definitely grant the certificate of approval.

There the matter rested, Mr. Rogers awaiting word from London as to the management's pleasure in the matter, and the Administration awaiting the final re-submission in order to grant the certificate.

Publicity Release Says "American Ban Creates Added Interest" in British Pictures; Resubmission Is Awaited

Then, unknown to either Mr. Rogers or the Administration in New York, the following publicity statement was released in Lonon to the British trade press, under the trade mark of Wardour Films:

> "LIVING DANGEROUSLY" AMERICAN BAN CREATES ADDED INTEREST ON BRITISH RELEASE
> The American Purity Code Authorities' action in banning the Wardour film, "LIVING DANGEROUSLY," has been the subject of a great deal of publicity and comment in the British press.
> "LIVING DANGEROUSLY," which had its North London release on Monday, is a B.I.P. production and a screen version of the play of the same name by Reginald Simpson and Frank Gregory.
> Despite the fact that the play was permitted a run in New York, the Code authorities refuse to give their O.K. to the film version, because they object to the doctor in the film selling drugs illicitly.
> Incidentally, the doctor in question, serves a term of imprisonment and his name is removed from the Medical Register as a result of his behaviour.
> Objection is also taken to the shooting of a blackmailer, which climaxes the film, because the suggestion is that the doctor responsible for the shooting, will escape the penalty of the crime.
> "The Daily Herald" splashed the story over two columns with the head "LIVING TOO DANGEROUSLY," and referred to the picture as "One of this year's best British films." It then goes on to tell the story of the reasons for the ban and certainly makes good reading. "The Daily Mail" and "The Continental Daily Mail" both carried stories on the ban and "The Sunday Dispatch" also devoted space to the subject.
> While the banning in America means a considerable monetary loss to B.I.P. the publicity the film has been given in the British press as a result, should be of incalculable value to the theatres that have booked the film.
> Last Monday's "Daily Mirror" featured a big story on the day of the picture's North London release. Splashed across half a page, with a large illustration from the film, was an interesting story of the banning.
> "A film will be shown at most British local cinemas this week" says the "Mirror" Film Correspondent, "which has been banned in U. S. . . . Made at Elstree with Otto Kruger, the Hollywood star, in the principal role, this picture was acclaimed during its recent West End run. Of it the 'Daily Mirror' film critic wrote: 'A good and thoroughly entertaining film.' "
> "The film" says the same Correspondent, "must have offended the U. S. Code horribly. One of the Administration's principles is that whenever a wrong is committed in a film the audience, for its own moral good, must also see the wrongdoer justly punished.
> "Imagine their horror, therefore, when a doctor shoots a blackmailer in the climax of the film, and it is suggested at the end that the doctor will escape the consequences of this shooting.
> " 'Come, come,' say the Code officials, 'we must have a sequence which will show the doctor being arrested and brought before a jury.' "

HITLER REVEALS PLAN TO ADVERTISE GERMANY WITH U.S. OLYMPIC FILMS

Twenty Full Programs Will Be Made from Record to Which Chancellor Made American Newsreels Contribute a Share

There no longer can be any doubt of the thoroughness with which Adolph Hitler is to fabricate films of the Olympic Games of last August into advertising for Germany, to run the length of 20 full motion picture programs, so that the descendants of the Germans in Germany today can "look back with pride at the country that their fathers helped to build."

Der Fuehrer's plans for moulding the film record, to which he compelled American newsreels to contribute, under threat of expulsion from the Olympic arena, are now disclosed in a brochure on the "Olympia Film," published in Berlin by a specially created Hitler film agency. The document promises that the Dictator's version of the Olympics will be written in motion pictures alone, and in such a manner that they "will forever remind" future descendants of Germans "of the necessity to remain worthy of their fathers."

Hitler laid down an absolute dictatorship over U. S. newsreels at the Olympics, forbidding them to photograph the world-owned sports property except under the most stringent regulations, and then only with the consent and under the close supervision of his friend, Miss Leni Riefenstahl, motion picture actress, to whom he gave complete control over all filming at the great Reich stadium and who designated the subjects to be filmed and how they were to be filmed.

Restriction Still Holds

He took steps to make certain there would be full compliance by the American newsreels, and any other outsiders participating, when he compelled them to sign a contract of strong contents governing their coverage of the event. The contract, a translation of which appeared in Motion Picture Herald, August 8th, page 13, provided not only that the American reels conduct their filming directly through Miss Riefenstahl, using her native cameramen, dressed in Nazi uniforms, but expressly forbids the American companies even now to use any of the film allowed them in any subject other than in their regular newsreel releases. Specifically, the American companies are forbidden from ever making a special Olympic feature or short subject, having been forced in the contract to forego even their international rights under copyright law. Mr. Hitler alone reserved that right, and now his reasons become apparent:

"This nation, this great, energetic, unyielding nation that can hardly be called the smallest among nations and that only needed a leader to revive its dormant power, develop its resources and guard its pride, this nation that acted as host to the world (at the Berlin Olympics), will also be revealed to the world in a living document." So explains the "Olympia Film" brochure now published.

Nor is Chancellor Hitler to confine his future motion picture propaganda activities to his treatment of the Olympic films.

A wireless last weekend to the New York Times, from Berlin, reported that Berlin newspapers "are jubilant" over the "German victory" at last week's International Films Exhibition at Venice, Italy. A German film, "Kaiser von California," won the Mussolini trophy for the best film; the German film "Schluasakord" was considered the best musical film, and Germany's "Jugend der Welt" was given honors as the best documentary film.

The awards, said the Times wireless, were advanced by Berlin's newspapers as "proof of the high cultural level the German films have attained under the National Socialist regime's benevolent, if strict, supervision."

Hans Hinkel, Reich Culture Administrator, the Times report continued, "has just issued orders to German film producers to produce more 'charm and humor' and to look for both in the life of Germany."

Mr. Hinkel was said to have rejected the complaints from "film authors that National Socialist censorship hampers their selection of material. The German people, he says, want to laugh again."

Dr. Hanfstaengl Dropped as Nazi Foreign Press Chief Because of the Content of Two Political Pictures He Made

Tangible proof came this week that Chancellor Hitler will not tolerate any obstinacies of his lieutenants to hinder his program for proving accomplishments in German culture and political ambitions by the use of the motion picture camera. Dr. Ernst Franz Sedgwick Hanfstaengl, Harvard-educated chief of the Nazi Party's foreign press department, was eased out of his job, according to United Press, because of the nature of two political films he produced, one dealing with the life of a Nazi hero, the other about Germany's colonial desires.

Mr. Hanfstaengl, known to intimates as "Putzy" and "Hanfy," was catapulted into oblivion in Germany's national political life when his two political films were banned. He was succeeded by his chief assistant and attended the opening Wednesday of the Nazi Congress as a private spectator, a role far removed from that in which United Press reported he once "charmed Chancellor Hitler with Chopin piano solos."

The gigantic Mr. Hanfstaengl was once a familiar figure in New York. He operated an art store in Fifth avenue and later, after the World War, in Fifty-seventh street. His collections of fine prints were notable and widely known among connoisseurs.

International Attention

Chancellor Hitler's terms by which he decreed that American newsreels filming the Olympic Games must advertise Germany brought wide attention in the international press following their publication in the Herald. The Manchester Guardian, in England, for one, commented that "as a result of this thoroughness the Nazi Olympic propaganda will reach a far greater public than could ever squeeze into the great stadium at Berlin. Moreover, Fraulein Riefenstahl's artistic talent" in controlling, compiling and moulding the Hitler version, "may have a more subtle and potent effect than all the organizing genius employed in running the Games themselves."

Olympic propaganda fostered by Hitler and Miss Riefenstahl will not, it seems, end with the Olympic Games, the Guardian observed, adding: "And the methods employed to secure this end are in themselves a remarkable example of the thoroughness of Nazi propaganda.

"Fraulein Leni Riefenstahl may now settle down to the production of a magnificent full-length film of the whole Olympic Games in the manner of her other famous propaganda films, such as that dealing with the party conference at Nuremberg. Moreover, the only full photographic record of the Games has actually been compiled and directed by Nazis."

Propaganda Series

The Hitler brochure, now arriving from Berlin to describe the Hitler "Olympia Film," explains that Miss Riefenstahl will build the propaganda document in three chapters: "Conquest of Faith," "Triumph and Will" and "The Day of Freedom," all relating to the 11th Olympic Games.

"Sport, a delightful method of conflict, inspires the finest qualifications in man," says an opening announcement. "Let us, therefore, hope that the Olympic flame will never be extinguished."

That Der Fuehrer hopes his Olympic films never will be extinguished is apparent in the words that "those who come after us will not have to rely on word of mouth or history books to learn about the Olympic Games that were held in Germany for the first time since their inception. They will be able to follow the games step by step with their eyes."

Cites Difficulties

But Hitler does not intend that the document shall serve the future alone, for his "Olympia Film" brochure tells how "every man who contributed his share in lifting (Germany), a once poverty-stricken country, from the depths of despair to the level of equality and prosperity, and every comrade who helped him untiringly to produce and build with ardent energy, with undivided power and will, inspired by warm and eager hearts, they will all have the opportunity of seeing and hearing this priceless record of events."

The films will tell, too, the booklet says, of how "the youth of the world, from north and south, and every other part who were told either secretly or openly not to partici-

MAXWELL AND PRESS

There is a lot more in similar vein and the article concludes by remarking.

"A diverting sidelight on the ban is that the play, 'Living Dangerously,' which the film closely follows, was shown on Broadway and throughout the States. Apparently, what is fit for American playgoers is not suited to the morals of American filmgoers."

It has been truly written, "Sweet are the uses of adversity." Certainly the ban on "Living Dangerously" has resulted not only in a large amount of added publicity for the film, but has also aroused tremendous public interest in this newest Wardour offering, and has given picturegoers added eagerness to view a picture America considers so "terribly naughty."

At least a part of the motivation of the campaign and the great "banning" story is made manifest in that part of the publicity statement which says: "While the banning in America means a considerable monetary loss to BIP, the publicity the film has been given in the British press as a result should be of incalculable value to the theatres that have booked the film." It is to be remembered that the publicity statement concerned is intended for the consumption of prospective British exhibitor clients.

Not Re-submitted

Faced with the arrival of the publicity statement in America, Mr. Rogers admitted that the picture had not been re-submitted to the Code Administration with the final changes as suggested. He explained that the Hays organization (the Production Code Administration) informed him that it could not issue a certificate until it viewed the production in its final form, although he admitted that he had been advised by the Administration that a certificate would be granted when "Living Dangerously" is submitted with the suggested revisions. He said he had conveyed the information to his people in London, and now is awaiting word from them.

Advised of the Maxwell publicity statement, Mr. Rogers defended the company with the observation that evidently it was issued "because we have no certificate of approval and therefore we cannot show the picture."

Made Four Months Earlier

Strangely, "Living Dangerously" was first seen by the Code Administration in New York in script form in July, when it had been made into a motion picture by Mr. Maxwell's company at least four months previously. Bruce Allan, MOTION PICTURE HERALD correspondent in London, reviewed the production, from England, in the issue of March 21st, and although admitting that the film "has American values," the climax, he said, while "effectively presented, at the same time possibly raises a problem of censorship."

Issue Raised Last Year

John Maxwell's apparently hostile attitude toward the American Production Code Administration is not new.

Early in June of 1935, Mr. Maxwell told reporters in New York, while visiting America, that, contrary to the thought apparently suggested in the request of the British producers' association to the Hays office that facilities be provided in New York for the examination of British scripts, "British producers will never submit scripts."

"In the first place," MOTION PICTURE HERALD editorialized on June 15, 1935, "the question arises as to just how and where Mr. Maxwell became authorized to bind, off-handedly, all of the British producers, and secondly, it is to be wondered whether Mr. Maxwell imagines that this statement of policy will be greeted with gnashing of teeth and pulling of hair throughout the industry."

Use of Service Growing

Regardless, on July 4th, 1936, on the first anniversary of the machinery established in New York by the American industry to advise foreign producers on scripts and pictures intended for this market, in order that they might be suitable to the Production Code standards, it became recognizable that there is a growing tendency of foreign producers to utilize the service.

In 1935, only one country, England, made use of the service and submitted two scripts on which suggestions were asked. This year, companies in three additional countries submitted 11 scripts, for a total of 13. From England and Italy came five each, from France two, and Spain one.

A year ago the organization examined 44 features from two foreign countries. England, again, led with all but one, that one from Germany. The marked progress is evidenced at this date, 32 pictures, including one short subject, having been submitted by six foreign nations. England already has sent over 18, France and Italy five each. Mexico two, Spain one, and Austria one short subject.

Using the figures now available at this early stage of the 1936-37 season, it is estimated that more than 100 features from several countries will have been submitted for suggestion and approval before the season closes.

The status governing the submission by Mr. Maxwell of his "Living Dangerously" to the Production Code Administration is the same that governs and is accepted by all of the large producing corporations of Hollywood, and others. Pictures are submitted to the Production Code Administration, suggested changes are made, the picture is resubmitted and a certificate of approval is granted.

Paramount British, Union Close Merger

Paramount Theatres in Britain, and Union Cinemas, headed by Fred Bernhard, have completed a management merger. There will be no change in the financial structure of either group, but L. Holderness, Paramount theatre supervisor, becomes theatre controller of Union.

Hitler Tells Plan to Advertise Germany

pate in these Olympic Games held in the New Reich, disregarded their advisers and appeared, instead, in unheard of numbers.

"The decision to produce this film document incurred incalculable difficulties," the National Socialist Government explains. "It was impossible to decide where to start or where to stop. Sixteen days, 16 labyrinths!

"What an overwhelming task to demand of Leni Riefenstahl. Everything had to be moulded together in these 16 murderous days!"

The task required by Hitler in filming the games only as he wanted them filmed required 40 automobiles to transport the cameramen from the scene of one sports event to the other. To these were added a considerable number of "pleasure" cars and seven trucks to carry the filming staff, equipment and overseers. He used 120 cameramen alone to make the pictures, the brochure explaining that "A well stocked cellar and a suitable kitchen provided the nourishment."

Over 15,000 meters of film were used by Hitler's Miss Riefenstahl every day, or 800,000 feet for the 16 days, approximating in negative footage some 100 feature pictures of eight reels each.

They now call it "the great German film document," adding that when Miss Riefenstahl arranges the voluminous film record she is counting on "sufficient material to fill the programs usually required for 20 evenings at a large moving picture house."

Even the Goldfish

"The exactness of a most carefully worked out plan devised by Miss Riefenstahl for herself and her cameramen in connection with the games depended on many eventualities, inasmuch as the idea was not to merely reveal something materialistic, but to create on an organic basis. She was meticulous to a point. For instance, she insisted that her cameramen should not even overlook the goldfish in the tank of the Olympic Village. The flight of the seagull had to be included in the film ground out by the cameraman who photographed the grey rocks of Ehrensfels, standing as a monument to the (German) heroes who died at Skaggerrak, and now forming a background for the sail boat events held at Kiel. She linked every picture of sport to the picture of life."

A Year in Cutting Room

"However," the brochure continues, "even after the enormous task of filming has been accomplished by a staff of over 120 men, and after the cameras have finished grinding, a new period of work starts for Leni Riefenstahl.

"She will have to sit an entire year in the cutting room. She will have to preview the entire film exposure. She may require an entire month just to form a critical and accurate idea of the material used, for that is what comprises her manuscript."

"Experience and a fanatic discipline are two essentials if the minutest detail that may mar the entire work is to be avoided."

The Olympic films, then, will present Germany as Hitler views it.

When you see a HERALD review quoted:

You know it was not written for that purpose.

You know the quotation was not sought and was not in the mind of the reviewer as he wrote.

Herald reviews are written for and at showmen engaged in doing a job on the product they have bought.

Herald reviews never seek to make up the showman's mind for him, but rather to give him the material for his own opinions.

Herald reviews avoid "catch lines" because they can never summarize a picture or serve the man behind the box office.

Herald reviews are documents of service—to the industry.

MUSIC PUBLISHERS ADOPT CODE TO AVERT FEDERAL INVESTIGATION

Agreement Bars Gratuities for Exploitation with Injunction and Contempt of Court Action for Violators

A code of fair trade practices drawn up by the Music Publishers Protective Association and designed to eliminate exploitation gratuities and free special arrangements in any form, has been approved by a majority of popular music publishers including all of those owned or controlled by motion picture companies, and is now in effect.

The agreement, already being referred to as the "anti-bribery code," is regarded as a move to avert an investigation of the music industry by the Federal Trade Commission which has been reported as threatening for many months.

Unlike previous agreements of a similar nature the code carries no direct penalties for violation but stands strictly as a joint venture in which the signers have agreed to refrain from certain practices. In the event that any signer violates the agreement, however, the Association will go to court and ask for an order restraining the violator from further breach of the code. Once this injunction is obtained the violator subjects himself to contempt of court proceedings if he persists.

Every major publisher has signed the pact and of the smaller companies which have not assented to the agreement only one, Joe Morris Music Company, is highly active in the business. Other publishers who have not signed are Fred Fisher, the Estate of Charles K. Harris, Jenkins Music Company, K & K Music Company, Melrose Brothers, New Rhythm Music Company of Angeles, Will Rossiter and Harry Von Tilzer. Major broadcasting companies and important orchestra leaders have assured the Association board that they will not subject themselves to the practices forbidden under the agreement.

Publishing companies owned or controlled by motion picture interests who have signed the agreement include: Famous Music Corporation, Paramount; Leo Feist, Inc., Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; Sam Fox Publishing Company, 20th Century-Fox; Harms, Inc., Warner Brothers; T. B. Harms, Warner Brothers; Movietone Music Corporation, 20th Century-Fox; New World Music Corporation, Warner Brothers; Popular Melodies, Inc., Paramount; Remick Music Corporation, Warner Brothers; Robbins Music Corporation, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; and M. 5. No music publisher shall pay or contract to pay any compensation, of any nature whatsoever, either as royalties or otherwise, to any performer, singer, actor, musician or orchestra leader, or any agent or representative thereof, either directly or indirectly, in connection with the publication of any song or other musical composition, unless such person shall be the bonafide composer or writer of the words and/or music of such song or musical composition.

6. No music publisher shall pay or employ any person to sing or play or exploit such music publisher's songs in any place of public or private entertainment unless such person be regularly employed by such music publisher exclusively.

8. No music publisher shall pay, directly or indirectly, in cash, merchandise, favor, or exceptional services, any employee of, or the manager of any syndicate or department store or distributor of music, or any store of whatever nature, or in connection with or consideration of any services rendered or to be rendered by any such person, or pay any sum of money as salary or consideration for the services or assistance of any employee of a syndicate, department, or other store where music is handled or sold in connection with or as a consideration for the sale of such music publisher's music or publications.

9. No music publisher shall give away, directly or indirectly, or through any subsidiary or associated company, or through any person employed by such music publisher, copies of music or other material of any nature whatsoever except for the bonafide purposes of "sampling," either to the trade or to professional performers, and all copies of music, of any nature whatsoever, given away under the provisions of this article must be plainly marked in some appropriate manner to indicate that they are "samples" and not for resale. Each music publisher shall keep in some appropriate manner an accurate account of the merchandise thus given away. This shall not apply, however, to copies and orchestrations distributed for professional use only.

10. It is the intention of each of the provisions hereinabove specifically set out to include within their scope all subterfuges of any nature whatsoever which may be devised or attempted to thwart the purpose or intent of the provision.

You know how that helped in the case of "San Francisco", "Suzy", "Gorgeous Hussy" to name just a few recent billboard-campaign-pictures! Great Pictures PLUS Great Promotion means PLUS in the bank!

The following telegram has been received from our Consul at Barcelona:

"Would appreciate following message being sent to Ernest A. Rovelstad, Managing Editor, Motion Picture Herald, Rockefeller Center, New York, 'Request you register fact in next edition Motion Picture Herald that correspondent in Barcelona, Mr. Plummer, admits having been deceived in reporting page 87 of August 22, that Columbia accepts orders from an anarchist and that Armando Manez has passed to the anarchist forces. All these statements are false and we appeal to sense of fairness of that publication that they correct immediately these statements in justice to undersigned, Harry Chapin Plummer, Armando Manez, Barcelona, September 5.' "

In forwarding this message the Department of State accepts no responsibility therefor and transmits it merely as a courtesy in view of the interruption of normal means of communication with Barcelona.—

Secretary of State.

The following reply was wired to Mr. Hull by Martin Quigley, publisher of MOTION PICTURE HERALD:

Honorable Cordell Hull,
Secretary of State,
Washington, D. C.

Motion picture Herald acknowledges and expresses appreciation for courtesy your telegram conveying message from United States Consul at Barcelona. Motion Picture Herald regrets exceedingly the inclusion in published article signed by Harry C. Plummer, Barcelona correspondent, of false and misleading information and will be pleased to disavow and retract the misleading statements in the next issue and to state that Mr. Plummer admits having been deceived in reporting "That Columbia accepts orders from an anarchist and that Armando Manez has passed to the anarchist forces." We would greatly appreciate if the Department of State would convey this information to our Consul at Barcelona.

MARTIN QUIGLEY, Publisher,
Motion Picture Herald.

The article concerned film conditions in Barcelona during the rebellion in Spain.

HOLLYWOOD OPTIMISTIC ON BUSINESS: ZUKOR

Mounting Grosses Stir Film Colony to Enthusiasm; Is Reflected in Productions

The sure and certain cycle by which success begets success has set in with respect to motion pictures and mounting box office grosses are having direct reflection in the mounting quality and magnitude of film product, according to the observations of Adolph Zukor, chairman of the board of directors of Paramount Pictures and in direct charge of production for that company.

Mr. Zukor arrived in New York last week for a ten day stay devoted chiefly to arrangement of personal affairs contemplating a long period of intense application to studio matters in Hollywood.

Hollywood of Single Mind

Hollywood is of a single mind with respect to the economic future, Mr. Zukor indicated, and there is no sign of holding back on the ground of political uncertainty or world conditions. Studios are going forward with the production of bigger and more expensive pictures and into these the technicians, authors, actors and directors are putting effort founded on a kind of confidence not generally shared in years if ever before. As news of broken house records and swelling picture grosses comes into the production center, enthusiasm gains in proportion and work is proceeded with in a spirit of conviction that maintenance of high quality standards will maintain or advance box office revenue.

Paramount pictures about which the veteran executive was especially encouraged are "The Texas Rangers," "Rhythm on the Range" and "The General Died at Dawn." Recently completed pictures on which he expects receipts above normal are "The Big Broadcast of 1937," "Wives Never Know," "Champagne Waltz" and "Wedding Present."

To Expand Appropriations

In emphasizing the degree in which confidence born of the box office has animated production plans, Mr. Zukor divulged that Paramount will spend -10,000,000 on the making of fifteen pictures during the next six months, exclusive of the rest of the program.

Mr. Zukor arrived in New York immediately prior to the Labor Day weekend and spent the three-day holiday at his home in New City. He was to be in his office at the Paramount building the early part of the week and there was a possibility that a meeting of the board of directors would be called during his stay. It was believed that no changes of major significance would be suggested by the chairman of the board. Only routine matters were handled at a board meeting held last week.

Foreshadowing Mr. Zukor's personal utterance on the Hollywood trend was the announcement, made last week, that Paramount would increase its schedule for the coming season to a total of 75 pictures. As a step toward this end, the company has adopted the unit system of production and has turned its attention to the out of doors for suitably diversified product.

Unit producers whose product Paramount will handle are Cecil B. DeMille, Frank Lloyd, King Vidor, Ernst Lubitsch, B. P. Schulberg, Emanuel Cohen, Richard A. Rowland, Leo McCarey, King Vidor and Wesley Ruggles. Additionally, Paramount had under steady contract 78 players, 60 writers and 14 directors. Regular Paramount producers are A. M. Botsford, Benjamin Glazer, Lewis H. Gensler, Arthur E. Hornblow, Jr., Henry Henigson, Harold Hurley, E. Loyd Sheldon and Harlan Thompson.

Among the future productions of which Mr. Zukor expects much are "Maid of Salem," in which Claudette Colbert and Fred MacMurray will appear under Frank Lloyd's direction, and "Go West, Young Man," which stars Mae West with Warren William in the principal male role. Chief among the outdoor pictures coming up on the year's program, perhaps, is "The Plainsman," on which Cecil B. DeMille is engaged and in which Gary Cooper stars opposite Jean Arthur.

Exhibitors Press Anti-Trust Suits

Trials are near in two anti-trust suits filed by independent exhibitors in New Orleans and Trenton, N. J., against major distributors.

The action of the Ledirk Amusement Company against distributors is on the October calendar of the United States district court at Trenton. Conferences on the defense are being held by Merritt Lane and Robert Benjamin of Phillips & Nizer.

The first hearing of the case against several film companies filed by George Fuller of Pensacola, Fla., will be heard before Judge Borah in federal court in that city next week.

Three Companies Declare Dividends

Twentieth Century-Fox, Loew's, Inc., and Columbia pictures have declared dividends on their common stock.

Loew's, Inc., declared an extra dividend of 50 cents and the regular quarterly dividend of the same amount. The Columbia quarterly dividend of 25 cents a share on the common stock is payable October 1st to holders of record September 18th. A cash dividend of 37½ cents a share for the third quarter on the outstanding preferred stock of Twentieth Century-Fox was declared at the monthly meeting of the board. It is payable September 30th to holders of record on September 12th.

U.S. TO SHOW SECOND "NEW DEAL" FILM IN COMPETITION TO THEATRES

This Time It's To Be a Picture of the Effects of Too Much Water Along the Mississippi River; Distribution Uncertain

Despite Industry's Refusal to Distribute "The Plough That Broke the Plains," Government Will Try Again

by FRANCIS L. BURT
in Washington

The United States Government's official motion picture exhibition activities practiced in competition to the taxpaying theatre owner will not cease with "The Plough That Broke the Plains," widely branded as "partisan propaganda." Having screened the results of aridity, in "The Plough," the Administration's Resettlement Administration now is planning to picturize the effects of too much water along the "Father of Rivers."

Undaunted by the rigid refusal of motion picture distributors to handle "The Plough" through regular theatrical channels, the Administration for the second time has the hope of reaching the greatest number of theatre screens in the shortest period, and will attempt to negotiate release of the new Mississippi film again through the distributing companies. If unsuccessful, the government again will resort to distribution through the field offices of the Resettlement Administration, showing the picture wherever independent owners will book it, and privately or to public groups wherever not. That the distributors again will refuse to have anything to do with the project seems certain.

Although "New Deal" agencies recently have come in for much criticism and some ridicule for showing pictures of cattle grazing on the lawn of the North Dakota White House and of skulls of dead cattle taken from different angles and at different spots and then shown as evidence of the drought as in "The Plough," it plans to go right ahead with its pictures showing the worst of everything.

A Matter of Funds

"The Plough That Broke the Plains," the first of the Resettlement's pictures, now is said to show conditions which prevail in only a small section of the country. If the Administration's new picture of the Mississippi River shows, as has been suggested, the effects of improper land use, resulting in soil erosion, deforestation, overgrazing and floods, it will be equally representative of only a small section of a vast country. And floods were known along the Mississippi long before Mark Twain made the river famous.

While the Resettlement's plans are still more or less in a tentative stage, they call for a scenario by Pare Lorentz and music by Virgil Thompson, both having performed similar jobs for "The Plough."

Further plans, however, depend upon whether Resettlement is to have any money to spend in the future. As a result of changes in policy which will center relief efforts on the drought-stricken areas, the RA has been drastically curtailed, but it can be safely said that if there is any money at all, RA officials will see if they can't find enought to provide for at least another picture.

PHILADELPHIA MPTO PLANS PRICE FIGHT

While Rocky Mountain exhibitors were meeting in Denver and members of New Jersey Allied were convening in Atlantic City, 40 theatre men assembled in Philadelphia at the first meeting of the new United Motion Picture Theatre Owners to take action on current charges for new season product. A committee of five was appointed to meet with exhibitors individually to hear their complaints and to try to formulate some plan whereby high prices can be checked. Discussion of a booking boycott failed to result in action. A resolution against film stars appearing on radio programs was passed.

A third shift in dates for the annual convention of the Independent Theatres Protective Association fixes September 16th and 17th as the definite dates. It will be held in the Plankinton hotel, Milwaukee. Speakers scheduled include Edward A. Golden, W.A. (Al) Steffes and H. M. Richey.

Mr. Lorentz, it is disclosed, has been studying reports of conditions along the Mississippi for the last three months. To obtain pictures showing the worst of the conditions which exist along the river, he will have to go to Minnesota and the North Dakota wilds to film the results of excessive timber cutting, which leads to floods and erosion, as well as into Louisiana, to show the effects of the floods.

A Mississippi picture is said at Washington to be an ideal vehicle to advertise the ideas of RA officials as to power, flood control and resettlement. About 40 resettlement projects are located along the river.

A Happier Tone

Administration officials so far have had little to say about the contemplated further invasion of the motion picture field, but it has been indicated that the river film will have a happier tone than did the "Plough" opus of the prairies, since after showing how bad things have been it will depict the happy natives of the resettlement projects, free from all fears of "Ol' Debbil Ribber," working in their own cotton and tilling their own vegetable gardens.

And, while they are not committing themselves, RA heads are hopeful that Hollywood will be remorseful over its refusal to distribute "The Plough" and will take over the new picture.

That the Resettlement Administration has not been unsuccessful entirely in getting its documentary "Plough That Broke the Plains" to the public is evidenced in a telegram from George Gercke, Resettlement Administration representative at New Haven, advising that the picture "is starting its seventh week in Boston at the Fine Arts theatre."

While from Washington came the report that at least one Government agency, the Electric Farm and Home Authority, determined not to depend on the motion picture industry for distribution of Administration films, propaganda or otherwise, is considering the idea of providing 16 mm. projectors and prints on the wholesale to educational groups, to schools, colleges, and other similar institutions of mass attention.

Awaiting Next Congress

Regardless, Washington still is awaiting for Congress to open to hear the full import of the Administration's "partisan propaganda" in the present Presidential campaign. As early as last June, Pennsylvania's Republican Senator Davis promised he would get action at the next Congressional session on his resolution calling for a Senate investigation of emergency governmental agencies' motion picture activities. Senator Davis first had in mind the many sided motion picture activities of the Works Progress Administration, which recently awarded a contract to Pathe News to make WPA "propaganda" films and show them in theatres as regular Pathe newsreel material.

"The Plough That Broke the Plains," however, last June, attracted considerably more attention and criticism from the Republican anti-New Dealers. The picture then drew unexpected fire from certain parts of the windswept west depicted in its text as devastated by dust storms. To Texas Legislator Eugene Worley was imputed one threat to demand of the Democratic National Convention that the film be suppressed and another to give Resettlement Administrator Rexford Tugwell a "punch in the nose" if it is not. Mr. Tugwell caused "The Plough" to be produced, in his official capacity of Resettlement administrator.

Mexican Government To Help Producer

by JAMES LOCKHART
in Mexico City

President Lazare Cardenas has promised a group of capitalists moral and material support of the Government for a project to produce in a studio to be built at Tia Juana. The new company, Compania Estudios Imperio Aztama. S.A., had asked for a Federal concession. Employment will be given to Mexicans for the most part, it was pointed out, but foreign technicians will be imported.

SIX COMPETITIVE CIRCUITS FIGURE IN POOLING DEALS IN SIX STATES

Large and Small Exhibitors as Well as Distributors Figure in Moves for Product and Patronage Over Broad Area

Pooling of theatres by competitive exhibition forces for mutual benefit in product and profits, thereby eliminating threatening tension between the competitive situations is now being conducted on the wholesale. New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Iowa, Ohio and Virginia are the scenes of pooling moves between major circuits and smaller operators as well as with the major distributing organizations.

In Brooklyn, a deal sponsored by Si Fabian has been closed and he will operate the three key theatres; Loew's and Warners have concluded pooling arrangements in Pittsburgh; negotiations between Paramount and Warners in Philadelphia, in work for some time, have been consummated; Paramount, through a pooling, is retiring from the New Jersey - Pennsylvania territory; Ike Libson and William Skirboll in Cleveland have concluded their pooling arrangement, which has several years to run; Loew's and Wilmer & Vincent have pooled their houses in Richmond and Norfolk, Virginia, while Loew's, RKO and Warners are involved in a deal in New Jersey.

The pooling deal in Brooklyn, involving three houses, the Paramount, Fox and Strand, will all be operated by Si Fabian on a two-year basis. Twentieth Century-Fox and Columbia product will thus become available to the Paramount and Strand as a result of the new arrangement. It also gives the houses Warner and Paramount product.

Philadelphia Pool

Negotiations which had been on and off for some time will be completed within the next few days between Warners and Paramount for the pooling of seven neighborhood houses under Warner operation in Philadelphia. Warners are to take over the four Paramount houses and combine the operation with their three starting this month. In the deal are the Sixty-ninth Street, Circle and State theatres of Warner Brothers, and Paramount's Frankford, Roosevelt, Tower and Nixon.

With conclusion of an operating pool with Warners to embrace the company's Philadelphia houses, Paramount will retire from active operation in the New Jersey and Pennsylvania territory, which was invaded by the Skouras Brothers in behalf of Paramount several years back when Paramount and Warners were at odds over product deals. In New Jersey, Paramount has a 20-year operating agreement with the Adams Brothers, independent operators, covering Newark and Paterson.

When Loew's closes this week for the resumption of operation of the Penn in Pittsburgh, it is expected the theatre will again be pooled with Warners' Stanley and the Warner. Before Loews gave up the Penn recently the three theatres had been pooled, with each circuit operating its own units, but combining the product and splitting the profits of all three houses.

Having completed a pooling deal with Ike Libson, William Skirboll, head of the Skirboll circuit in Cleveland, said this week that he plans no further expansion moves.

Virginia Pool

Loew's and Wilmer and Vincent this week pooled their theatres in Richmond and Norfolk, Va. Involved are Loew's theatres of the same name in both cities and the W. and V. Norva and Grandy in Norfolk and the Colonial and National in Richmond. Joe Vogel of Loew's and Walter Vincent of the southern circuit will act as a committee of two to supervise operations with buying and booking to be handled in New York. Each circuit will continue to operate its own houses. The theatres up until last year when the arrangement was dropped had been pooled for eight years.

Price cutting has been eliminated in Sioux City and giveaways shortly will be discarded as a result of the recently completed 10-year pool of eight first and second run theatres in and around the city, Mort Singer revealed this week in New York. All but two theatres, A. H. Blank's Capitol and Mr. Singer's Orpheum are included in the arrangement. The deal is working out advantageously for all concerned, Mr. Singer said. Mr. Blank does the buying and booking for the eight houses involved. Affiliated Theatres, Inc., is the company formed to operate the pool. Mr. Singer and Mr. Blank both have a stock interest in the firm.

Pooling of the Loew, RKO and Warner houses in Union City and North Bergen, N. J., has been temporarily delayed. Indications are that the parties may get together by the end of the month.

Average Weekly Attendance Seen at 80,000,000 This Year

Average weekly attendance at theatres in this country will pass the 80,000,000 mark in the new season, according to an estimate made by the Motion Picture Daily. The figure represents a gain from a low of 60,000,000 in 1932 and 65,000,000 for the two years following.

Estimates for 1935 placed the weekly average at about 75,000,000 and in the first half of the current year the figure was increased to 77,000,000. The all-time high was reached in 1930 when an estimated 110,000,000 attended theatres every week.

No marked increase in theatre openings or the building of new theatres is taken into account in the estimate for attendance during the 1936-37 season. Approximately 16,000 theatres are said to be in operation now as compared with 12,500 in 1932-33. Any increase in this number during the new season will have only a negligible effect on attendance, it is believed. The increased attendance will result from improved business conditions which will permit additional numbers to attend theatres now in operation and others to attend more often than heretofore.

On the basis of these estimates and the probability of generally increased admissions and film revenue during the new season, grosses may approximate $930,000,000, and film rentals in the neighborhood of $300,000,000.

Mississippi Circuit Purchased by Saenger

The Saenger Theatres Corporation has purchased the interests of Mississippi Theatres, Inc., with holdings in Meridian, Hattiesburg and Laurel. A. H. Yoemans, head of Mississippi announced that the purchase price was paid in cash but would not divulge the amount. He intends to remain in the theatre business to build up, if possible, an even larger circuit than the one just sold.

Tri-States Controls Sioux City Theatres

With the exception of the Orpheum, a Mort Singer house, Tri-States now has control of the Sioux City, Iowa, first run situation as well as the second runs, A. H. Blank, head of the circuit, revealed in New York this week. The circuit recently pooled with five subsequent runs to gain control.

A.T.&T. Quiz Attorney Appointed by Commission

The Federal Communications Commission in Washington this week appointed Carl I. Wheat, public utilities counsel for the City of Los Angeles, as associate counsel for the American Telephone & Telegraph investigation. He will be in charge of long lines toll rates and other related rate matters.

Mr. Wheat's appointment presages a complete change in the tactics employed by counsel in the investigation thus far, tactics which have brought unfavorable reaction to the investigation particularly because of the ex parte nature of the public hearings in which officials being questioned were not permitted to offer complete explanations of their answers.

AUSTRALIANS SEE HOPE OF SOLVING TRADE PROBLEMS WITH NEW BOARD

New Zealand Expected to Come Under Jurisdiction of Group at Melbourne; Exhibitors Seek Tax Reduction

by CLIFF HOLT
in Melbourne

Formation of the Film Board of Trade, a tribunal designed to settle trade disputes without recourse to political participation, is seen as an encouraging development here. The board has been created as a result of the trade's unsuccessful overtures for arbitrary assistance from the new South Wales Government. It is not the first tribunal of its character in Australia, but a similar board which functioned in Queensland some 15 years ago had only state powers, whereas the decisions of the new tribunal will be effective throughout the commonwealth, and it is possible that New Zealand also will come within its jurisdiction later.

Distributors and exhibitors will have equal representation. Early forecasts suggest that the chairman will be Dan Carroll, well known Australian theatre owner, and that Sir Victor Wilson (President of the Motion Picture Distributors Association), H. C. McIntyre (managing director of Universal), and N. B. Freeman (head of MGM here) will represent distributors; while Charles E. Munro (managing director of Hoyts and General Theatres Corporation), Ken W. Asprey (director of Greater Union Theatres), and William Harrop (for the independents) will represent exhibitors.

An expenditure of $500,000 has been embarked upon by MGM in the construction of its new house in Brisbane. Building is already in progress.

Seek Reduced Taxes

South Australian exhibitors are agitating for a reduction of theatre license fees and amusement taxation, and in view of the fact that the industry more than did its share during the depression years, it is felt that their representations will be sympathetically received now that the state's financial affairs are showing such rapid improvement.

Amusement taxation was a wartime emergency measure in the Commonwealth but it came to remain. However, about five years ago the Federal Government repealed the Amusement Tax Act and in 1934-5 Queensland did the same; and the industry has been hopefully but vainly awaiting for the remaining states to follow suit.

Statistics show that in respect of taxation on admissions, South Australia is worse off than any other state. Elsewhere, the lowest taxable admission is ninepence and in most cases one shilling; in South Australia there is a halfpenny tax on threepence admissions, rising to sevenpence on a 3/6 ticket. License fees in South Australia leave its sister states standing except Queensland, where the absence of the amusement tax accounts for the high rate. In New South Wales, for instance, the theatre licensing law requires a fee of £1 ($5) per annum up to 500 seats, £2 up to 1,000, and £10 in excess of 1,000. But in South Australia licensed theatre proprietors pay £1/10/- on a theatre of 100 seats; £3 from 200 to 400; £7/10/- for 500 to 700; £15 for 800 to 900; and £20 for a capacity of 1,000 or more.

TIBET SUCCUMBS TO LURE OF FILMS

Lhasa, Buddhist sacred city and capital of mysterious Tibet, has succumbed to the lure of motion picture entertainment. H. A. O'Connor, general manager for United Artists in India, has negotiated the first motion picture contract of its kind with an exhibitor in Tibet. Initial subjects to be released will be Douglas Fairbanks in "Around the World in 80 Minutes" and "Samarang." Prints of the pictures and portable projection equipment will be shipped from Bombay to Lhasa on the backs of mules and yaks, the only means of transportation in the otherwise inaccessible territory of central Asia.

Sound Financing Needed

Overseas liners this week brought with them two interesting personalities—one, a well known visitor, Victor Jory, who will star in Columbia's Australian-produced feature, "Rangle River," the other, Ernest Turnbull, returning from London after clinching a deal by which the newly formed Gaumont-British Dominions Films Distributors Ltd. will release in Australia and New Zealand the products of Gaumont-British, British and Dominions, London Films, Gainsborough, Twickenham and British Lion, and Fox English-produced pictures.

Jory was given a tumultuous reception. He mentioned that since Helen Twelvetrees and Charles Farrell have told Hollywood about their experiences in Australia other American players are eager for a trip. Jean Arthur was one player he mentioned in this connection.

Turnbull pressed the view that American and English units were willing and eager to participate in Australian production, so long as some sound commercial system for production and distribution on an international basis could be evolved. At the same time, he said, Britain was dissatisfied because no provision was made for British films under the New South Wales and Victorian Quota legislation, despite the fact that Australian-made pictures were regarded as British quota subjects under the British Quota Act. A proposal had been submitted to the British Government to debar pictures made in the Dominions as counting as British quota pictures and instead, to place them on a reciprocal basis with tariffs.

19 NATIONS ADOPT 16 mm. STANDARDS PROPOSED BY ENGINEERS' SOCIETY

Budapest Convention Action Ends Dispute That Followed Reversing of Sound Track in Germans' Copy of Drawings

Standards proposed by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers of America for 16 mm. film and equipment have been adopted unanimously by the International Standards Association at a meeting in Budapest, according to a cablegram received this week by Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, chairman of the sectional committee on motion pictures of the American Standards Association, from S. K. Wolf, executive vice-president of the SMPE, who is representing the American group at the congress.

Countries included in the membership of the International Standards Association are: Austria, Belgium, Czecho-Slovakia, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Holland, Hungary, Italy, Japan, Norway, Poland, Rumania, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland and Russia. Representatives of the national standards bodies of these countries, corresponding to the American Standards Association in the United States, attended the congress.

The adoption marks the success of efforts extending over several years by standards associations of all countries of the world to agree on uniform specifications for the narrow width film. Two years ago the SMPE formulated and adopted a number of dimensional standards relating to 16 mm. sound film which were accepted in the United States without dissent and at first seemed scheduled to be adopted by European countries.

When the Deutscher Industrie Normen standards were published they appeared at first to be identical with the American plans, but it was discovered later that in copying the drawings the German engineers apparently had constructed mirror images so that the position of the sound track was reversed.

Submitted to Referendum

Before the error was discovered several European manufacturers had constructed equipment representing large investments along the lines laid down in the German drawings and were reluctant to change.

The International Standards Association was asked to arbitrate and at a meeting in Berlin last year it was decided to submit the question by referendum to the 19 national standardizing bodies comprising the association.

Questionnaires were sent out embodying complete information on both standards and the countries were asked to indicate their preferences.

Adopted by United Kingdom

England and the Dominions of the United Kingdom are not members of the International Standards Association, but the SMPE specifications have been universally adopted in those countries.

The British choice is believed to have influenced the decision of other countries and before the meeting in Budapest this week a majority of the important manufacturing countries had subscribed to the American standards.

Germany and the nations which had been following the Deutscher Industrie Normen plans agreed to withdraw their standards and conform, in future, to the American specifications as the world standard.

The decision reached at the congress, according to Sylvan Harris, secretary of the sectional committee on motion pictures of the American Standards Association, will have an important effect on the future development of the 16 mm. field, not solely because of the adoption of the American standard, but because of the fact that world standards will be uniform.

Warner Brothers Acts To Restrain Bette Davis

Warner Brothers on Wednesday obtained a temporary injunction in London restraining Bette Davis, now in England, from appearing in stage or film productions without their consent, according to Associated Press despatches.

Miss Davis has signed with Toeplitz Productions, Ltd., to appear in "I'll Take the Low Road." Toeplitz will continue with plans to produce.

Clement Chandler Dies

Clement F. Chandler, 56, advertising and publicity man, died last week in Hollywood of coronary thrombosis. In 1913 he left the editorial staff of the Chicago American to become assistant to Victor Eubank, publicity director for Essanay in Chicago. Subsequently he was with First National Exhibitors Circuit and more recently with Warner Brothers in Hollywood.

Harry Bryant Dead

Harry E. Bryant, 58, manager for many years of New York stage productions, including "Bertha the Sewing Machine Girl," died last week in New York of pneumonia. During his 35 years on Broadway, he served many producers, including Klaw and Erlanger, A. H. Woods, George C. Tyler and Louis F. Werba. Some of his more recent shows were "Hold Everything," "Tip Toes" and "Girl Crazy."

Argentine-Brazil Studios Deal for All-Year Work

by N. BRUSKI
in Buenos Aires

Alfredo P. Muria, director and owner of Productora Argentine, S.I.D.E., has closed an arrangement with the Brazilian Government that will make it possible for him to produce the year 'round, in Brazil and the Argentine, and in both Spanish and Portuguese.

Mr. Muria will work in Genaro Ciavarra's studio at Rio. They are former business associates. Mr. Ciavarra will come to Buenos Aires in September to take charge of Productora Argentine while Muria goes to Germany and the United States to purchase equipment designed to put the plant on a footing with American plants.

Present plans call for eight features for the season, with four to be ready in January.

The ministers of justice and public relations have named a national cultural committee to function in connection with the Argentine Motion Picture Institute. On the committee are Dr. Matias Sanchez Sorondo, national senator, and the technicolor director of the Argentine Institute, Juan A. Bracamonte.

Francisco Boo's plans for a new theatre in Buenos Aires are drawn on a magnificent scale. The house, designed to seat 4,400, will have a tearoom and bar, a swimming pool open day and night the year 'round, billiard rooms, bowling alleys, a restaurant on one of the upper terraces with a dance floor, and possibly a garage in the basement.

Cordero, Cavallo and Lautaret will operate the house. This firm already controls the Grand Cine Florida.

The house will have a large stage as well as cooling and heating plants and a room for television. The television will be experimental. A special screen will be used to show audiences acts being put on in the room.

FOREIGN FILMS IN CHINA SHOW BEST SIX MONTHS IN LAST THREE YEARS

Censors Forbid Clearance of Print of Barred Film Unless Shipment Is Made Through Post Office to America

Only One Picture Barred Completely of 168 Submitted by Eight American Distributors to Nanking Board of Review

by J. P. KOEHLER
in Shanghai

Foreign motion pictures in China have experienced one of the best six months in at least three years, even though there has been a slackening of receipts in the past four to six weeks. This decline is due partly to the hot weather, now running well above 90° F. and also the humidity for which Shanghai is famous (or infamous, as you like); and to the fact that Shanghai's summer exodus to Tsingtao, Cheefoo, Wei-hai-wei, Japan and other resort centers has taken out of the city thousands of the best of the cinema patronage.

Several hot weather releases have drawn well. "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town" (Columbia) had a very successful run at the 1,500-seat air-conditioned Nanking theatre in Shanghai. "Klondike Annie" (Paramount), after considerable apprehension as to its passing both the Chinese and foreign censors, did well above average business at the Grand (2,000 seats), and "The Princess Comes Across" (Paramount) was being released at the Grand theatre as this was being written. Warner-First National again was to crash the hot weather with its big gangster picture, "Bullets or Ballots," following at the Grand. Last year Warner broke hot weather records with "G-Men" at the same theatre and re-established confidence in hot weather releases in air-conditioned houses. MGM expects to release "San Francisco" and "Fury" during the summer.

The closing of the Nanking theatre in Shanghai for re-conditioning undoubtedly will have a strong bearing on the box-offices of the other four first run cinemas. A complete overhauling and redecoration is to be done. Always a popular cinema here, it should emerge in its new dress to a very successful season with M-G-M holding the favorite dates as before.

168 Features Submitted

In the last six months 168 new features by the eight major American distributors have been submitted to the Chinese censors at Nanking. In this lot, only one picture has been completely banned—"East of Java" (Universal)—after several reviews in April finally was ousted and Universal was ordered to ship the picture back to the United States.

Herein lies a new issue. A Censor Committee Regulation requires re-export out of China of all banned films, but does not state where such shipment shall be made to. It was desirable that "East of Java" be shipped to some nearby port—not in China—but the censors forbade clearance of the print unless shipment was made through the Chinese Post Office to the United States.

Confiscation of banned prints has been the subject of several conferences and the matter is now in the hands of the consular agents. It is not believed that, under extraterritorial law, prints can be confiscated, such prints being the sole property of a foreign concern and protected by extraterritoriality.

ROGUES GALLERY OF SOUND PICTURES

Department of Justice agents in Washington are experimenting with a new method of fighting criminals, this time with a rogues' gallery of sound motion pictures. J. Edgar Hoover, head of the so-called G-Men, admitted that his department was studying the practicability of making sound pictures of federal prisoners to facilitate future identification.

The study was first suggested by Colonel H. Norman Schwarzkopf, former head of the New Jersey State police, Mr. Hoover said, and the federal bureau has become "very interested" in the possibility of identifying criminals in the future through a study of their movements and mannerisms.

Prefer Conciliatory Action

Distributors in general are reluctant to use their extraterritorial privileges, experience bearing out that conciliatory action is always the best way to handle affairs involving comparatively minor financial transactions. And it is a well-established fact that the American authorities hesitate to interfere in any situation that even remotely bears on Chinese internal policies.

Some 20 features were deleted in part, with scenes or phrases objectionable to the Chinese censors taken out. About six features had their Chinese titles changed by the censors. These native language titles are given to a film after consultation between the first release exhibitor and the distributor, and are selected so as to give the film the best possible advertising value as a literal or even a fair translation of the foreign title conveys nothing to the Chinese cinema goer. Considerable controversy results at times over the arbitrary changing of such titles by the censors, but, beyond a local irritation and protest at the censors assuming what is termed interference in sales, nothing serious has occurred; provided time permits, the selection of a new Chinese title can be made by the submitter of the film. Usually time does not permit, therefore the rub.

Short subjects dealing with gambling have been closely scrutinized. Shanghai and Tientsin are strong centers of "Hai Alai," on a pari-mutuel system, and a film "Hai Alai" (Fox) on this game was banned by the Chinese censors as conducive to gambling.

Censor fees paid to the Chinese Censor Committee in Nanking for the first six months of 1936 amounted to approximately C.$28,000. That this would have been augmented by at least C.$3,000 more, had the fees for re-censorship of expired licenses not been reduced, is certain.

This matter of re-censorship of licenses after the three-year term has expired is now the subject of a petition for reduction. The present charge is now double the original charge. (The original charge is C.$20.00 per 500 meters.) Only the strongest films can stand the re-censoring fee—the "life" of most programs being less than 3 years in China.

That Chinese production will take a leap in the coming season is a foregone conclusion, in the light of activities now centering at several native studios.

The Star Motion Picture Company, with studios at Shanghai, has just contracted for a very large increase in studio and stage area, equipment and buildings. It is rumored that a heavy governmental subsidy aided this studio in its program of expansion, but confirmation is lacking, and actual denial has been made by responsible heads of Star. Nevertheless, Chinese productions are pushing forward. There is no question but that Canton's 40 per cent foreign quota was proposed by native production sources, and that the desire to fill the extra play time, now scarcely covered by Chinese films, is the cause of the sudden rush to expand. What the result will be in Central China remains to be seen. The threatened Canton rebellion seems to have petered out by the usual monetary agreement to satisfy the Southwestern government's need of funds. Foreign film business in Canton has suffered heavily in the past year.

Chinese Maritime Customs duties for the first six months of 1936, paid for films imported by the eight major American distributors, are estimated at least C. $125,000.

Revenue accruing to the Chinese Post-Office and railways from film transportation of the same films must certainly reach close to C. $40,000 for the half year.

Certainly, between customs duties, censor fees, transportation charges, the Chinese government derives a neat revenue from these eight distributors alone, but these eight do 95 per cent of the foreign film business in China proper.

Speaking of censorship and kindred problems, what the Chinese want is what every nation seems to want right now with exception of the common sense British and Yankees, and that is, to portray native life as officialdom would like it to be.

Forget about the beggar villages, the coolies sweating under loads, the dirt, the filth, the utmost low-level of poverty stricken millions, the real banditry, the political grafters common to all nations, the gangsters, prostitution, rickshas (Shanghai alone having 30,000 ricksha pullers under license), and the thousand and one ills that are common knowledge to every tourist; and portray only the ideal in prospect and in formation, the new athletic stadiums, the mass educational efforts, the new architecture, the new road-building and bridge building and communications, the new airways, and so on. Hide the rest behind the official blinkers of censorship. Add to that Kwangtung's latest gesture against foreign films—the 40 per cent foreign ouota!! And the answer is what?

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

Maestro Alfred Salmaggi, impressario of opera for the masses, has been pegging away doggedly for nearly 30 years trying to make opera the same in this country that it is in his native Italy. Acquiring 34 diplomas, 14 decorations and nine children—the diplomas and decorations were awarded for his musical propensities—Maestro Salmaggi saw one after another of his mass operatic ventures crash resoundingly on the rocks of financial difficulties. But his buoyant faith in popular opera has never wavered, and so Salmaggi's opera at New York's musty old Hippodrome now is a fixture in the city's life.

Great Broadway motion picture impressarios were startled two years ago, or thereabouts, when the Maestro's first night of popular opera at the Hippodrome saw New York's traffic in that part of Sixth Avenue disrupted for hours. It was a riotous send-off. Platoons of policemen were unable to cope with the crowds—thousands of them. Nearby exhibitors of motion pictures became frightened over the threatening competition. What they did not know was that a little Italian printer in the East Side's Ghetto had been entrusted with the job of printing 10,000 passes and spreading them over several weeks, a few hundreds each week. Not knowing English very well, the printer turned out the whole 10,000 passes all dated for the opening night! Which explained the sudden flowering of a love for opera when 10,000 devotees, all clutching free passes, converged on the Hippodrome for their rights and for 10,000 seats, where the Hippodrome bulges with a mere 3,681.

Mass psychology worked, without any aid from Maestro Salmaggi, and today the Hippodrome stands a success, after two years.

According to Cecil B. DeMille, "Any producer who can turn out ten GOOD pictures a year is a genius."

As a matter of fact, he's ten geniuses.

Mr. Fernand Louis Baehler, Jr., young aspiring reporter on Motion Picture Herald's staff, is highly flattered on the receipt from the publishers of Wall Street Journal, of an engraved "invitation" to become a subscriber to that daily financial newspaper—at special low summer rates.

"Your name was selected among others after a careful investigation of records relating to security holdings and indications of interest in financial news," the Wall Street publishers wrote him.

Mr. Baehler was startled to hear of the possible existence of some hidden or sudden wealth and immediately took an accounting of his holdings, which verified in his own mind the already well established fact that his total wealth, net, was: (1) $28.06 in a Christmas Club savings account; (2) a three-day equity in a Quigley Publications weekly salary check; (3) $2.85 outstanding on loan to a Broadway press agent employed by a $100,000,000 distributor, and (4) an odd assortment of buttons, safety pins and matchbox covers.

Mr. Baehler is presently writing the Wall Street Journal of his appreciation for the compliment of their "invitation" to subscribe, "discriminately" made as they said it was. However, he is keeping their four cents postage prepaid return envelope as a souvenir.

Probably the most ingenuous method employed by American sales managers in Spain to escape the danger zone for safer precincts was the ruse used by J. H. Seidelman of Columbia. Mr. Seidelman was in Spain, in the hinterland, en route to Barcelona at the beginning of the hostilities, when, some 20 miles inland, the military forces commandeered the locomotive of the train in which he was riding. They left the passengers to forge for themselves. After sleeping in the coaches for two days, busses arrived from the Red Government to pick up some athletes who were heading for the Workers' Olympics in Barcelona. Only athletes were permitted to board the busses, all other passengers being forced to remain abandoned with the train. But not Mr. Seidelman. Showing a silver "loving cup" which he had been carrying to present to Columbia's Barcelona office for establishing a film sales record in Spain, the foreign manager passed himself off as a first-class athlete, offering the trophy as proof of his prowess. Arriving in Barcelona, Mr. Seidelman was guarded as carefully as the athletic heroes. Then one dark night he stole away to the piers and to the French steamship Djenne, which sailed for safety the following day.

Whitney Bolton on Broadway is repeating Will Gordon's story of the great ventriloquist who was tops in his profession, a big vaudeville star from coast to coast. When vaudeville fell apart and vaudevillians began to eat themselves to stay alive, the superb ventriloquist was only momentarily stunned. For some years he had been interested in spiritualism and knew all the phoney tricks of the mediums. So he decided to become a spiritualist—but a good one.

He used the high art of his ventriloquism to help him along and in a few months he was making a fortune. Grieving relatives besieged him and his seances were always played to a full house. His great trick was to make voices of the dead come from the floor, from the ceiling, from behind the shoulders of the sorrowing ones at the seances.

One day after a seance a woman approached him in a great dither.

"Maestro " she stormed. "I have been to all the great mediums in Europe and America, but not one has brought me the living voice of my husband as clearly and truly as you. You are the greatest medium in the world and I find it difficult to say how deeply grateful I am. However, I must ask one more favor: On leaving your seance, may I hear my husband's voice follow me down the hall?"

The ham actor in the ex-vaudevillian began to boil up. His chest swelled, his nostrils flared, he took a stance and lapped up her words. It was like rain to a desert flower. Finally the ham came right out in the open:

"Madam," he said pompously, "would you like to hear your husband's voice while I drink a glass of water?"

When the newsreels film the coronation of King Edward of England, next spring, they will pay much attention with their cameras to the crown which the King will be wearing. England's royal family crown is at this moment being remodeled to fit the new royal head as neatly and handsomely as his derby hats. Jewelers now busy revamping the crown are using the same head-shape model on which his jaunty derbies were built for him when he was the debonair Prince of Wales. Had the royal milliners forgotten the remodeling, King Edward's crown would resemble too closely the pin-point derby hat that almost sits atop the noble dome of our own Oliver (Hal Roach comedian) Hardy.

REOPENED BARCELONA THEATRES SHARE RECEIPTS WITH SURVIVORS

Distributor Committee Meets With Group From Exhibitors to Perfect Plan for Assuring Steady Supply of Product

Value of Maintaining Cinema Standards as Evidence of Governmental Stability Is the Basis of New Representations

BULLETIN

Henri Brut, Pathe News cameraman who has been covering the civil war in Spain, was made a prisoner by the insurgents at Burgos on Wednesday. His film and camera were confiscated. Fernando Palaccio of Fox Movietone News was shot and seriously wounded earlier this week. John Dored of the Paramount News staff is still held captive.

by HARRY CHAPIN PLUMMER
in Barcelona

With the reopening of the cinemas here on August 9th, and with the formation of a distributors' committee to meet with a committee from the Aindicato Unico de Espectaculos Publicos to fix the basis upon which the city's 117 theatres will obtain their supply of product, Barcelona and the Region of Cataluna may be said to have fared relatively well in view of the tragic events which have occurred since July 19th.

When the fate that befell the large assembling plants of General Motors Peninsular and Ford Motor Iberica is compared with the "benevolent syndicalism" with which the picture importers and distributors have had to contend, they may be said to have come out, thus far, at least, with reasonably good fortune. The film houses are intact; their film stocks have been undisturbed; their personnel has not been changed, despite the confusion that has reigned through the last three weeks.

The motor plants were taken over at the outset of the revolt by revolutionary committees of the Confederación Nacional de Trabajo and the Federación Anarquista Iberica, their working forces dislodged and their executives ousted and supplanted by supervising committees, who immediately put their own operatives to work turning out armored motortrucks for military purposes, based upon trim G. M. and Ford current models, while the bank account of each was commandeered in a manner much more drastic than that of the "incautación" of the film distributors' deposits. The results of the "co-operative" management of the motor-plants may only be judged, for the moment, by the visible results of manufacture, or assembly. The armored trucks turned out resemble nothing so much as the type of "trick" automotive vehicle thrown together to provide a few extra laughs for a slapstick comedy film in Hollywood.

American Property Respected

It became clear when the several constituent elements of the film industry got together for the first time after the civil outbreak in an assembly called in the Gran Teatro del Liceo, Barcelona's grand opera theatre, by the newly organized Consejeria de Espectáculos Públicos, that foreign distributor property rights would not be too hastily sacrificed.

In principle, at least, the results of the assembly clearly proved that film stocks held by the Spanish affiliate companies of the American houses, which really formed the basis for the claim to protection as foreign property, would be respected as such. All present at the meeting had to take into consideration the literally cataclysmic nature of the change which the Government and the various Syndicalist groups headed by the C.N.T. and the F.A.I. proposed to put into effect. The first of these was the virtual socialization of the theatres and the taking over of these by the Sindicato Unico de Espectáculos Públicos, consisting of the operators, electricians, mechanics, ushers, doormen and other attendants and the cleaners of the 117 or more cinemas in Barcelona alone, which, of course, are, or were, Spanish corporate or individual entities, like the Spanish distributor houses representative of the American principals.

AMERICAN CONSUL'S WORK APPROVED

Plaudits accorded American Consul Lynn W. Franklin by American motion picture interests for his splendid safeguarding of their interests in the Region of Cataluna during the Spanish crisis have been echoed by the State Department at Washington in a cable of approval received shortly after his arrival, with his family, at Marseilles. By a coincidence complicating no little his personal and official problems during the period of greatest stress, Mrs. Franklyn gave birth to their fourth child immediately following the family's removal from Barcelona.

Signs posted on all buildings housing American film stocks at Consul Franklin's direction were honored by all parties to the conflict. The first of these, placed on the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Iberica premises, read: "American interests are represented in this establishment by a stock of films, the property of the Culver Export Corporation, New York City, and must be respected as such." Others in like tenor were posted subsequently.

When the proposition was finally advanced that the city's cinemas re-open at prices not inconsiderably below the scale prevailing before the Fascist revolt, and that one half of the proceeds of the opening session be donated to the survivors and families of the victims of the fatal events of July 19 and the succeeding weeks, it became manifest that a way had been found, technically, at least, to circumvent the question of the ownership of foreign film stocks, by the "invitation" to the distributing and other proprietary factors to "volunteer" their donation. There was not the slightest hesitancy expressed as to the propriety of meeting this appeal to donate.

The questions of change of control, of reduction of admission prices, of the re-enforcement of the programs of the chief first-run theatres, such as the Capitol, Coliseum, Femina, Urquinaona and Astoria with vaudeville and jazz-band offerings, in every legal sense, are purely local, since they concern corporate and individual entities of purely Spanish nationality, whatever may be the ultimate effect of these radical departures upon the financial and commercial position of the American and foreign distributor representation here.

How the changed condition is to alter the contract terms and prices hitherto effective between distributor and exhibitor remains to be seen. The primary impression registered, however, is that the stand taken by the remaining executives of the distributor units here representing American principals and recognized by the Consular representation of the United States in Barcelona, that the film stocks held, but not owned by them, are American property, is being respected and is to be respected in principle.

Executives State Position

Executives of the film companies have not failed to take advantage of their opportunity to make clear to the Syndicalist groups just what the American film operation in Spain represents in both economic and a social significance. The Syndicalists have been told that there are 400 cinema theatres functioning within the confines of the Republic and, with an average capitalization of not less than 100,000 pesetas, the investment totals approximately 40,000,000 pesetas. There are employed within this branch of the industry, not counting the distribution, production, laboratory and dubbing plants, American, Spanish and foreign, about 40,000 individuals, the vast majority Spanish nationals.

In Market for Product

Now that the Syndicates have taken over and are operating the cinemas of the country, they will be in the market for films from the American stocks, the owners of which are 5,000 kilometers from this country and who must be paid or must be provided with substantial guarantees that they will be paid. These guarantees must be absolute. They may take the form of deposit lodged with the Consulate General of the United States or with foreign banks accorded full right by the national or regional government to accept, hold and eventually release to the creditor corporations such deposits. Failing this, the lack of films of quality sufficient to hold the attention and interest of the people will react seriously, gravely, upon the political objectives of the Syndicates and all interested in reestablishing an economic and social order in Spain. It will be nothing short of a confession of weakness, of failure.

Should there come about the confiscation of the existing film stocks, the leaders have been frankly advised—and fortunately no one now seriously regards this as an eventually—the present stores will soon be exhausted and there will be no replenishment. Therefore, it has been impressed upon the Syndicalists, they must be prepared to compensate the owners of the films they seek to lease.

"We not only are ready, we want to co-operate with you," was the word sent to the embryo impresarios. "It is to our mutual advantage that you have our co-operation. But the owners of our films must be paid! Anything less than adequate payment, in effect, will be confiscation. Confiscation simply means 'killing the goose that laid the golden egg.' It will not take long for the film stocks to be drained."

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Production Up

Wheeling into September, Hollywood's new production schedules took a noticeable upswing as eighteen pictures went into work. During the same period nine finished.

Four pictures started at Paramount. "Maid of Salem" is undoubtedly the most important. Under Frank Lloyd's direction, it will feature Claudette Colbert and Fred MacMurray with Edward Ellis, Bonita Granville, Gale Sondergaard, Louise Dresser, Bennie Bartlett, E. E. Clive and Mary Treen. The cast for "Right in Your Lap" includes Marsha Hunt, John Howard, Eugene Pallette, Marylin Knowlden, Robert Greig, Jackie Moran, Jan Duggan and Irene Franklin. Glenn Tryon is directing. In "Rose Bowl" Eleanor Whitney, Tom Brown, Larry Crabbe, William Frawley, Bennie Baker, Terry Ray, Nydia Westman and Priscilla Lawson will be seen. Charles Barton is directing. Shirley Ross and Robert Cummings are featured in "Hideaway Girl," supported by Martha Raye, Monroe Owsley, Louis DaPron and Elizabeth Russell. George Archainbaud is directing.

Warners also started four pictures. "The Black Legion" currently has Humphrey Bogard, Dick Foran, Ann Sheridan and Erin O'Brien-Moore for its principals. Archie Mayo is directing. "Once A Doctor," which William Clemons directs, features Donald Woods, Jean Muir, Gordon Oliver, Henry Kolker and Cy Kendall. The cast for "Melody For Two" is headed by James Melton and Patricia Ellis and includes Marie Wilson, Charles Foy, Craig Reynolds and Winifred Shaw. Louis King is directing. The fourth picture, "No Hard Feelings," will present Glenda Farrell, Barton MacLane, Winifred Shaw and Jane Wyman. Frank McDonald is directing this production.

Three pictures were started by Twentieth Century-Fox, all in the potentially important class. The standout is "Lloyds of London." The cast includes Freddie Bartholomew, Sir Guy Standing, C. Aubrey Smith, Tyrone Power, Jr., Virginia Fields, Wilfred Lawson, Una O'Connor, Montagu Love, J. M. Kerrigan, Gavin Moore, Douglas Scott, Miles Mander and Lumsden Hare. If Loretta Young's health improves she will play the feminine lead. Otherwise another player will be named. Henry King is directing. In "The White Hunter," Warner Baxter is teamed with Simone Simon supported by Gail Patrick, Alison Skipworth, Wilfrid Lawson, George Hassell and Lionel Pape. Irving Cummings is directing this picture. In "Glory" Jane Darwell, Delma Byron, Pert Kelton, Allan Lane, Sarah Haden, Margaret Hamilton, James Burke, Russell Hopton, William Benedict, Eddie Acuff, John Carridine and Lois Wilson will be seen. Frank Strayer is directing.

Republic started two pictures. Henry Wilcoxon, Betty Furness and Sidney Blackmer head the cast of "The President's Mystery," which Phil Rosen is directing. "Ghost Town Gold" will present Robert Livingston, Ray Corrigan, Kay Hughes and Max Terhune in the leading roles. Joseph Kane is directing.

Columbia put "Legion of Terror" in the work. Bruce Cabot and Marguerite Churchill are featured with Crawford Weaver, Ward Bond and Charles Wilson. C. C. Coleman is directing.

"The White Dragon" started at MGM. The cast lists Edmund Lowe, Elissa Landi, Zasu Pitts, E. E. Clive, Ted Healy, Edmund Gwenn, Rafaela Ottiano, Raymond Hatton, Gustave Von Seyffertitz and Herbert Rawlinson. George B. Seitz is directing.

At Universal "The Case of the Constant God" started. Under direction of Lewis R. Foster, cast members include Water Coy, Polly Rowles, Henry Hunter, C. Henry Gordon, Halliwell Hobbes, Samuel Hinds, Nan Grey and Virginia Brissac.

"Navy Spy" was started by Grand National. The cast includes Conrad Nagel, Judith Allen, Jack Doyle, Elinor Hunt and Don Barclary. Crane Wilbur is directing.

Last of the starting group, "General Delivery," credited to Radio, currently lists Lee Tracy, Gloria Stuart and Judith Blake as the leading players. Edward Killy is directing.

Three pictures came off the line at Radio. Included in the trio is "Portrait of a Rebel," starring Katherine Hepburn with Herbert Marshall and listing Elizabeth Allen, Doris Dudley, Donald Crisp, Eily Malyon and Margaret Seddon among the many in support. Mark Sandrich directed. "One Man Came Back" will present Ann Dvorak, Preston Foster, John Beal, Ray Mayer, J. Carroll Naish and Landers Stevens. Christy Cabanne directed. Names in "Without Orders," which Louis Friedlander directed, include Sally Eilers, Robert Armstrong, Vinton Haworth, Frances Sage and Jack Mulhall.

MGM checked in with two pictures. "Libeled Lady" lists Jean Harlow, William Powell, Myrna Loy, Spencer Tracy, Walter Connolly, Charles Grapewin, Lauri Beatty, Cora Witherspoon, Charles Trowbridge and E. E. Clive. Jack Conway directed. "General Spanky," Hal Roach production, also finished. It will present Spanky McFarland, Phillips Holmes, Rosina Lawrence, Ralph Morgan, Buckwheat Thomas, Alfalfa Switzer, Louise Beavers, Hobart Bosworth, Irving Pichel, James Burtis, Robert Middlemass, William Bailey, Henry Herbert and Jess Graves. Fred Newmeyer directed.

Paramount completed "Hopalong Cassidy Returns," a Harry Sherman production.

The cast includes William Boyd, Evelyn Brent, George Hayes, William Janney, Jr., Irving Bacon, Gail Sheridan and John Beck. Nate Watt directed.

"Pennies from Heaven," an Emanuel Cohen production for Columbia, moved to the cutting room. Bing Crosby is starred with Madge Evans, Edith Fellows, Donald Meek, John Gallaudet, Tom Dugan, Charles Wilson, Harry Tyler, William Stack and Tom Ricketts. Norman McLeod directed.

At Twentieth Century-Fox "15 Maiden Lane" was completed. Directed by Alan Dwan, it features Claire Trevor, Cesar Romero, Lloyd Nolan, Lester Matthews, Robert McWade, Douglas Fowley and Ralf Harolde.

Warners finished "Three Men on a Horse." The cast lists Frank McHugh, Joan Blondell, Carol Hughes, Sam Levine, Allen Jenkins, Guy Kibbee and Edgar Kennedy. Mervyn LeRoy directed.

Lasky on England

To seasoned, successful Jesse L. Lasky, back from London, Hollywood has given an ear lately dulled by repetitious utterances of other homecomers from the other side, and into that ear the veteran producer has poured observations neither dull, repetitious nor quickly forgotten. Waving no flags nor crying wolf, Mr. Lasky has said:

"British producers, inspired by Alexander Korda's success in the international field, have sensed the value of world wide distribution. Particularly, they have an eye on the American market.

"Theatre business in England is booming. Houses are packed and new theatres are starting and opening regularly. The enthusiasm of the public is spirited. When a preview or trade showing is held the autograph and celebrity seekers are out in droves, just as we have them here. This has had a tremendous effect on production and the picture makers have sensed it.

"I've an idea of what they are going to do. They're aware that all the top international personalities who should give them entre into the world market are in America and they're out to beg, borrow or steal them. England's top actors, Arliss, Laughton and Donat, have been developed by Hollywood and, with British studios teeming with American talent, their producers see no reason why they cannot develop them in their own domains, exclusive of Canada, in such a way that it will open the doors to their pictures on this continent.

"While Hollywood excels in directorial tempo, story construction and film editing, and the British producers admit it, they are out to correct their shortcomings. To assure this, they hope for an agreeable exchange of talent. They are willing to make any sort of concessions that are fair and equitable to secure it. I would like to see such an arrangement effected. It would be highly desirable. But if the British can't make it, they're going to raid. In fact the raiding is on right now."

Reorganization Plan for RKO Off to October

Efforts to agree on the treatment which the $9,100,000 Rockefeller Center claim against RKO will receive under a plan of reorganization for the latter company cannot be resumed until after October 1, according to present indications. The delay in the work on this largest of the unsecured claims against RKO is not expected to halt current progress on the formulation of a reorganization plan, however.

At present, reorganization factors are at work on a determination of the status of RKO's contingent liabilities in connection with the obligations of subsidiaries which have been guaranteed by the parent company. This phase of the development of a reorganization plan may occupy the better part of September after which, it is believed, it will be possible to resume work on the Rockefeller claim.

No attempt to settle the claim by compromise is in view at this time. The Irving Trust Company, as RKO trustee, has filed its objections to the claim with Federal Judge William Bondy and a decision on the amount in which the claim should be allowed is expected soon after his return from a European vacation about October 1. Regardless of what that decision may be, it is believed certain that an appeal will be taken by either Rockefeller Center or RKO to the United States Circuit court of Appeals and then, perhaps, to the Supreme court.

The current discussions involve only an effort to agree on the number of new RKO securities which would be paid to Rockefeller Center under a plan of reorganization for each $1,000 of the amount in which the claim might be allowed ultimately. If an agreement is reached, a reorganization plan could be completed and presented to other creditors and the court without awaiting the outcome of the lengthy court contests over the allowance of the claim.

A hearing scheduled for last week on a petition for leave to retire the $850,000 of RKO secured gold notes outstanding was postponed and tentatively set for October 7th. The hearing is contingent upon Judge Bondy's return from Europe.

Museum Head Returns With Rare Films

John E. Abbott, director of the Museum of Modern Art Film Library, and Iris Barry, Curator, have just returned from three months of intensive search and negotiations in Europe for memorable films. They centered their efforts in London, Paris, Berlin, Moscow, Leningrad and Stockholm and have acquired 100 miles of rare films, about 500 reels, which will be added to the archives of the Film Library and made available to students throughout the United States.

"Wherever we went in Europe," said Mr. Abbott, "we met with enthusiastic cooperation from both the government and the film industries in the several countries we visited. We were delighted to discover the growing interest abroad in the preservation of outstanding films of the past."

Television Pictures Plans 20 Releases

Television Pictures, formed recently by Edward Halperin and Maurice Conn, will produce 20 features next season, according to Mr. Halperin. The list will include eight specials, four starring Pinky Tomlin, four with Frankie Darro and four with Kermit Maynard. The first picture, "Merrily We Go to Jail," which will have in its cast 15 old-time comedians, will go into production on Sept. 26th.

Unions Continuing Protests on Use of New Large Reel

Trouble continues in Chicago and Boston because of antagonism on the part of operators' unions toward the new 2,000 foot reels, adopted on recommendation of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences on September 1st as general practice for the industry.

Distributors in Chicago are wiring to New York for leaders on new product because projectionists are cutting the big reels to conform with the union rule prohibiting the running of reels over 1,000 feet in length. It is understood that the union rule is effective nationally and is causing much trouble which will increase in volume as the new product is released.

Labeling the new standard reel as a definite fire hazard Local 182, IATSE operators' affiliate in Boston, has passed a resolution asking for a ruling on the safety of the reel by the Massachusetts Department of Public Safety, headed by Paul G. Kirk. Copies of the resolution, which was passed unanimously, were forwarded to the International office of the Projectionists Union and to the office of the Commissioner o Public Safety.

James F. Burke, secretary and business representative of the local stated that reports that the International union had accepted the new reel were not true and not in keeping with a statement which appeared in a general bulletin issued by the organization on Dec. 18, 1935. According to Mr. Burke the bulletin said, in part:

"Falsified reports are being circulated throughout this country and Canada to the effect that the International Alliance interposes no objection to the common use of 'Double Reels.' Nothing is further from the truth, as the stand taken by the General Office in this matter is one of absolute and emphatic disapproval."

Initial Program Titles Announced by New Company

Titles of eight pictures planned as the initial program of Producers National Distributors were announced this week, with the first release set for November 15 with "Track of the Wolf," based on a Louis Joseph Vance story.

Following are the titles: "For the Love of Mike," "Spider and the Fly," "Not Tonight, Josephine," "A Few Wild Oats," "Track of the Wolf," "The 13th Door," "Sins We Do" and "Rendezvous with Death."

National Theatres' 4-Day Convention Concluded on Coast

The four day Los Angeles convention of divisional and district heads and bookers of National Theatres units from San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Salt Lake City and Los Angeles, was concluded last week with an attendance that surpassed all previous meetings of the circuit executives.

Discussions pivoted about plans for playing important pictures on extended time in addition to campaigns to be given individual productions. Increases in admissions where unusual pictures warrant them also was a topic on the program.

Home office executives who attended the session from New York included Spyros Skouras, William T. Powers, Edward Zabel, George Balsdon, Milton Hossfeld, Howard Malcolm and Aubrey Schenck.

Distributing executives attending included Ned E. Depinet and Jules Levy, RKO; Al Lichtman, MGM; Gradwell Sears and S. Charles Einfeld, Warner-First National; Abe Montague, Columbia; Charles Reagan, Paramount; Herman Wobber, Twentieth Century-Fox; James R. Grainger, Universal; Floyd St. John, Republic.

Among the circuits' theatre heads at the session were Will Steege of Salt Lake City; Frank L. Newman, Sr., Seattle; John Hamrick, Portland; Arch Bowles, San Francisco; Charles Skouras and Al Hanson of Fox West Coast.

Product Released By New Universal

The new Universal Pictures Company, having completed rejuvenation of its studio personnel, released its first production "My Man Godfrey," for showing throughout the country this week. The company has been reorganized from the top down under the leadership of R. H. Cochrane, president; J. Cheever Cowdin, chairman of the board and Charles R. Rogers, executive vice-president in charge of production at Universal City.

The company will offer 42 features during the season. Besides "My Man Godfrey," these will include "Madame Curie," the life story of the discoverer of radium; several elaborate musicals including a Jerome Kern—Earl Derr Biggers vehicle entitled "Melody Lady"; "Hippodrome," the story of the New York show palace; and "Top of the Town," with several well known musical comedy, radio and picture personalities.

Among new officials in the studios are John Harkrider as art director and Charles Previn as musical director. The story department, east and west, has been reorganized under the supervision of Charles Beahan and talent scouts include Rufus LeMaire, Harry Evans and Dean Markham.

Mr. Cochrane left New York this week for Universal City on the first of a series of trips which he intends to make in order to spend a certain amount of time in the studio with Mr. Rogers and William Koenig, general studio manager.

Daniel Boone

(Radio - Hirliman)

Historical Romance Drama

Blending historical fact with dramatic and romantic fiction, this production takes its substance from one of the many exciting adventures that marked the career of the famous pioneer scout, Daniel Boone. It's a story of love and danger in a new country, with Boone leading a company of settlers to a new homestead, Boone at war with the Indians, his chief foe a renegade white. It tells of Boone's triumphs over peril, his protection of and love for an English girl, his victory dissipated by conniving whites. It is also the story of a man who, with the love of a woman to support him, pushes forward to blaze the trail for modern civilization. It is at once a drama, a love story and a colorful spectacle.

The story is by Edgcumb Pinchon, author of "Viva Villa" and several other novels treating popular historical subjects, with screen play by Dan Jarrett.

Looked at through a showman's eyes, the picture promises to have considerable exploitation quality, not only in story but also in personalities. In the title role, George O'Brien swings from his recent straight westerns and adventure pictures to the stirring action of a historical. For principal support he has been provided with Heather Angel, currently in "Last of the Mohicans"; John Carridine, featured in "Mary of Scotland," and Ralph Forbes, a member of the "Romeo and Juliet" cast. This group, with Huntley Gordon and Dickie Jones, carries the gist of the drama and romance. Other players are George Regas, Clarence Muse, Harry Cording, Aggie Herring and Crauford Kent.

First of the series which George Hirliman is producing for Radio, starring O'Brien, the picture is being directed by David Howard, who during the past few years has directed O'Brien in ten pictures.

Pennies From Heaven

(Columbia)

Musical Comedy - Romance

This story is written around its theme song, which is also the title, "Pennies From Heaven." It has for its motivation Bing Crosby, accompanied by Edith Fellowes, singing his way around, never hurting anybody, pleasing many and going his own way. A whimsical yarn, one that seems ideally suited to Crosby's talents as demonstrated by his earlier pictures and the recent "Rhythm on the Range," it has a light dramatic counterpart supplied mainly by Madge Evans, now in "Piccadilly Jim," in the role of a county health officer, who continually trails the couple, fearful that the ne'er-do-well troubador is incapable of caring for his little companion.

Being produced on an elaborate scope, mechanics of the story make it possible to include five possible hit songs in addition to the title song for which Arthur Johnston prepared the music and John Burke the lyrics. Most attractive of the production numbers is the sequence in which the theme song is first heard. It is sung by Crosby to Miss Fellowes during a hail storm. Crosby philosophically imagines the sleety pellets are pennies from heaven and that some of them must fall, like troubles into everybody's life.

Under Emanuel Cohen's production guidance, the screen play suggested by Johnston's lyrics was prepared by Jo Swerling. Direction is in the hands of Norman McLeod, who during his association with Paramount turned out many exceptional comedy features. The cast supporting the above named trio consists of Donald Meek, John Gallaudet, Tom Dugan, Charles Wilson, Harry Tyler, William Stack and Tom Ricketts.

Pigskin Parade

(20th Century - Fox)

Comedy Satire with Music

Where the usual football film is full of the heroic "do or die for Alma Mater" stuff, this one approaches its subject from a different angle. It makes fun of the fall sport and all the fetishes connected with it.

A little jerkwater Texas college is invited to play Yale at New Haven. In the fashion of Center College of yesteryear, Alabama and Texas Christian of more recent memory, it hands the amazed sons of old Eli a terrific walloping.

The motivation is by no means the only thing. Not a serious moment in any page of it, one need only to take a quick look at the comedy players listed in the cast, and an added peek at the music and lyric credits, to get an idea of all the tuneful, rollicking fun and foolishness that goes on. With ample opportunity for such accomplished funsters as Patsy Kelly to be the wisecracking wife of dumb coach Jack Haley, and for barefoot boy Stuart Erwin to do slick tricks with the pigskin during a raging blizzard in Yale Bowl, there's no hint of what to expect. With further opportunity for Arline Judge to be attractively comic as she pursues her romance with Johnny Owens and plenty of chance given to the Yacht Club Boys to sing and cavort, and more to Tony Martin, Dixie Dunbar and Judy Garland to sing and dance to the tunes prepared by Lew Pollack and Sidney Mitchell, the production promises to be so decidedly different from the usual football offering that showmen will be given wide latitude to create patron interest.

"Pigskin Parade" promises to be a lively youthful amalgamation of fun and foolishness that in permitting exhibitors to go directly in the opposite direction, its presentation should be just as pleasing to the public as the time that little Center beat Harvard.

The Longest Night

(MGM)

Comedy Mystery Romance Drama

Something more than ordinary entertainment, commonly attributable to a crime mystery tinged with comedy and romance, is assured, if all that is planned is developed in this production. Practically all action takes place in a metropolitan department store during a long night after closing hours. Trusted employees have been looting the store. In league with crooks they plan one grand coup before the store passes to new ownership. Innocent employees are forced to be accomplices. Into the situation steps the blue blooded scion of the deceased owner to become the one who unravels a series of murders and unearths the culprit. A scary story, full of shots in the dark, sliding doors and secret passages, the backbone of mystery melodramas, it also carries a hilarious comedy counterpart and an intriguing shop girl romance with the boss' son.

The picture being produced by Lucien Hubbard and Samuel Marx and directed by Errol Taggart.

Heading the cast, the picture again teams Robert Young and Florence Rice, recently seen in "Sworn Enemy." Adding to the pull of their name value, it further will present the comedian Ted Healy, Julie Haydon, starred in "The Scoundrel," and such competent character actors as Catherine Doucet, Janet Beecher, Leslie Fenton, Sidney Toler, Paul Stanton and Etienne Giradot. In lesser roles will be seen Tommy Bupp, Samuel Hinds, Minor Watson, Kitty McHugh, Oline Howland, Gertrude Stutton and John Hyams.

Undercover Man

(Republic)

Action Drama - Romance

Though this is a western, formulated of the stock ingredients, its story takes several unlooked for twists and turns that set it apart. Its theme, partially cued by the title, gets under way quickly and in a manner that establishes provocative expectancy. From the start there's drama, bandit skullduggery and romance between the unknown hero and the girl. The dramatic element, however, takes a different twist as the townsfolk look upon the newcomer as a mysterious menace and decide to get rid of him. The act doesn't go through as anticipated, and when the double crossing sheriff attempts a robbery, the hero, now revealed as a Wells Fargo undercover man, emerges victorious in a thrilling gang fight.

The story is an original screen play by Andrew Bennison and direction is by Albert Ray, who, since his engagements with Allied and Liberty Pictures under the sponsorship of M. H. Hoffman, has been comparatively inactive.

Johnny Mack Brown will be seen as the undercover man and Suzanne Kaaren as the girl. While the cast is exceptionally large, the more prominent personalities presented include Ted Adams, Frank Darien, Lloyd Ingraham, Horace Murphy, Dick Morehead, Edward Cassidy, Margaret Mann and Frank Ball.

British March of Time Production Unit Set

An English production unit for the March of Time with Richard de Rochemont in charge has been set up in England. Ralph Rolan said this week on his arrival in New York. Space formerly occupied by RKO International at Deane House has been taken over for the purpose, he said. Under present plans, one English subject will be used in all March of Time releases in England and eight of the 12 will be inserted in American issues. There are 915 theatres in the United Kingdom under contract for March of Time.

COMPANY ATTORNEYS HOME WITH DRAFT OF SCHENCK-OSTRER DEAL

Say Transaction as Reduced to Paper Follows Line of Agreement as Outlined by Principals in Statement

Terms of the international transaction linking Twentieth Century-Fox, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Gaumont British have been reduced to writing without material departure from the outline set forth verbally by the principals concerned and a tentative draft of the negotiations has been brought to the United States by J. Robert Rubin, chief counsel for MGM, and Richard Dwight of Hughes, Schurman and Dwight, attorneys for Twentieth Century-Fox, who arrived in New York from London last week on the Paris and Berengaria respectively.

Attorney Rubin told the press that reduction of the terms of the deal to writing was to be considered a substantial measure of progress. Nevertheless, he indicated that several weeks would be required to complete the transaction.

Details Hang Fire

"Certain things are necessary to be done by Gaumont-British in regard to the corporate structure," Mr. Rubin said, "before the deal can be completed." He expressed the belief that these things would be done in about a month. Neither these nor other factors, he indicated, will tend to alter importantly the outline of the tri-party transaction as outlined by Messrs. Joseph M. Schenck and Isidore Ostrer.

That the identity of Gaumont-British will be retained permanently was made clear by Mr. Rubin in the course of his remarks. "Gaumont-British will retain its name in England, as heretofore," he said, "and will also continue to produce as it has in the past. Distribution of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Twentieth Century-Fox and Gaumont-British product in England will be handled through one agency, but the individual sales staffs will be kept on, as usual."

Attorney Dwight declined to discuss single phases of the pact, pointing out that it had not been submitted to the boards of directors of any of the companies involved.

With the arrival of the three men it became known that Twentieth Century-Fox has not yet parted with any of its 49 per cent interest in the voting stock of Metropolis and Bradford, the holding company for Gaumont-British, half of which was and presumably is to be acquired by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in fulfillment of terms of the deal as originally set up. It is the belief in informed quarters that acquisition of this stock will follow automatically upon ratification of the deal by the boards of directors of the companies represented.

Along with verification that Gaumont-British will continue to produce as in the past came word that a minimum of five Gaumont-British productions will be distributed in the United States annually by each of the American parties to the alliance, Twentieth Century-Fox and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. The returning attorneys were in agreement on this point.

Brooklyn Vitaphone Studio Opens New Sound Stage

On September 8th Warner and Vitaphone executives officially dedicated a new sound stage in the company's Brooklyn, N. Y., studio declared to be the most modern and efficient in the east. The building covers an area of 26,000 square feet, and is 100 per cent fireproof throughout. The interior walls and ceiling are sound proof with rock wool material, of which it took 40 tons. The stage portion covers an area of 16,000 feet, and the height from stage floor to ceiling is over 50 feet. There are three tiers of dressing rooms at one end of the building and space is provided for camera and lamp storage, with monitor and preview rooms.

Over the entire stage, under the roof, are catwalks forming a working gridiron from which a camera can be set at any part of the stage desired for overhead shots. A large pool of re-enforced concrete has been constructed under the stage floor which will hold over 100,000 gallons of water. When the pool is not being used, it becomes part of the stage floor. A pit has also been built under the stage floor. This pit, which is 20 feet deep, will have traps, lifts and other equipment installed.

Over 100,000 feet of copper conductors were used in this building. There are forty-eight 200 ampere A.C., studio pockets, each automatically controlled by a contactor with remote control. There are eight 200 ampere D.C. pockets, supplied by direct current from a private plant.

Microphones, cameras and motors are all inter-connected by a system of wiring to the monitor room overlooking the new stage and, from there, connected through a new tunnel running under 14th Street to the recording building. The stage is arranged with a new idea for studio lamp balconies, thereby eliminating the expense of erecting temporary scaffolds usually required for supporting lamps.

The Devil is a Sissy

(MGM)

Drama

Here is realistic human drama so vigorously and intelligently told that its presentation is almost certain to impress its auditors deeply. A deft combination of straight drama, sympathy stimulating pathos and laugh provoking human interest, its high grade entertainment caliber endows it with exploitation worth in name and story values as well as substantiating production detail of far better than ordinary showmanship availability. Concerning itself with regular human beings doing interesting things in interesting places, the story is the living character drama of three boys. Yet, by no stretch of the imagination, is the film exclusively a juvenile attraction. While having all the elements attractive to the child mind, the moral it points is of direct import to every adult, particularly fathers and mothers. Still, rather than being a preachment, the picture is penetrating and illuminating drama of the most desirable quality.

Cultured child of divorce, Freddie Bartholomew comes to live in New York's tenement district where he is initiated into the rough and rugged life of the streets by embryo gangsters Jackie Cooper and Mickey Rooney. Actually and by illusion the full dramatic atmosphere of the situation is created. Inspired by Mickey's ambition to buy a tombstone for his executed father, the trio embark on a life of petty crime which lands them in juvenile court. Freddie's explanation of the motivation and circumstances of the crime win the group probation, but all Freddie gets is a kick in the pants from his partners. Following a runaway episode in which the three adventurers become involved with gangsters, a situation from which they are freed by Freddie's knowledge of French, the youngster contracts pneumonia and is near death. Words of Jackie and Mickey, who have come to love their little pal, fan the spark of life in him and as he recovers the two, hearkening to the significance of Judge Jonothan Hale's words that the devil is a sissy because he isn't tough enough to be good, the boys vision a new and happier life in just being regular kids.

For entertainment purposes the film offers a dramatic story powerfully appealing to youthful and adult audiences. For exploitation purposes it provides a unique and provocative title, and in Bartholomew, Cooper and Rooney are three of the top juvenile screen names. It supports them with an exceptional cast in which Ian Hunter, Peggy Conklin and particularly Gene Lockhart, Jonathan Hale, Katherine Alexander, Kathleen Lockhart and Etienne Girardot contributed convincing performances.

Actually the picture is a cross section of real life. Everything that is presented is an intelligent picturization of something that might happen in almost every community. It places in the hands of exhibitors many things other than those which are formula to exploit in a manner to provoke wide public interest. A big and important picture, because of its theme, acting and production technique, it is entitled to a showmanship campaign commonly accorded more intensively ballyhooed attractions. One thing that audiences are sure to note is that with the exception of one comedy number, the film is devoid of musical accompaniment. The film depends entirely upon the quality of its story and acting to stimulate human emotions.

Previewed in the Fox Wilshire theatre, Los Angeles. The audience, quickly grasping the theme, with sequences depicting Rooney's tragedy brought about by the electrocution of his father tensely establishing the atmosphere, were carried into the proper mood to appreciate the entertainment.

The General Died at Dawn

(Paramount)

Melodrama

Every so often a film appears in which dramatic power, scenic scope, story strength and exceptional acting performances are so excellently blended as to afford exhibitors opportunity to broadcast it as unusual with firm conviction that its presentation will bear them out. "The General Died at Dawn" is that kind of a production.

Localed in China, production technique and directorial treatment effectively capturing the mood and spirit of that war wracked land, it is timely, topical and, while its motivating plot is not entirely new, the manner in which it is presented, with many unique interest-stimulating twists worked into the story, provides a fresh appeal. Generally, with a certain amount of fact serving as a basis for the fictionized amplification, the show is stirring, vigorous melodrama. While there is comparatively little comedy to contrast the basic drama, the way in which romantic love interest has been included as a leavening medium gives the film a balance that should assure its popularity with diversified audiences. Thrill seekers will find plenty of that quality to excite their emotions. Likewise, those audience segments which respond to the lure of a danger-menaced love story will not be disappointed in the manner with which that entertainment element is here presented.

The story is built around the exciting experiences and adventures of a different kind of American soldier of fortune in China. As Gary Cooper delivers another of his grade A performances in the leading role, dramatic content is continually stressed. It is vivid as he, a trusted agent of loyal patriots seeking to rid their province of the depredations of war lords, accepts a commission to buy arms for them. Drama takes a graphically intimate twist as he is betrayed by the blonde siren, Judy Perrie, an unwilling accomplice of her unscrupulous father, Peter, into the hands of General Yang. Though strictly drama, there is a comedy atmosphere to the situation in which the two men meet and Cooper derides, ridicules and abuses the bandit chieftain. Cooper held prisoner, Peter and Judy, the former carrying the money, go on to meet gun-runner Brighton, a character upon whom the comedy contrast is centered. But as Cooper escapes, the show plunges into real, suspense-packed melodrama.

Exploitation that concentrates on powerful drama seems to be the kind of showmanship to apply in creating patron interest for the attraction. With Gary Cooper as the top name, but with Miss Carroll, Porter Hall, Dudley Digges, William Frawley, J. M. Kerrigan and especially Akim Tamiroff presenting credible performances, cast value is more than adequate. A show that warrants a publicity spread beyond the ordinary, selling it as stirring drama, gripping, forceful and quite apart from day-in-day-out screen merchandise and something that, when seen, will not be quickly forgotten, it should account for well above average grosses. Directly, because of its dramatic, adventurous nature, the picture is almost certain to be strongly attractive to men folks. Intelligent handling of its romantic love interest content should make it equally appealing to women.

Do you know Gelett Burgess, one of America's favorite novelists? He writes an incredible number of best sellers. He comments:

This is Homer Croy, one of the nation's finest authors. His successes include "West of the Water Tower." Remembering with admiration the stage production of George Kelly's Pulitzer Prize winning play, he writes:

"The motion picture is even more effective than the play!"

"Every husband rebuked for cigarette ashes . . . every young wife called upon to choose between pride of house and love of husband . . . should see "Craig's Wife"—a portrait of a warped woman as fascinating as it is relentless!"

This is Benjamin De Casseres, one of America's most discerning men as a biographer, philosopher and columnist. He writes:

"A perfect picture! One of the finest I have ever seen!"

given better than average production support and acted with enthusiasm and spirit that promises popularity for this and forthcoming followups.

In the yarn, Lullaby, a motorcycle riding tenderfoot, leads a band of home seeking war veterans into western cattle lands. The old-time cattle men, headed by Brack and Olin, resent the invasion, and resort to terrorism. A pair of adventure seeking cowboys, Stony and Tucson, sensing the plight of Lullaby's followers, join up with them to give Brack's cohorts a dose of their own medicine. As romance builds between Stoney and Marian, sister of settler Bob, who is killed in a raid, and with Lullaby accounting for considerable amusing comedy, there ensues a series of thrill action, wild riding, gun popping situations in which the oldtimers are defeated. But when victory seems to promise culmination of the romance, Stoney and Tucson, who have accepted Lullaby as a third mesquiteer in their wrong righting crusades, hearken to the call of further adventure and ride off to set the stage for the sequel that is naturally in order.

Most of the standby elements common to action western entertainment are presented in convincing fashion, while much that is fresh, particularly comedy, has been incorporated.

Shakedown

(Columbia)

Melodrama

All of the ingredients that usually make for melodrama have been injected here but new twists have been given to some of the standard situations to create interest. The story is that of a boy, graduate engineer, in love with the daughter of a successful business man. They want to get married, the daughter through a soft job provided by her parent, and the boy on something he earns for himself. Murder, involving the girl, knocks their plans sky-high, and the hero finally straightens things out to clear the way for matrimony, but in the way he wanted it originally.

Lew Ayres and Joan Perry, both of whom have been making regular cinematic appearances so that their names are familiar and apt to be helpful to exhibitors in exploitation, have the leads. Others in the cast are Thurston Hall, Victor Kilian, Henry Mollison and John Galludet. Blackmail, which has been appearing quite frequently on the newspaper front pages lately, also enters the picture to assist exhibitors as an exploitation angle.

As the film opens, Ayres and Miss Perry are discussing marriage, she wanting him to ask her father for a job in his telegraph company and he insisting that he should get it on his merit. Her father gives him the job, but as a messenger boy instead of in the engineering department. Miss Perry then decides to stage a fake kidnapping and fixes things so that her sweetheart can rescue her, all this unknown to him, and thereby win her father's consent and assistance financially.

Her plan backfires, however, and she is deeply involved when one of her co-conspirators is murdered. Ayres discovers the body, calls the police and, after a bit of investigating, things look bad for Miss Perry. But, when it really looks as though she will be indicted for the murder, Ayres, with the aid of his fists and quick thinking, shows the murderer to be Mollison, secretary of Miss Perry's father, who had lost heavily gambling and was resorting to blackmail to pay his debts. All is thus cleared up and the lovers marry.

Everything Is Thunder

(Gaumont-British)

Wartime Melodrama

There is much the same atmosphere in this as in "Secret Agent." With the difference that, instead of a spy, an escaped Canadian officer from a German war camp is the hero, there is a similar suspense value created by an individual trying to survive in the midst of a hostile community. Story values are definitely stronger and, with action speaking louder than words, the playing is definitely rather better than in the earlier picture, despite slighter star values. The appeal is to all classes, with the War camp episodes and a final frontier dash for the young folk and a problem love interest for the women.

A Canadian officer, in escaping from a prison camp in Germany during the War, is compelled to kill a sentry who is trying to shoot him after conniving at his getaway. While the hue and cry is out for him he is being sheltered by a girl of the streets in Berlin. Learning his identity she remains faithful, and uses her wits to keep him concealed during visits to her flat by a German detective who is in love with her.

Finally she arranges with a smuggler to have the refugee conveyed, in German uniform, through the wire-guarded frontier into Holland; she herself goes along in a nurse's costume. The detective gets on the trail. The officer gets over the line, but the girl is shot. The officer returns and the detective sacrifices himself in order to let his rival carry the girl across the frontier in his arms.

Great realism of atmosphere can be safely promised and excellent leading acting by Constance Bennett and by Oscar Homolka as the detective. The British title is seemingly meaningless, but probably will be changed.

Night trade show at the Piccadilly theatre. It gripped the audience all through and Homolka's acting was highly praised.

Yellowstone

(Universal)

Scenic Melodrama

Not very often does the attractiveness of natural scenic settings displace name values or story content as the dominating showmanship asset in a film. That, however, is the case in "Yellowstone." Actually the picture provides a pretty complete Cook's tour of the wonders and beauties of Yellowstone National Park. All the scenes, made familiar through travelogues, stills, descriptions or personal visits, are expertly photographed, and are brought into the story so that several of them have dramatic value. They constitute the background for a formula melodramatic crime story in which little that is novel is introduced.

The story, making possible the presentation of the natural marvels, is complicated and theatrical crime mystery melodrama. Lacking in those qualities which generate quick general interest and appealing solely from a dramatic viewpoint to the mystery crime devotees, the story told is at times difficult to follow. Ex-convict Foster, believed by his daughter Ruth to have been living in a foreign country during his prison term, is reunited with her at Yellowstone. Foster intends to recover some buried loot. His onetime partners in crime, Hardigan, Ryan and Pete, are after their cut in the hidden treasure. They follow Foster to an ice cave and bring about his death. Ensues the formula multiple suspect situation, contrasted by some laughable comedy provided by Pete and Pay Day, out of which grows romance between warden Sheridan and Ruth. The investigation running up against the customary stone wall, it's solved when a geyser brings up Foster's body, and Hardigan and Ryan pay the penalty by dying in the same cave in which their victim had been trapped.

Seen at a regular showing in the Pantages Hollywood theatre. Audience, which came to see "My Man Godfrey," evidenced but little interest in the tagged on film.

Wives Never Know

(Paramount)

Comedy

A bright and gay farce, this is amusing entertainment for any kind of audience made up of persons who enjoy a good hearty laugh. Matching its above average grade entertainment caliber, it likewise is endowed with personnel and story content that should provide exhibitors with many intriguing ideas for snappy exploitation campaigns.

Stripped of the wealth of detail that zestfully embellishes the motivation, the plot concerns itself with what happens to a happily married pair when iconoclastically minded Adolphe Menjou, writer of marriage decrying novels, convinces Mary Boland that she should encourage the sedate willy nilly husband Charlie Ruggles to sow a few wild oats in order that she might know the supreme joy of forgiving him. Charlie's early on-the-make adventures, in which a bottle of milk of magnesia is always companion to a bottle of scotch, are high comedy. They lead to a revelrous night's round of escapades with French actress Vivienne Osborne, knowledge of which reduces Mary to a nervous wreck. The comedy content of the entire piece is intensified in the climax, when with the arrival of Claude Gillingwater and his wife Fay Holden, who consider the Ruggles pair paragons of marital perfection, are tossed into the menage that has Menjou finding out that Ruggles' companion in philandering is none other than his own personal private love dream. As the foolishness of the situation is hectically stressed with high and low comedy, Miss Boland provides the out that convinces the Gillingwater pair that the whole thing was staged to bring Menjou and Miss Osborne together.

The chief showmanship angle undoubtedly is the teaming of Ruggles and Miss Boland together for another wild and wooly round of nonsense. As the purpose of the picture is to generate laughter, published assurances that the maximum amount of that is provided should be made through any and all mediums.

Previewed in the Westwood Village Theatre. Because the film has been set in late and regular advertising was not possible, the customary preview crowd was not on hand. But regular patrons, drawn by the showing of "To Mary, with Love," reacted enthusiastically to the added attraction.

East Meets West

(Gaumont-British)

Eastern Melodrama

This production offers a very well established selling value: George Arliss in the type of role in which he is generally thought to excel, that of an Eastern potentate in conflict with, and getting the better of the representatives of Western power. Costumes and general atmosphere are reminiscent of "The Green Goddess," and there is also the story angle of an English-educated Eastern prince in love with a British officer's wife.

The Sultan of Tunatra, a small oriental country, is of international importance because he controls a harbor of strategic importance to England on the West and to a rival power on the East. Wanting at least a million pounds to develop his country, the Oriental plays one of these powers against the other until he can learn which will give him the bigger subsidy.

A British customs officer is engaged in smuggling rum into the Sultan's territory and the Sultan's son, in love with the officer's wife, takes advantage of the fact that he is captured and condemned to be hanged, to raise a mob for an attempt to lynch the officer before the Sultan can reprieve him.

The Sultan meanwhile has deferred his decision until the English governor agrees to pay him his million and to sign a treaty of friendly neutrality, as a price for the release of the officer. The Eastern power, in panic, agrees to pay a similar amount for a similar treaty and the crafty Sultan gets his two million without losing his independence.

Trade shown at the Tivoli, the picture appealed by reason of the finish of Arliss' performance, the effectiveness of the dialogue and the suspense value of the interrupted execution scene.

FROM READERS

HIGH SCHOOL PUPILS PAY FULL ADMISSION

To the Editor of the Herald:

I've been noticing quite a few comments in the trade papers in regard to that age-old problem of the show business—children's prices, the 12-year-old age limit, etc. Not with any idea of having an answer to that problem, towns and theatres are all so different, and have such a varied collection of problems to meet, but with three years' experience in a really small town (2,000) with a scheme that I have never heard of elsewhere, I venture to throw this suggestion out to the small town theatre operator.

I mentioned three years' experience a moment ago. I've been in Menard, in the show business for 14 years, but we hit on this stunt just three years ago. We disregard age and years entirely for all the youngsters who go to school. All the kids up to the freshman class in high school go in the show for the kid price. They know that when they enter high school they pay the adult price. I found it killed a lot of grief and argument when we started this deal. The family has to pay the price anyway, and when Joe Smith had a kid of 14 running around with the other kids in his class at school that happened to come in on a dime. there was natural kicking.

Kids are kids, the foundation of the show game. They bring their parents more times than we exhibitors often think of. The way we run it, there never is an argument from the youngsters or from the parents, and we had plenty before. All the grade school boys and girls come in on the children's price; high school pays the full price. It might not be a workable idea everywhere. as I said before, but I do know that it stopped all and every argument and discussion for us. I think it's a logical answer to a difficult problem. If it does anyone else any good I'll be tickled to death to hear from it, for as far as I know I've never heard of it being done just this way. For us, at least, it works.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas.

Kelly Sees Need For Foreign Film Distribution Here

Assurance of American distribution for meritorious foreign product will be carried to a number of countries by Arthur W. Kelly, United Artists vice-president in charge of foreign distribution, who arrived in London this week on the first stage of a trip around the world.

"We must face the fact," Mr. Kelly said, "that although Hollywood still continues to dominate in the world market, it no longer has a monopoly on good product. Good product today means international product. And with improved production facilities they now have abroad, particularly in England, it is just as easy for Alexander Korda, for example, to make international pictures at the Denham studios in London as it is for Samuel Goldwyn or David Selznick to make them in Hollywood."

Mr. Kelly announced that more than half of the 57 features which United Artists will distribute abroad this season will be British films. He also said film tie-ups are in prospect in England, France, Spain, Italy, Australia, Mexico and Argentina.

After indicating that the more important pictures made in England are out-grossing American product in that market, the United Artists executive said:

"The same is true of the Spanish-speaking countries where native product is out-grossing the Hollywood variety four to one. Even in the Far East—in India, China and Japan—as well as in continental Europe, South America and Australia, only the outstanding U. S. films are doing big business.

"We realize that the time has come when we can no longer dump 40, 50 or 60 Hollywood pictures into a foreign country, grab our money and run. It's a put and take proposition today. We must give some of that money back—in fact, we have no choice, since money embargoes are pretty general in most foreign territories."

BOX OFFICE CONTROL AT ITS BEST

100 WESTERN OWNERS SCORE DOUBLES; ALLIED LEADERS AT JERSEY MEETING

AT FIRST ANNUAL CONVENTION OF THEATRE OWNERS AND MANAGERS OF THE ROCKY MOUNTAIN REGION

Exhibitors Meeting at Denver Protest Against Radio Broadcasts by Stars as Inimical to Box Offices

Although individual speakers attacked the practice of double billing and radio broadcasting by motion picture stars, no resolutions relating to these two vital problems were offered or passed at the first annual convention of the Theatre Owners and Managers of the Rocky Mountain Region, at Denver. More than 100 attended the meeting at which a wide variety of trade topics were discussed.

Promiscuous and continuous broadcasting by film stars was condemned by B. P. McCormick, owner of theatres in the territory, who warned that the practice will hurt box-office receipts. Double bills were scored by Charles Gilmour, president and manager of Gibraltar Enterprises, and they were blamed for keeping admission prices down. Mr. Gilmour predicted a period of prosperity for the next few years which will be greater than any experienced in the history of the country and urged exhibitors to drop double bills and sell programs on the basis of quality, not quantity.

A. De Bernardi, dramatic critic of the Denver Post, decried every form of advertising except newspaper space and publicity and declared that if theatres would spend as much in newspapers as they did a few years ago, all would regain the steady patronage they enjoyed then. To emphasize his point that newspaper advertising is read consistently because it is really news, Mr. De Bernardi said:

"When you want the world to know that there's a new baby at your home, or that your daughter is back from school for a vacation, or you're going away on a hunting or fishing trip, where do you take the item? Do you take it to a billboard or a neon sign? Do you take it to a radio station or flash it on the screen of your theatre? Do you print it on cards and hang them on automobile doors? Do you call up the editor of a throw-away paper and ask him to print it? You take it to that old standby, the legitimate newspaper. And why? Because you know people will read it.

Notes Psychological Factor

After stressing the fact that the public values the advertising message which comes to it through their newspaper because in many cases it buys and pays for that paper chiefly for the advertising news it contains, the speaker continued:

"And remember that there's something psychological about advertising. If you think enough of a program to give it a big advertising campaign, the public is going to think it is big. If you use pee-wee ads to tell the public about your program, the public is going to believe you have a pee-wee program."

Mr. De Bernardi prefaced his remarks with the statement that his sole consideration in urging a return to bigger newspaper advertising for theatres was concern for their welfare.

"Please do not misunderstand my motives," he said. "I am not crying because newspaper revenues have diminished in the amusement section. I am trying to help you solve a problem that I know is close to your hearts. If you saw one of your customers preparing to swallow a dose of poison you would do what you could to keep him from taking it, and you wouldn't do it just because you hated to lose the customer, either. That is the position I am in today."

Sales Policy Changes

T. B. Noble, manager of the Westland circuit, made the shortest speech of the session, on national sales policy. He said policies are continually being made over to fit local situations and that he knows exactly as much now about national sales policy as on the day he entered the business.

Harold Rice declared exploitation should not be high pressure selling but high-powered selling, and warned exhibitors to prepare constructive exploitation to combat competition especially during the present political campaign when many inducements

Vigilance to Retain Advantages Gained for Independents Through State Organization Is Urged at Atlantic City

Continued vigilance to maintain the advantages gained for independent exhibitors through the state organization, and support of the policies of the national organization, particularly in the campaign now being waged to eliminate the producer-distributor from the exhibition field, were urged as the New Jersey branch of the Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors opened its 17th annual convention in Atlantic City on Wednesday.

Among the more pressing problems on the agenda for the three-day meeting was discussion of and possible action on the raising of admission prices in independent theatres; further action to prevent unfair taxation; discussion of national legislation now contemplated, especially on block booking; and a thorough review and discussion of the double feature policy.

National leaders of the group who addressed the convention urged encouragement and financial support for the drive against producers in the theatre field which will center this year in an effort to force passage of the Neely-Pettengill bill in Congress. In an advance message to the assembled exhibitors Abram F. Myers, chairman of the national board of Allied, summed up this phase of the convention program in the words, "Let us have peace—with victory!"

Victory First, Says Myers

Having reviewed the aims and purposes of the national organization in advocating legislation to eliminate trade practice abuses Mr. Myers said:

"Experience has demonstrated beyond question that the rights of exhibitors can not be regained by appealing to the monopolists who wrested away those rights. To sit down with representatives of the producers until those rights have been judicially determined

Mrs. Fox Faces Contempt Penalty

A recommendation that Mrs. Eva Fox, wife of William Fox, be adjudged in contempt of court, was forwarded on Tuesday by federal Referee Robert E. Steedle, conducting the Fox bankruptcy proceedings in Atlantic City, N. J., to U. S. district Judge John Boyd Avis at Camden. The recommendation was accompanied by a report detailing the events of the past few weeks and declaring that Mrs. Fox refused to appear for questioning.

Judge Avis is to study the report and base his decision upon its contents. If he finds Mrs. Fox to be in contempt, he is expected to summon her for sentence. The penalty in such cases is left to the discretion of the court.

The situation results from futile attempts to question Mrs. Fox in the $9,500,000 bankruptcy of her husband. She is president of the All-Continent corporation, chief bone of contention in the case. Mr. Fox assertedly gave the corporation outright as a trust for his wife and daughters, but creditors' counsel has alleged that the transfer was a sham.

On Tuesday the All-Continent Corporation filed an equity action in Federal district court in Philadelphia to establish itself as the owner of approximately $500,000 of securities sequestered pending the bankruptcy proceedings. The Capital Company of San Francisco claims the securities to satisfy a judgment for $297,412.

Referee Steedle's action certifying Mrs. Fox for contempt is in fulfillment of an announcement he made on September 2nd when, disregarding his direction that counsel produce Mrs. Fox in court, two physicians appeared and submitted testimony to show that she was unable to testify because of physical illness. Explaining her failure to reply to questions on a previous occasion, the physicians said, "She felt a constriction in the throat. She heard the questions but could not answer. It was not that she did not want to, but she was unable to."

Addressing Fox counsel, Referee Steedle replied, "Earlier in the session I made a direction that Mrs. Fox be examined by two additional physicians. You said that would not be permitted. Your refusal closes the door to testing the accuracy of the physicians' opinions you set forth. That leaves me no alternative. I feel it is my duty to report all the circumstances to the U. S. District Court and to certify Mrs. Fox for contempt."

Referee Steedle then adjourned the proceedings until September 22nd and ordered all members of the Fox family, with their bookkeepers, to appear on that date.

Attorneys Agree In ASCAP Action

Sufficient agreement on stipulations of fact in connection with the Government's monopoly suit against the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers has been indicated in the discussions between attorneys for the two to make it unnecessary to resume trial of the action in Federal court in New York, it was announced this week.

When Arthur Schwartz, attorney for ASCAP and representatives of the Attorney General's office complete their work it will have to be rechecked by the Attorney General's office, ASCAP, the Music Publishers' Protective Association and various attorneys for other individual defendants involved in the suit. This work is expected to consume a minimum of three months and the evidence involved is not expected to be in readiness for presentation to Federal Judge Henry W. Goddard until the end of the year.

L. J. Finske, division manager for Cooper Enterprises, declared passage of the Patman Bill barring block booking would give exhibitors no relief but would increase the cost of selling product and that exhibitors consequently would suffer. He said that block booking really means block buying and that the subject is not understood by those who advocate the bill. He declared only four films were condemned by the Legion of Decency last year and none of these were forced on exhibitors because of block booking.

Ricketson on Competition

Rick Ricketson, manager of the Intermountain division of Fox West Coast, urged that non-theatrical competition be met through educational methods instead of opposition.

The delegates passed resolutions thanking Paramount Pictures for the world premiere of "The General Died at Dawn," proceeds of which went to the organization's treasury, and thanking Dave Cockrill for allowing the use of his Denham theatre. Social events of the convention program included dancing and a theatre party at the Elitch theatre and amusement park, two luncheons and a floor show, and a picnic sponsored by the distributors held at the Cherry Hills Country Club.

Penn Oraanization Protests Broadcasts

Added to the many exhibitor organization protests against motion picture stars' radio broadcasts, is the resolution adopted by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, "not only oppose, but demand" that producers, directors, players, writers and others in the industry immediately end their activities on local, Pacific Coast and national hookups.

The resolutions say that broadcasts have proved that screen personalities have "decreased their value to producers." Copies of the resolution have been sent to all producers and trade papers in the industry.

Reductions Are Sought In Canadian Film Duty

A plea for reduction or elimination of customs duties under all tariffs on films and sound equipment imported from both the United States and England has been placed before the Federal Board of Tariffs and Taxation, Ottawa. The application was entered by the Chamber of Commerce of Victoria, British Columbia and complains that the present tariff is prohibitive.

MacDonald to Columbia

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

AND SO THEY WERE MARRIED: Mary Astor, Melvyn Douglas—Average comedy drama, a bit too wisecracky. Latest tendency of pictures is to catch the "It Happened One Night" spirit in every light comedy feature. So far Capra remains alone in his style.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

KING STEPS OUT, THE: Grace Moore, Franchot Tone—They came expecting another "One Night of Love," and although they didn't get it, were well pleased. Personally believe Miss Moore has it all over MacDonald both in looks and singing ability. I'd like to suggest to the producers that they include only those opera songs which are familiar to the average person, or light tunes which are in the range of the average person's voice. Songs of the latter type are what makes Irving Berlin's pictures so popular. The fans go out singing the songs and do our advertising for us.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

KING STEPS OUT, THE: Grace Moore, Franchot Tone—There is no question about Miss Moore's voice and that she shows a flair for comedy in this one, but I wish they would get away from this magic kingdom thing and get down to earth musical comedy for her. We old timers remember the light operas "Fortune Teller," "Girl from Maxim's" and a lot more that would lend themselves better than this type of picture. They just don't seem to pull as they should.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

MR. DEEDS GOES TO TOWN: Gary Cooper, Jean Arthur—When Capra makes a picture the exhibitor has insurance on a box office natural. I played this over a holiday so naturally business was not on par with other Capra hits. Pictures like this are the type that make people talk enthusiastically about movies. —Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

MUSIC GOES 'ROUND, THE: Harry Richman, Rochelle Hudson—Put this one on with a Cash Night and despite the worn out song did an average business.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

TRAPPED BY TELEVISION: Lyle Talbot, Mary Astor—Good action picture with plenty of built-up suspense. Extreme hot weather held down the gross pretty low.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

First National

GOLDEN ARROW, THE: Bette Davis, George Brent—Amusing little sketch for Bette Davis to play around in but she never clicks for me. Too hightone, I guess.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

ROAD GANG: Donald Woods, Kay Linaker—Pretty good melodrama. It's been done before but stuff like this is almost always satisfactory entertainment for the Saturday audiences. Hot weather cut into receipts of this one.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

SINGING KID, THE: Al Jolson, Beverly Roberts, Yacht Club Boys—Al Jolson usually clicks here. This one flopped miserably and no wonder! Story was so thin it couldn't even be called baloney. Yacht Club Boys was only redeeming feature of the entire mess. The house was so empty on this one the ushers looked pathetic in their loneliness.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

SONG OF THE SADDLE: Dick Foran, Alma Lloyd—This was one of the best westerns to ever play this theatre and did extra Saturday business.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

STORY OF LOUIS PASTEUR, THE: Paul Muni, Josephine Hutchinson—Good picture of its kind. In fact, a masterpiece.—Sammie Jackson. Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

What the Picture Did For Me
Rockefeller Center, New York

WHITE ANGEL, THE: Kay Francis, Ian Hunter —A lot of good comments on this one. It is heavy drama and Miss Francis does the best work, I think, of her career in it. It lacks any romance and that was the one criticism that the ladies had for it.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

Gaumont British

FIRST A GIRL: Jessie Matthews, Sonnie Hale—Nice little picture from GB. Jessie Matthews is up and coming. Good comedy scenes which make people forget the English angle.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

BOHEMIAN GIRL, THE: Laurel and Hardy—Fair slapstick comedy resulted in fair business.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

EXCLUSIVE STORY: Franchot Tone, Madge Evans—A good programmer that pleased our patrons. Business above average.—P. E. Braun, Cairo Theatre, Cairo, Neb. Village and rural patronage.

EXCLUSIVE STORY: Franchot Tone, Madge Evans—Entertaining melodrama that bumped into hot weather and very low grosses.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

FURY: Spencer Tracy, Sylvia Sidney—This is an exceptionally good picture of the mob type. The acting of both stars is equal to anything they've done. Did very good at box office.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

LAST OF THE PAGANS: Mala, Lotus Long—A different picture that pleased part of our audience and left the rest cold. Business average. It gave us a chance to play a picture that was a little unusual in theme.—P. E. Braun, Cairo Theatre, Cairo, Neb. Village and rural patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BISHOP MISBEHAVES, THE: Edmund Gwenn, Maureen O'Sullivan—Show very good, but title poor. Could not get anyone in to see this one. Running time, nine reels. Played August 19.—Rudodf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

MOONLIGHT MURDER: Chester Morris, Madge Evans—Just another murder picture, no better or no worse than the hundreds of others played before it. Got by on Bank Night.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

MURDER IN THE FLEET: Robert Taylor, Jean Parker—Played this late to cash in on Robert Taylor's popularity. Resulted in average business due to summer heat.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

PETTICOAT FEVER: Robert Montgomery, Myrna Loy—Disappointing vehicle from two highly rated stars, Loy and Montgomery. Story at fault here. I don't care how many stars a company puts in a picture and how much money they spend on it, if it hasn't got a half-way decent story to bolster it, the picture will usually take a nosedive at the subsequent run houses. The first runs can get away with this sort of stuff on the reputations of the stars but "word of mouth" advertising either kills or makes a picture like this one.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

ROBIN HOOD OF EL DORADO, THE: Warner Baxter, Ann Loring—Very good drama. Warner Baxter always pleases. Picture should have had a little more comedy. Personally thought it a bit too heavy. Business off due to hot weather.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

ROBIN HOOD OF EL DORADO, THE: Warner Baxter, Ann Loring—Grim film fare, but excellently produced. Sterling performance by Baxter. Average weekend business. Running time, 86 minutes. Played August 28-29.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

ROSE MARIE: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy —They came in expecting another "Naughty Marietta" and they got it. Business was okay.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

ROSE MARIE: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy —Good picture. Business only fair. I can't seem to make any money on Metro. Maybe it's my fault, but I wonder.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

SAN FRANCISCO: Clark Gable, Jeanette MacDonald—Swell entertainment. Got just about everything and the quake shots are almost unbelievable they are so real. It's tops in a picture for the masses.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SAN FRANCISCO: Clark Gable, Jeanette MacDonald, Spencer Tracy—Tops in every respect. Never played a more genuinely satisfactory picture. Better than average Sunday-Tuesday business. Running time, 111 minutes. Played August 23-25.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

SAN FRANCISCO: Clark Gable, Jeanette MacDonald, Spencer Tracy—This is a great picture of the historical type. It is much too long and is half way through before it gets 'em to sit still in their seats. If you can get 'em to stay for about the first six reels you won't be able to run 'em out for the last six or seven. Did fair at the B. O.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

SMALL TOWN GIRL: Janet Gaynor, Robert Taylor—The girls would rather miss their meals for a week than miss a Robert Taylor picture. He's tops right now. Personally disagree with the women fans. I don't think he's handsome; I think he's pretty. Business was very good on this one.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

SMALL TOWN GIRL: Janet Gaynor, Robert Taylor—Excellent picture. This Robert Taylor has all the girls and some of the older gals looking sideways. And Janet Gaynor comes into her own again. We'll never forget "Seventh Heaven" and she was almost as good in this. Played July 26-27.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

SMALL TOWN GIRL: Janet Gaynor, Robert Taylor—This picture has more entertainment value and will please more patrons than Metro's big "San Francisco." This is just the type to please 'em and send 'em back and that's what we need, is more send 'em back pictures. The acting of Taylor and Gaynor was great. Hope "His Brother's Wife" is as good. Believe it will beat Frisco business. This is the first day of run.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

TALE OF TWO CITIES, A: Ronald Colman, Elizabeth Allan—Brilliant production which netted us the lowest Sunday-Monday-Tuesday gross in years. Maybe it was too classy for my audience. Played May 17-19.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

UNGUARDED HOUR, THE: Loretta Young, Franchot Tone—Metro usually turns out consistent product. This one was another satisfactory program picture from Metro that resulted in average grosses. —Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

VOICE OF BUGLE ANN, THE: Lionel Barrymore—A fair programmer. Not quite average business.—P. E. Braun, Cairo Theatre, Cairo, Neb. Village and rural patronage.

WIFE VS. SECRETARY: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow, Myrna Loy—They all came out to see Gable make love to Harlow and were the women disappointed. Clark didn't even kiss her once. Funniest scene in the picture (although it wasn't intended to be funny) was situation where Gable and his secretary, Harlow, come back to their hotel after a trying evening at business. They are sitting on Gable's bed talking over the business deal. Suddenly they stop talking and look at each other for about two minutes. The audience waits for something to happen but that's the catch. Gable sends her away and the gals in the audience sigh a disappointed sigh.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

WIFE VS. SECRETARY: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow, Myrna Loy—What should have been a box office sensation turned out to be a miserable flop at both B. O. and for entertainment. Three big names wasted.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

Paramount

BRIDE COMES HOME, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray—Very good show. entertaining, with interest holding. Audience pleased with the stars. Should please any audience because the stars don't act. They live their parts. O. K. Running time, nine reels. Played August 16-17.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

BRIDE COMES HOME, THE: Claudette Colbert—Claudette Colbert is a local favorite so our attendance was satisfactory in spite of rather warm weather. Played August 19-20.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

DESERT GOLD: Larry Crabbe, Marsha Hunt—A nice little western. Double featured this, on account of its short length, with "Your Uncle Dudley." Business above average. Running time, 60 minutes. Played August 12.—P. E. Braun, Cairo Theatre, Cairo, Neb. Village and rural patronage.

DRIFT FENCE: Tom Keene, Larry Crabbe—A good Zane Grey picture, but cut too short. I can't understand why they don't make Zane Grey pictures longer and more closely following the book. Running time, 62 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

EARLY TO BED: Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland—Better fitted for double billing, although it is a reasonably good comedy. Running time, 73 minutes. Played August 14-15.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

GIRL OF THE OZARKS, THE: Virginia Weidler—This pathetic little picture made a perfect double feature coupled with "Silly Billies." There were both laughs and tears in that program. Running time, 67 minutes. Played August 8-9.—P. E. Braun, Cairo Theatre, Cairo, Neb. Village and rural patronage.

I'D GIVE MY LIFE: Sir Guy Standing, Frances Drake—Poor. Very much disappointed. First of 1936-37 played and off to a poor start. Just a poor "B" picture. Played August 19-20.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

KLONDIKE ANNIE: Mae West, Victor McLaglen—Paramount certainly hands Mae West the poor stories; no wonder she's all washed up.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

MILKY WAY, THE: Harold Lloyd, Adolphe Menjou—One of Lloyd's best. Can't figure out why we did not even do average business. Played May 24-25.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

MILKY WAY, THE: Harold Lloyd—Most of our patrons enjoyed this offering but many of our fair sex remained at home thinking they would not enjoy a show in which boxing predominated. Those present enjoyed the offering, with the exception of a few. We wish Lloyd would make more than one feature a year. Played August 26-27.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

MOON'S OUR HOME, THE: Margaret Sullavan, Henry Fonda—Fonda and Sullavan always draw well here. This rather frothy picture was no exception. Business 20 per cent above average. Played July 29-30.—P. E. Braun, Cairo Theatre, Cairo, Neb. Village and rural patronage.

NEVADA: Larry Crabbe, Kathleen Burke—Good western Zane Grey. Just like all of his stories, interesting and good to watch. Running time, six reels. Played August 21-22.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

PRINCESS COMES ACROSS, THE: Carole Lombard, Fred MacMurray—Good program picture.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

TIMOTHY'S QUEST: Eleanore Whitney, Dickie Moore—Another fair picture from Paramount with no names in the cast. How does Paramount expect people to come in to see a picture which has no names in the cast and only an average story to hold it up? This picture is typical of Paramount's product this year, that is, fairly entertaining picture but too weak to stand up at the box office alone.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

13 HOURS BY AIR: Fred MacMurray, Joan Bennett—Fairly exciting to average gross but did not deserve to be in the "special" category.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

13 HOURS BY AIR: Joan Bennett, Fred MacMurray—Very good picture but it does not have drawing power. Played August 23-24.—Louis J. Frana, Olympic Theatre, Calmar, Iowa. General patronage.

13 HOURS BY AIR: Fred MacMurray, Joan Bennett—A dandy show. Our patrons enjoyed it.—Bob Schwall, Jr., State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE, THE: Henry Fonda, Sylvia Sidney—This picture has everything, stars, story and color. This was a natural. Had people standing in line in front of the theatre. Did almost as much business as a Shirley Temple. I can give a picture no higher praise than that.—P. E. Braun, Cairo Theatre, Cairo, Neb. Village and rural patronage.

TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE, THE: Sylvia Sidney, Henry Fonda, Fred MacMurray—This picture clicked. Color was beautiful and everyone was pleased with the picture. This picture is positively the only Paramount picture that made any money for us this year. The rest of the product is nothing but double-feature filler-ins.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE, THE: Henry Fonda, Sylvia Sidney, Fred MacMurray—Wonderful picture and drew extra business. Running time, 11 reels. Played July 12-14.—Louis J. Frana, Olympic Theatre, Calmar, Iowa. General patronage.

TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE, THE: Sylvia Sidney, Henry Fonda, Fred MacMurray—An excellent production. The most natural color ever in a picture. Very good box office attraction. Running time, 106 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE, THE: Fred MacMurray, Sylvia Sidney—One of the best pictures of the season. Good enough for anybody and will stand full playing time. We played it rather late but still did above average business. Running time, 12 reels.—Bob Schwall, Jr., State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE, THE: Sylvia Sidney, Henry Fonda, Fred MacMurray—One of the finest pictures ever released. Will please all classes. We held it over for a third day, which is something that has happened only a very few times here.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

Republic

LEATHERNECKS HAVE LANDED, THE: Lew Ayres, Isabel Jewell—Received either a bad print or the sound was no good. Otherwise the picture was OK. Running time, 67 minutes. Played August 26-27.—Charles C. Cassinelli, Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, W. Va. Small town patronage.

ANNIE OAKLEY: Barbara Stanwyck, Preston Foster—Fine picture.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

DANCING PIRATE: Charles Collins, Steffi Duna—The worst flop at the box-office for many months. They need something besides color. A shame to use the expensive color process for something like this. Played August 22-23.—P. E. Braun, Cairo Theatre, Cairo, Neb. Village and rural patronage.

DANCING PIRATE: Charles Collins, Steffi Duna, Frank Morgan—One woman remarked: "My, that was pretty!" Right, but that was about all you could say, as it is devoid of entertainment, and Frank Morgan was overworked trying to hold up the comedy end. Fair week-end business. Running time, 85 minues. Played August 21-22.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

EX-MRS. BRADFORD, THE: William Powell, Jean Arthur—Very good picture, well liked by everyone. Hot weather held down the gross.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

EX-MRS. BRADFORD, THE: Jean Arthur, Willaim Powell—Have to give RKO credit for this one. Pleased 100 per cent. Running time, 80 minutes. Played July 26-28.—Bob Schwall, Jr., State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

FOLLOW THE FLEET: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—Marvelous songs. Great dancing. Swell entertainment. Good business but why did I buy the entire season's product just to get Astaire-Rogers?—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

FRECKLES: Carol Stone, Tom Brown—Fine program fare.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

LAST OUTLAW, THE: Harry Carey, Hoot Gibson—This is not a western, although it has some western shots in it. Good for Bargain Night. Running time, eight reels. Played August 25-26.—Bob Schwall, Jr., State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

LET'S SING AGAIN: Bobby Breen—Would not have been so bad but the sound was terrible. Average business. Running time, eight reels. Played August 28-30.—Bob Schwall, Jr., State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

LOVE ON A BET: Gene Raymond, Wendy Barrie—Fair comedy-drama that did not reach average gross. Played May 20-21.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

MURDER ON THE BRIDLE PATH: Helen Broderick, James Gleason—I put a March of Time with this one to bolster it up but it didn't do any good. Poorest two mid-week days of the year. Picture is bad and didn't all those that stayed away know it.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

SILLY BILLIES: Wheeler and Woolsey—This team always draws above average here. This was the usual hokum always expected of this team. Double featured on account of its short length.—P. E. Braun, Cairo Theatre, Cairo, Neb. Village and rural patronage.

SILLY BILLIES: Wheeler and Woolsey—Just a fair program picture. But these two stars mean extra business for us. Running time, 65 minutes. Played July 19-20.—Louis J. Frana, Olympic Theatre, Calmar, Iowa. General patronage.

SPECIAL INVESTIGATOR: Richard Dix, Margaret Callahan—Richard Dix still has a certain following and they usually come in to see him in all of his pictures. Business was just above average on this one.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

Twentieth Century - Fox

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple—Went back and picked this one up as I had never played it. Good picture and fair business. Glad I played it.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

CAPTAIN JANUARY: Shirley Temple, Guy Kibbee—Shirley always clicks here and this one was no exception. Summer weather held down the gross, however.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

CAPTAIN JANUARY: Shirley Temple—Good as usual but not near the drawing card her previous ones were. It seems that she is slipping. This grossed only about 60 per cent of what her others did. Running time, 77 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

CAPTAIN JANUARY: Shirley Temple, Guy Kibbee—Very good Temple picture that did about half as much at the B. O. as the first ones did. If this little girl don't get better stories and do more at my B. O. I'll have to set her on the middle of the week. I don't think she will last through the season in my town. I always am forced to play her late in all of her pictures.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN AT THE CIRCUS: Warner Oland, Keye Luke—Chan is slipping. I think he needs a better supporting cast. The last few pictures have found him carrying the entire burden. Too much to expect from a character actor. Pictures like this ought to have more love interest to bring in the women. After all the fair sex dominate most movie audiences.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN AT THE CIRCUS: Warner Oland—I think it's the best Chan picture ever made. The two midgets and circus background made this a No. 1 Friday-Saturday picture. Running time, 71 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN AT THE CIRCUS: Warner Oland, Keye Luke—This is by far the best Chan picture to play in this theatre. The circus background gives it more action and something more than murder. Did good Saturday business. Chan's family is all there (all twelve slant eyed kids), which gives it a little comedy relief.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

CONNECTICUT YANKEE, A: Will Rogers, Myrna Loy—Although I knew that the subject matter of this picture was not suitable for my town I could not afford to pass this up because of Rogers. He is not forgotten by any means. Business nearly 50 per cent above average on this. Played August 1-2.—P. E. Braun, Cairo Theatre, Cairo, Neb. Village and rural patronage.

CONNECTICUT YANKEE, A: Will Rogers, Myrna Loy, Maureen O'Sullivan—Will Rogers always clicked with us and this one, although played over a hot weather holiday, held up satisfactorily. Releasing one Rogers a year would be just right. Four a year, as contemplated, is not satisfactory, as it takes the edge off each succeeding Rogers picture.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill.

CONNECTICUT YANKEE: Will Rogers—This is a re-issue. Showed it about four years ago and they sure came back to see it. Good business. Running time, 88 minutes. Played August 2-3.—Louis J. Frana, Olympic Theatre, Calmar, Iowa. General patronage.

CONNECTICUT YANKEE, A: Will Rogers, Myrna Loy, Maureen O'Sullivan—This old re-issue pleased them and did more at the B. O. than I expected. The recording was better than I expected. Don't be afraid to play it.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

COUNTRY DOCTOR, THE: Jean Hersholt, Dionne Quintuplets—This picture is a small town natural. Will do well in any small situation and probably the bigger ones. However, I wish Hersholt would talk louder. Makes it hard to control sound as he speaks low and the others loud. Played July 25-26.—P. E. Braun, Cairo Theatre, Cairo, Neb. Village and rural patronage.

COUNTRY DOCTOR, THE: Dionne Quintuplets, Jean Hersholt—Good business; mostly married women came to see this one. There were so many women in the audience I guessed that they were there to get an inspiration and do a repeat act on Mrs. Dionne. The quints were the whole show and were responsible for most of the attendance.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

COUNTRY DOCTOR, THE: Dionne Quints, Jean Hersholt—Here is a picture that packs them in and pleases. By all means play it. Running time, 95 minutes.—Bob Schwall, Jr., State Theatre, Ispwich S. D. Small town patronage.

EDUCATING FATHER: Jed Prouty, Shirley Deane—A dandy show, action and comedy all the way through. Short but good. Better than some of the specials that tire you out just by draggy and mushy acting. Running time, six reels. Played August 21-22.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

EVERYBODY'S OLD MAN: Irving S. Cobb, Rochelle Hudson—I made a mistake in playing this one. I would have saved money by paying for this one and shelving it. Cobb will never be a Rogers. Picture itself was not bad, but practically no one came in to see it.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

EVERYBODY'S OLD MAN: Irvin S. Cobb, Rochelle Hudson—Fair program picture and it pleased our patrons. Running time, 88 minutes. Played July 26-27.—Louis J. Frana, Olympic Theatre, Calmar, Iowa. General patronage.

EVERYBODY'S OLD MAN: Irvin S. Cobb, Rochelle Hudson—Here is a very satisfactory comedy drama. Our patrons did not seem to appreciate an opportunity so our business was below normal. Played August 15.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

IT HAD TO HAPPEN: George Raft, Rosalind Russell—Not a bad picture but George Raft always flops with us and this picture was no exception. Played May 22-23.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

IT HAD TO HAPPEN: George Raft, Rosalind Russell—This is a very interesting and entertaining picture. There won't be a one that won't say "great" (and there won't be many say it). You will please 'em if you can get 'em in. but I didn't get 'em in.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

LITTLE MISS NOBODY: Jane Withers—Very good picture. Jane is good bet for us. She always draws extra business for us. Running time, 76 minutes. Played August 9-11.—Louis J. Frana, Olympic Theatre, Calmar, Iowa. General patronage.

LITTLE MISS NOBODY: Jane Withers—With delightfully cool weather as a help and Jane Withers as a popular child star, we enjoyed very good business and the audience was well satisfied. Played August 22.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

MESSAGE TO GARCIA, A: Wallace Beery, John Boles, Barbara Stanwyck—Wally Beery has a steady following and this one pleased his fans. I certainly thought it remarkable of Barbara Stanwyck to spend a torturous week and at the end of the trip still look refreshingly alluring. She managed to walk through streams, sleep on the ground, etc., for a week, keeping intact, meanwhile, her bighly polished finger nails, painted lips, mascara around the eyes and plenty of powder on her face.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

O'MALLEY OF THE MOUNTED: George O'Brien, Irene Ware—Above average western resulted in average business.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

PADDY O'DAY: Jane Withers, Pinky Tomlin, George Givot—Good entertainment. Jane Withers always pleases in our bouse. Georg Givot well received also. Business better than average.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

PADDY O'DAY: Jane Withers—Good family picture. Just the thing for Friday and Saturday. Running time, 63 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

PRISONER OF SHARK ISLAND: Warner Baxter, Gloria Stuart—Another grand picture from Twentieth Century. A bit heavy but Warner Baxter always brings them in.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

PRIVATE NUMBER: Loretta Young, Robert Taylor—Again Robert Taylor clicked. Played this on night of Louis-Sharkey fight. Excellent business despite radio competition. It was amusing to watch the people come in that night. The men were noticeable by their absence. Can truthfully say there weren't more than 8 per cent men present that night.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

PRIVATE NUMBER: Loretta Young, Robert Taylor—Sold as special. Cannot see where the special came in. It was very good show. No extra business on this one. Didn't mean anything at box office. Running time, 89 minutes. Played August 16-18.—Louis J. Frana, Olympic Theatre, Calmar, Iowa. General patronage.

STATE FAIR: Will Rogers, Janet Gaynor—This picture gave 100 per cent satisfaction to all who came. Ran it on a two day run and the second day was better than the first. You can make no mistake in bringing this one back. Excellence of sound and photography are worthy of note. Running time, 95 minutes.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

STEAMBOAT ROUND THE BEND: Will Rogers—Fine picture. No business. Everyone had seen it elsewhere.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

TO MARY—WITH LOVE: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy, Claire Trevor, Ian Hunter—While this picture will undoubtedly be too slow and draggy for some audiences, it pleased ours and did a nice business. I think Warner Baxter and Claire Trevor looked miscast. Ian Hunter was the best one in the picture. Running time, 88 minutes.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

UNDER TWO FLAGS: Ronald Colman, Claudette Colbert, Victor McLaglen, Rosalind Russell—Pleased most everyone but again the hot weather held down the receipts.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

WHISPERING SMITH SPEAKS: George O'Brien—Good O'Brien picture. Running time, 63 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

YOUR UNCLE DUDLEY: Edward Everett Horton—Horton always pleases our people. This is a good programmer.—P. E. Braun, Cairo Theatre, Cairo, Neb. Village and rural patronage.

United Artists

LITTLE LORD FAUNTLEROY: Freddie Bartholomew, Dolores Costello Barrymore—Bartholomew gives another remarkable performance. Picture well received. Personally thought it a bit too mushy. Dolores Costello still beautiful but her acting in this one certainly was muggy.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

MODERN TIMES: Charles Chaplin—We thought this very good. Many good comments. Business pretty fair.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

ONE RAINY AFTERNOON: Francis Lederer, Ida Lupino—Light summery picture. Story should have had more meat to it and the picture might have gone places.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

THESE THREE: Miriam Hopkins, Merle Oberon, Joel McCrea—One of the finest pictures I have ever had the pleasure of seeing. It packs a real wallop. One feels like reaching up at the screen and socking the little brat who causes all the trouble. Business excellent.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill Family patronage.

Universal

CRASH DONOVAN: Jack Holt, Nan Gray—Jack Holt as motorcycle cop in State Highway Patrol. An excellent action picture. Many favorable comments from our patrons. Running time, 54 minutes. Played August 16-17.—R. D. Ashmun, Center Theatre, Marlette, Mich. Smal town patronage.

DANGEROUS WATERS: Jack Holt, Robert Armstrong—Good Saturday picture. Will draw and please.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

DRACULA'S DAUGHTER: Otto Kruger, Marguerite Churchill—Another "scarer" from Universal. I played this one with Louis-Schmeling fight pictures to average gross.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

EAST OF JAVA: Charles Bickford, Elizabeth Young—This is one of the best Saturday pictures we have shown and did the best at the B. O. Old but play it if you need a good action picture.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

LOVE BEFORE BREAKFAST: Carole Lombard, Preston Foster—Another just average picture to another average gross.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

LOVE BEFORE BREAKFAST: Carole Lombard, Preston Foster—Very clever little picture that drew at the B. O. and sent the crowd home with a smile.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

PAROLE: Ann Preston, Henry Hunter—This picture is better than "Fury," "Big House," "I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang" or any of these type pictures. It won't get any money or at least it didn't here, due to the fact it has no names. Will keep you interested to the finish. It is a man's picture and will please men if you can sell it to them. I couldn't.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

SHOW BOAT: Irene Dunne, Allan Jones, Paul Robeson—Pleased 'em all and did a very good three day business. The singing of Paul Robeson singing "Old Man River" and "Ah Still Suits Me" was the high spot of this picture. They will stay over to hear him sing these songs. Hope they make it again in about five or six years. One of the best this year.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

SUTTER'S GOLD: Edward Arnold, Lee Tracy, Binnie Barnes—Obvious that Universal spent a lot of dough on this one. I personally thought it a remarkable production. It took a real nose-dive at the box-office, however. I think the reason is that Universal slipped up on the continuity of this vehicle. It's quite jerky and disconnected at times. Another reason it failed to meet the gals' approval is that Arnold does not get enough sympathy from the audience. This is because he forgets all about his wife in Europe just as soon as he runs into the money in America and then just as soon as a pretty pair of ankles passes by he falls for the dame in a big way, taking to his wife after the aforementioned dame leaves him flat.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

SUTTER'S GOLD: Edward Arnold—We wasted a good playdate when we booked this one.—Bob Schwall, Jr., State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

SUTTER'S GOLD: Edward Arnold, Lee Tracy, Binnie Barnes—It is a great picture (big shots, very good story, etc.) but it missed somewhere and I was glad I played it on Saturday. Did a good Saturday business.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

THERE'S ALWAYS TOMRORROW: Frank Morgan, Binnie Barnes, Robert Taylor—Universal reissued this because Robert Taylor was one of the featured players. Recording only fair when compared to today's high standards. Business only fair. Running time, 88 minutes. Played August 18-20.—R. D. Ashmun, Center Theatre, Marlette, Mich. Small town patronage.

THROWBACK, THE: Buck Jones, Muriel Evans—Fair western. No draw.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

Warner Brothers

BOULDER DAM: Ross Alexander, Patricia Ellis—Satisfactory action which which would have been a real hit had it contained some more shots of the dam and a better cast.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

BOULDER DAM: Ross Alexander, Patricia Ellis—This is a very good program picture. I agree with Mr. Ralph Cokain 100 per cent in what he has to say about Ross Alexander (see Mr. Cokain's report on "Hot Money" in August 22 issue of this Herald).—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

COLLEEN: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler, Joan Blondell, Jack Oakie—It's about time Warners split up the Golddigger combination of Keeler, Powell and Blondell. This one was not up to par. Songs were good but the story was weak. Business was average, however.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

COLLEEN: Ruby Keeler, Joan Blondell, Jack Oakie, Dick Powell—Seemed to please but Warners have made better musicals. Running time, 10 reels.—Bob Schwall, Jr., State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

GOLDEN ARROW, THE: Bette Davis, George Brent—Good program picture. Brent not so well liked here.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

GREEN PASTURES, THE: Rex Ingram—This one surprised me by doing outstanding business during the two-day run. Played to people who never attend the ordinary run of the mill product. Give this one plenty of publicity and you will do the business. It is certainly a wonderful production and was well liked by 98% of our patrons. Running time, 93 minutes. Played August 23-24.—R. D. Ashmun, Center Theatre, Marlette, Mich. Small town patronage.

GREEN PASTURES, THE: Rex Ingram—Was afraid that this one would be over the heads of the greater part of my audience, but was pleasantly surprised by a better than average gross and a pleased audience.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

GREEN PACTURES, THE: Rex Ingram—Curiosity and the fame that this show has had and the yen to see what it was all about accounted for the business that it did. However, the reaction that we caught was that most of them that saw it were not especially impressed with the picture. It is just one of those things that the producers come through with capitalizing the success that the stage show had. Its one redeeming feature is its novelty and the unusual theme, outside of that if it had not been acclaimed so highly it is doubtful if it would have stood up on its own merit.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

I MARRIED A DOCTOR: Pat O'Brien, Josephine Hutchinson—Good story, good acting, average business.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

JAILBREAK: Barton MacLane, June Travis, Craig Reynolds—Very good action picture with plenty of suspense and comedy. An ideal picture for Friday-Saturday in small towns. Running time, 60 minutes. Played August 14-15.—R. D. Ashmun, Center Theatre, Marlette, Mich. Small town patronage.

PETRIFIED FOREST, THE: Leslie Howard, Bette Davis—Played this with Cash Night to average business. Leslie Howard and Bette Davis are a bit too Park Avenue for an average family audience. Glad to see that Miss Davis has discarded her former hideous makeup.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

PETRIFIED FOREST: Bette Davis, Leslie Howard—Pretty good picture. Charlie Grapewin steals the picture in my estimation. Dick Foran also very good.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

PUBLIC ENEMY'S WIFE: Pat O'Brien, Margaret Lindsay—Right down the alley for a week-end picture. Action, a little comedy and a good story with a likeable star Pat O'Brien. Hooray for the Irish.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SATAN MET A LADY: Bette Davis, Warren William—This picture was a great disappointment to Bette Davis fans. No favorable comments and business was considerably off. Running time, 74 minutes. Played August 11-13.—R. D. Ashmun, Center Theatre, Marlette, Mich. Small town patronage.

SONS O' GUNS: Joe E. Brown, Joan Blondell—Joe E. Brown usually clicks here. This one was not up to par in laughs and the hot weather again cut in.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

TIMES SQUARE PLAYBOY: Warren William, June Travis—This was a good little comedy drama that sent the Bank Night crowd away satisfied.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

TREACHERY RIDES THE RANGE: Dick Foran, Paula Stone—Fine little western. Warners have been doing very nicely in the western field. This one was pretty good.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

WALKING DEAD, THE: Karloff, Marguerite Churchill—If your patrons like Karloff, they will like this one. This is his best picture. I played it on Saturday to extra business.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

WIDOW FROM MONTE CARLO, THE: Dolores Del Rio, Warren William—Old but pleased the Bank Night crowd.—Robert K. Yancey. Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

FELIX THE CAT IN BOLD KING COLE: Rainbow Parade Cartoons—An amusing colored cartoon.—P. E. Braun, Cairo Theatre, Cairo, Neb. Village and rural patronage.

MOLLY MOO COW AND ROBINSON CRUSOE: Rainbow Parade Cartoons—A dandy color cartoon. Lots of action. The first picture that ever appealed to my three-year-old daughter, Miss Nancy Rankin. She told me all about it later, so I was sure one satisfied customer.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontaria, Canada. General patronage.

NEPTUNE MYSTERIES: Struggle to Live Series—Very sickening. A devil fish fight. Many went out before it was over.—Harlund Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilburn, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

SWING IT: Louis Primo—This is an outstanding short and deserves feature billing in any man's theatre. The young people ate it up and most of them stayed to see it again. I've seen all the varied News on the market and can't see where one has anything on another, the auto race, train wreck, tame bird or animal of some kind, an occasional News shot, but the same thing week after week. Universal's has more pep than some others, but they don't mean a thing anymore. Running time, one reel.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

Miscellaneous

LOUIS-SCHMELING FIGHT FILM: Too many prior runs took the edge off this one.—Oscar A. Brotman, Avaloe Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Family patronage.

Stage and Screen

CLUTCHING HAND, THE: Jack Mulhall, William Farnum—Sent in a report on this a few weeks back. We have just played Episode Five. One thing to add to original report—the longer it goes the worse it gets.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

CLUTCHING HAND, THE: Jack Mulhall, William Farnum—Can't say much for this. Up to episode three has good plot for serial, but misses fire due to ham acting and childish dialogue. Running time, first episode, three reels.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

Circuit's Winchell Urges His Fans to See Pictures

Charles Schlaifer Presents Gossip of Screen, But It's All Constructive

A commercialized film gossip radio program, given under the guise of a non-commercial, has hit the Middlewest with the startling effectiveness of something new in the field of advertising and exploitation.

Although Tri-States Theatres has long made us of radio for tieups for its Omaha, Sioux City and Nebraska houses, it was felt that a sustaining program would be of even greater service. Evert R. Cummings, district manager, discussed the project with his advertising manager, Charles Schlaifer, and eventually commissioned him to devise a program.

Mr. Schlaifer, who had been making studio observation of the manner in which Walter Winchell presented his film gossip material, struck on the idea of doing a similar program but with several added features and with this fundamental difference: no verbal jolts at stars or others in the industry.

Mr. Schlaifer himself wrote the first of the quarter-hour programs, and at the end of five months still writes them weekly, and furthermore performs in the role of gossiper. He calls himself "Your Hollywood Tatler," his identity secret.

Keeping close touch with studio press representatives, he manages to wangle much of his "gossip" material from them, and adds his own predictions—"all based on a close study of trade publications," he explains.

"I felt there was a cry for a new method of selling pictures, especially over the radio," Mr. Schlaifer said. "I take the same material the other gossipers use and, in the subtlest manner possible, make reference to the fact the picture or star just mentioned will appear in one of the Blank theatres, in Omaha, or Sioux City or other Nebraska theatres. I never lambast the industry, never ridicule it or its figures, but rather give it a respectful build-up. Of course I don't pass up any material that is amusing or funny. Nor do I do any kow-towing, and the actual plugs for our theatres are only few and seemingly incidental."

When the program first went on the air from Radio Station WOW, a 5,000-watt station which reaches all of Nebraska, South Dakota, western Iowa, northern Missouri and northern Kansas, a number of showmen wrote in to Tri-States managers in Omaha asking how they had arranged to get plugs over "The Hollywood Tatler's" program.

When Mr. Schlaifer, like all gossipers, makes good on a prediction, he crows and crows loudly. He predicted that Winfield Sheehan would not go to Paramount, in the face of published newspaper stories that Mr. Sheehan had been taken on as a unit producer. He told his air audience, at the time of the Fred Astaire-RKO difficulties that it would all end in Astaire making peace with the studio and having two pictures a year to make. A full month later this was officially announced.

Gossip about contracts, new parts, engagements, marriages, is frequently interspersed with remarks about the value of the motion picture industry as an educational force as well as an amusement source.

CHARLES SCHLAIFER, advertising manager of Tri-States Theatres, is "Your Hollywood Tatler" for the circuit, from station WOW in Omaha. It's a gossip column but all constructive.

The program is not ostensibly sponsored, but is merely announced by the station announcer as "Your Hollywood Tatler." Started by Tri-States Theatres as an experiment, it is now on an extended contract going on the air once a week.

Differing from other air gossipers, Mr. Schlaifer strives to propel the stay-at-home radio fan toward the theatre door. He constantly urges his air audience "to go and see" or "be sure not to miss." In his 15 minutes, he seeks to create the desire to shut off the radio and go downtown immediately and see a show.

His associates in the program are Orville Rennie, assistant manager of the Omaha, who supervises the numbers of a male trio and girl singer, providing thematic music and selections from pictures playing in the Blank theatres.

The program has reached the stage where it has a sizeable fan-letter following and Mr. Schlaifer has had Hollywood Tatler stationery printed. Recently he had records made and these are to be tried out on independent stations which are without the benefit of chain film gossipers.

RKO Canadian's Liquidation Near

A petition asking court approval of the recently drawn agreement under which RKO withdraws from theatre operation in Canada and grants a 10 year product franchise to Famous Players-Canadian will be filed in Federal court in New York by Irving Trust Company, trustee in reorganization for RKO, in the near future.

The petition asks leave to liquidate RKO Canada Corporation and turn over its leases on Canadian theatres to Famous Players-Canadian. Theatres involved include the Orpheum, Vancouver; Winnipeg, Winnipeg; Keith's, Ottawa; Capitol, Winnipeg; Imperial, Montreal, and Capitol, St. John. RKO sets forth that the Canadian operations never have been profitable and that, through the assignment of the leases, it would free itself of contingent liabilities amounting to more than $400,000, exclusive of any other liabilities which might accrue during the life of the leases.

Under the agreement for which court approval is sought, Famous Players-Canadian assumes RKO's obligations on the Montreal and St. John theatres, in addition to taking over the leases. The 10-year RKO franchise is a further consideration for the relinquishing of the leases by RKO.

American Distributors Given Czech Licenses

Applications for re-registration of five American distributors maintaining branches in Czechoslovakia have been acted on favorably, according to United States Commercial Attache Sam E. Woods at Prague. The applications were made under a regulation of the Film Advisory Board of Czechoslovakia which requires importers to file each year for re-registration in order to do business during the 12-month period beginning June 1.

Of 51 applications this year, 26 were granted, 7 provided for import privileges at the discretion of the Board, decision on 5 was deferred and 13 were refused.

15 HOLLYWOOD PRODUCERS BUY 73 STORIES FOR 1936-37 PRODUCTION

Purchase Rate Rebounds from July Level; Over Half of Manuscripts Acquired Are Originals; List Is Given

Although plans for 1936-37 are practically completed at every major studio in California, production forces in Hollywood and home offices in New York still are making final purchases of stories, buying 73 properties in August.

April and May purchases rose to a high level when some 327 manuscripts were acquired; in June, the purchases numbered 48.

The month of July showed a marked decrease, only 32 properties having been acquired by the combined studios. Of this total, 20 were original stories, seven were taken from magazines and five were published novels. It is noted that the Broadway stage, deep source of material during the past fall and winter, is conspicuous by its absence at this period.

The month of August, however, showed an increase in stories purchased. Of the 73 bought, 43 were original stories, mostly from the pens of Hollywood contract writers; 20 were published novels, and five were stories published in leading magazines. The Broadway legitimate theatre managed to dispose of five offerings to the Hollywood cameras, all past successes, however.

Paramount, during August, led the other producing companies in the number of purchases, buying three novels and nine original offerings. Warner Brothers followed, with three novels and eight original stories, and 20th Century-Fox was close behind, buying seven original stories, one magazine story and two novels for a total of 10 purchases.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer was next with two plays that were given on Broadway in recent seasons, and five novels. Grand National, recently organized and ready to launch its first season, bought three originals, one magazine story and two novels. Radio bought the largest number of plays, five in all, and also one original. Universal purchased three novels and one original.

Other screen material was acquired by Walter Wanger, in the form of two novels; Imperial Productions, two novels; First National, two originals; Selznick-International, one original; Major Productions, one novel; Carl Laemmle, Jr., one original; Fanchon Royer, one original, and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., one original.

Published novels seem to attract the motion picture producer more this month than in some time, but publishers this season are enjoying an unusual number of books that have caught the public's fancy and have climbed into the best-seller bracket, and this, undoubtedly, influenced the producers in making their purchases.

New Censor Board Slated for Havana

The Havana censor board is being reorganized and will function, with new personnel, along much the same lines that it did prior to the recent attempt to censor in New York all American produced pictures designed for exhibition in Cuba. The Havana board was to continue to review only those pictures of other than United States origin, under the original plan.

A new Cuban decree, published in the Official Gazette, provides for a new censorship board in Havana to be composed of the Secretary of the Interior and five members. One of the members will be named by the Secretary of Education, another by the Mayor of Havana, another by the Cuban Press Association, and the remaining two by the Secretary of the Interior. Members of the board will not be paid a salary. Their decisions will be effective when concurred in by three members.

Distribution executives in New York this week, however, said they had not been advised yet whether the new Cuban board would establish a reviewing charge or not. No reviewing charge was made by the former board. Cuba's intention of reorganizing the Havana board was announced some time ago.

Bureau of Standards Studying Film Care

The United States Bureau of Standards, which has been engaged in studies relative to the protection of records of all kinds, has taken up the subject of preservation of motion picture films with special reference to their storage, preservation and stability as well as to physical and chemical changes resulting from atmospheric conditions.

The work has been made possible by a grant of $5,000 from the Carnegie Foundation to the National Research Council and by additional support in the form of $4,500 from the Division of Motion Pictures and Sound Recordings of the National Archives.

Films have been studied by subjecting them to extremes of temperature and moisture and by putting them through humidity and temperature cycles in order to establish ideal storage conditions.

A report of the results thus far obtained is being prepared for publication as a bureau paper.

IN THE BRITISH STUDIOS

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

Re-Make

The film that made Elisabeth Bergner famous, "Dreaming Lips," is being made again at Denham for Capitol, with Raymond Massey as the violinist and Romney Brent as the husband. First scenes already have been shot.

For this Czinner-directed feature a special adaptation has been written by Margaret Kennedy, who showed her appreciation of Bergner's script needs in "Escape Me Never."

Lee Garmes is co-producer and technical adviser, A. Andrejev, art director, and Roy Clark is at the camera.

Roland Young Ill

Roland Young, who came to England to play in "King Solomon's Mines" for Gaumont-British, was fitted for a high speed part in Warner-First National's adaptation of the Lady Eleanor Smith story, "Tzigane," when it appeared that he would not be wanted at Lime Grove for three weeks.

On Friday of last week it was reported that Young had been taken ill at the studio and, food poisoning diagnosed, had been ordered to bed by the doctor.

A difficult situation is created for Warner-FN. A special production plan had been shaped, and all Young's scenes to be shot first. Now they will have to be shot last and it will be a race to get them through before GB calls on Young.

"Tzigane" is scheduled as about the biggest thing to be done in England by Warner-First National, and is the first picture to go on the floor at the newly enlarged studio. Chili Bouchier is playing opposite Young, and Hugh Williams, one of Irving Asher's discoveries, also is being featured.

Pathe Thriller

At the Welwyn studio of B. I. P. production has started on "The Limping Man," for Pathé release. This is a thriller with two West End runs to its credit. Featured are Hugh Wakefield, Patricia Hilliard (Korda star-in-grooming loaned by London Films), Judy Kelly, Leslie Perrins, Robert Cochran, Iris Hoey and Syd Crossley. Walter Summers will direct.

Shipwreck Scenes

The Joe Rock unit operating in the Shetlands, Michael Powell directing, is reported to have taken advantage of recent stormy weather there to get some effective shipwreck scenes. It has five further weeks to do on location, for "Edge of the World," with Shetlanders playing the chief parts in this story, on "Man of Aran" lines, of a primitive community.

"Cotton Queen," the other current Rock activity, with Stanley Holloway and Will Fyffe co-starred, direction of Bernard Vorhaus, is in its second week.

The first "shot" taken of Ignace Paderewski in his first picture, "Moonlight Sonata," Lothar Mendes production which he is directing for Pall Mall Productions, London. Other compositions which the pianist will play in the picture are from Lizst, Schubert and Chopin.

The entire unit, a few days ago, was at Manchester for shots in the Belle Vue greyhound racing stadium and for authentic cotton-mill interiors, on which there will be at least a week's work.

Denham's Largest

The weather smiled, after months of tears, for the biggest exterior scene in the shooting schedule of London's "Fire over England," and William K. Howard was able to direct a crowd of over a thousand without any of the interruptions one might expect in outdoor scenes in England. The scene shows Elizabeth's review of her troops at Tilbury, with the Spanish Armada in the offing and England getting ready to receive it with warmth, and was shot in a private park three miles from the studio. A fleet of coaches carried the extras to the location, where a big war camp had been pitched. Flora Robson as Elizabeth, addressing her troops from horseback, wears an armoured breastplate and a hat decorated with white ostrich plumes. She is the center of a group of nobles caparisoned for battle.

Of special interest among the seven productions currently active at Denham is the Miriam Hopkins vehicle "Triangle." Walter Reisch, with Charles Rosher as cameraman, is directing in this picture a particularly strong cast including Gertrude Lawrence, Sebastian Shaw, Laura Smithson, James Harcourt and A. E. Matthews. The story, with a woman dramatic critic played by Hopkins, has an unusual climax on the stage of His Majesty's theatre, London.

Pretty well all the floor space at Denham—and that means acreage—is busy just now, though "Rembrandt" is finished and Alexander Korda and Charles Laughton are ready for shooting on "I Claudius."

Announcement that this is the very last picture which Mr. Korda will personally direct has caused talk here and a certain amount of disbelief—not of his sincerity but in the possibility of his being allowed to stick to his decision.

Granted that Mr. Korda has so much supervision to do, not to speak of business, that direction must be a very difficult thing for him in the future, but from the outside it seems that his work on the floor is London Films' biggest asset and that, if unloading must be done, there are other things which might be shed first.

Newly on the floor is "Dark Journey," first of the Victor Saville productions for London. This spy story is an original by Lajos Biros and Arthur Wimperis with Conrad Veidt and Vivien Laigh starred. The background is Stockholm in 1918 and to get the atmosphere right they have hired an ex-captain of the Swedish navy, with experience of counter-espionage at that time.

Neagle-Carminati

Having very successfully teamed Anna Neagle and Tullio Carminati in "The Three Maxims," Herbert Wilcox has put them together again in "London Melody," on which shooting has begun at Elstree, for General Film Distributors release.

Soho, foreign quarter of London, is the chief background, with Mayfair scenes as contrast. The script is by Monckton Hoffe. Hoffman, Sigler and Goodhart are writing music. Wilcox is personally directing a cast including Robert Douglas and Horace Hodges.

Itemized

Twickenham used a Dover-Calais passenger boat for backgrounds for "Underneath the Arches." . . . Edward Everett Horton was down with a chill and production of "The Man in the Mirror" was held up for two days. . . . Marie Lohr signed for "Reasonable Doubt," George King directing at Sound City for Paramount release. . . . Afrique, impersonator, is appearing in "Grand Finale" at Sound City.

LABOR DAY PEACEFUL IN THEATRE UNIONS

Exhibitors in Cincinnati, Boston and New Orleans Sign New Agreements With Operators

Labor Day this year passed with little or no disorder in exhibitor and union relationships compared with previous strife in affecting new annual labor agreements. New agreements have been signed by exhibitors in Cincinnati, Boston and New Orleans, operators' locals are carrying on organization drives in Los Angeles and New York and union leaders in New York State at the state Federation of Labor convention in Syracuse succeeded in obtaining passage of a resolution urging state legislation requiring two men in projection booths using more than one motion picture machine in first-class cities.

A new three-year contract, effective as of September 1st with an increased weekly scale, has been entered into between independent exhibitors in Cincinnati and Operators' Local 327. An increase of $2 per week is granted for the first year, with one man in the booth, an additional weekly advance of $1.50 for the second year, and another $1 weekly for the third year. The previous scale, under the contract just expired, was $65 per week for Class A houses, $52.50 for Class B and $47.50 for Class C houses. The exhibitor unit represents approximately 80 per cent of the independents in the Greater Cincinnati area.

In Boston Operators' Local 182 has signed two-year contracts with the major circuits, including Mullins & Pinanski, RKO and Loew's, and independent exhibitors. Few changes were made.

Four Class B houses in the commercial area of New Orleans have received substantial decreases in projectionists' wages. Whereas these houses were reported to have formerly paid $65 weekly for three men on a 30-hour-a-week basis, the union, cooperating with the managers, has fixed the scale at $68.25 for two men working on a longer hour basis and approximately $22.45 for an extra relief man who will work two days. Houses affected are Saenger's Tudor, Liberty, Strand and St. Charles. Class C houses are also reported to be receiving reductions.

Picketing in New York

In New York stagehands' pickets were parading in front of the Cohan, Selwyn and Harris and Local 306 men were picketing the Liberty, Times Square, Lyric, Globe and Central. Max Cohen, who operates the Cohan, Selwyn and Harris, up to Sept. 1st employed stage hands identified with the International Association of Theatrical Stage Employees as well as Local 306 men in the projection booths. Since the theatres do not play vaudeville and since there has been no need for the men in the past year, Mr. Cohen decided to drop them from the payroll. He did not, however, drop the IATSE operators. As a result, the stagehands were picketing the three theatres while their brother members were inside working the projection machines.

Harry Brandt, who operates the other houses with the exception of the Central, has not had Local 306 men in the booths for more than two years. His theatres are in direct competition to the Cohen group. Union officials declare the picketing is part of a campaign to force the Brandt houses to sign. All major circuit houses on Broadway signed a long-term contract with Local 306 last year.

Century Houses Picketed

Declaring the move is directed against the circuit, for better hours, working conditions and security for projectionists, Local 306 also has started picketing 19 Century Circuit houses in Long Island and Brooklyn. Although the circuit employs Empire State operators, a spokesman for the IATSE affiliate stated that the picketing is not a union fight, but intended to get the men working in the theatres organized.

Approximately 25 per cent of the independent theatre owners in the Los Angeles territory are under IATSE closed shop agreements, R. L. Hayward, business agent for the operators' union, has declared. The local is starting a drive to have all other houses sign agreements and its representatives are picketing the Roxy, Glendale, and are planning a campaign against the Wilshire, Santa Monica.

The resolution requiring a minimum of two men in projection booths using more than one machine was adopted unanimously at the state Federation of Labor convention in Syracuse, N. Y., after leaders carried the motion to the floor. Introduced by Local 306, New York City, and backed by the New York State Association of Theatrical Crafts, the desired legislation was described by Edward Stewart, legislative representative of the projectionists, as "a safety measure not only designed to protect our people, but the public as well."

The union, Mr. Stewart added, conducted a survey which showed that 89 per cent of fires in projection booths occurred where only one man was in charge. Average fire damage under two-man operation was cited as less than $500, whereas, in one-man booths, the figure was given as about $1,800.

Bar Association Hears Plea for Censorship Body

The American Bar Association has been asked to act favorably on a proposal that the body appoint a motion picture censorship committee to discourage disparagement of the legal profession in films. A resolution to this effect was submitted at the recent meetings of the bar organization held in St. Louis and Boston. It was presented at both meetings by Max M. Gilford of Los Angeles, who attracted wide attention a short time ago when he filed an injunction suit to prevent the showing of the motion picture "Law in Her Hands."

In his suit Mr. Gilford charged that the picture held attorneys up to ridicule and that their work and functions were misrepresented.

Dr. Giannini Is DeMille Guest on Lux Theatre Hour

Dr. A. H. Giannini, president of United Artists corporation, was introduced and interviewed by Cecil B. DeMille, Lux Radio Theatre master of ceremonies, at the conclusion of his weekly coast-to-coast NBC broadcast Monday evening. Preceding the distinguished banker on the 60-minutee program (9 to 10 p. m.) were James Cagney, Robert Armstrong and Boots Mallory in a radio performance of "Iz Zat So?"

Mr. DeMille's introductory remarks traced Dr. Giannini's background and development in detail. He pictured him first as a practicing physician risking his life in exposure to epidemic in order that curative methods might be developed. He told of the physician's later association with his brother in the banking business and referred to him as the first "and for years the only" banker to regard motion pictures as sound banking risks. In summarizing he declared that every major producer now in business is indebted to Dr. Giannini for help at some critical point in his career, asserting that the financier was principally responsible for keeping production going ahead in the period following the market crash of 1929.

Dr. Giannini's remarks were in modest affirmation of Mr. DeMille's comments. He went on to clarify a reference to the comparative dependability of motion pictures as banking risks by citing the case of "The Kid," which he backed for $500,000 over the protests of associates who demanded that the money be put in gilt-edged securities. "My investment was repaid in full," said Dr. Giannini, "and the gilt-edged securities slumped from 100 to 80."

Dr. Giannini said his confidence in motion pictures as a medium of investment was based in the beginning, upon his observation that people the world over were always willing and eager to buy that entertainment which the screen can give, no matter what else they might get along without. Asked by Mr. DeMille for explanation of the basis upon which he estimates the merits of available investment risks, he told of an old custom of showing pictures in his home to groups of young people invited by his children. He observed the responses of the youngsters, he said, and the companies whose pictures pleased them got the loans they asked for, while the others did not. His present system differs, he said, only in that today he is guided by the response of the nation.

Dr. Giannini's remarks included no allusion to the program sponsor's product.

Eddie Cantor Signs To Make Three 20th Century-Fox Films

Eddie Cantor, versatile entertainer of stage, screen and radio, has signed a contract with Twentieth Century-Fox according to an announcement by Darryl F. Zanuck, production chief of the company. The contract provides that Mr. Cantor shall make three pictures during the coming two years, the first of which will go into production about February 1, 1937.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

THE BIG NEWS

Rousing cheers and general rejoicing are now in order with the announcement detailed in this section.

The 1936 Quigley Grand Awards winners are to be transported to Hollywood by air as guests of Motion Picture Herald and the Round Table, there to be honored by the industry, to be feted in a manner their accomplishments deserve.

It is eminently fitting that these ceremonies be again held in Studioland, for the fine reception given last year's winners by executives, stars, directors is reassuring proof that those who make the pictures are more than willing to meet up with and listen to the opinions of those who so ably merchandise them.

If the Quigley Awards are to be credited with nothing else, the Competitions have established the soundness, from a strictly dollars-and-cents angle, of encouraging visits to Hollywood by the man in the field so that he can see for himself, and for the profit of the industry, exactly what makes the production wheels go round.

AT THAT, IT'S AN IDEA

The immediate acceptance of the RKO Radio - Packard contest by the man in the field indicates a profitable avenue of approach in theatre exploitation for advertisers in other lines. For it is announced that theatremen in 68 of the first 70 theatres booking "Swingtime" have already forwarded their signed entries to compete for the three new model cars offered for the best campaigns on the picture.

It is reasonable to suppose that the out-of-the-ordinary prizes will stimulate the ambitions of the winners to the extent that they should be wide open for other furnishings to keep pace with their newly acquired possessions. Thus the manager awarded a new car should be a natural in a contest for a new garage, which in turn will lead to a desire for a home to go with the garage and also in turn for sufficient funds to join the country club, to entertain widely, etc., and etc.

Smart advertisers should look into the potentialities of tieing ambitious theatremen through contests to the exploitation of their products. The possibilities really are limitless.

IS FREE SPACE FREE?

What newspapers allude to as free space is the bone of contention in any argument between theatremen and publishers for reduction of theatre advertising rates. Thus as soon as the question is brought up, and it is brought up frequently, quick fingers are pointed at the amount of publicity carried without extra charge. In other words, the newspaper folk contend that theatres pay more because they get more.

All of which is rehashed because of the recent ruling by the Nashville (Tenn.) Banner and Tennessean wherein the papers have entered into an agreement to reduce free publicity about motion pictures. "The unwarranted amount of so-called publicity which our newspapers have been carrying is beginning to undermine reader confidence," say the publishers. Daily notices are out entirely, with exceptions being made where there is a picture or program of special interest. The Sunday theatrical page and layout are continuing.

Granted that while a lot of the daily notices contain boric acid and that daily theatre publicity might mostly be eliminated without any loss to the boxoffice, is there a differential in Nashville newspaper rates for theatre and other advertising and, if so, with the new ruling will the publishers credit theatres proportionately?

And if not, may we inquire—why not?

What with all the recent advancements to higher posts, promotions are evidently the order of the day as the mails bring in further good news of the boys in the field. It is pleasing to announce that Erwin Gold moves up from district chief to general manager of the Brooklyn, N.Y., Randforce circuit, and that Steve Barutio goes from the Boyd Theatre, Philadelphia, to district manager of the Warner Theatres in that zone.

Congratulations, gentlemen. The membership joins with us in wishing you the best on your way up.

Nairn Proclaims Opening With Unique Announcement

The Eglinton, Famous Players-Canadian new neighborhood opened recently, is located in a very swanky section of Toronto and as the residents thereabouts are not very susceptible to the usual picture publicity, Jim Nairn, circuit ad head, struck on a unique card for house-to-house distribution.

It was in the form of a birth announcement, die cut, in pink with blue, first page, with sketch of stork and copy reading: "Announcing the arrival of" with next page reading: "A new theatre in your neighborhood" and center spread given over to the theatre copy.

Jim reports good circulation on this as it was accepted in those homes where the conventional form of invitation would have been disregarded, folks assuming that the card was the McCoy announcement of a new arrival among their own circle.

Opening of the Eglinton marked the 20th anniversary of Famous Players Canadian Corp. which started with the Regent Theatre in Toronto, first house of the circuit headed by N. L. Nathanson.

Servant Contest Planted By Brown for "Godfrey"

Harry Brown, Jr., managing director of Shea's Paramount, Newport, R. I. planted a "servant story contest" in the Newport Herald with tickets going to those submitting best humorous stories on servants. Stunt ties in with "My Man Godfrey" in which William Powell is cast as butler. Rotogravure heralds were distributed by magazine boys and a six foot standee of Powell was planted on the band stand of the public park.

Another stunt was a boys' and girls' popularity contest, staged through cooperation of leading merchants, each purchase entitling owner to certain number of votes. Accompanying photo shows window display of promoted prizes, first of which was a real shetland pony taken through streets giving free rides to boys and girls.

Considerable newspaper breaks with photos were garnered on a "Story of Newport" film of the social, civic and industrial activities of the city. Short included street scenes, baby parade, dog show, military activities etc.

Arrangements were also made to hold the Newport Animal Rescue League annual benefit at the Paramount, prominent debs ushering ticket holders to seats, a "Flicker Frolics" was part of the show and it is reported the entire house was a sell out.

Who's There? 'San Francisco'

Another member to take advantage of the "knock" craze is assistant Martin Simpson, Capitol, Hamilton, Canada, spotting four 18 line teaser ads in the Spectator reading "Knock, knock. For the latest knocker, call (theatre telephone) and ask Who's there?"

When the curious called, the answer was "San" and when further questioned, "San Who" girl replied: "San Francisco with Clark Gable and Jeannette MacDonald."

Nessel and Grove Are Voted the August Plaques

As though in answer to the news in this issue that the 1936 Grand Awards are to be presented in Hollywood, two newcomers to the Plaque division crash through in the August Competitions and become eligible for the year's Big Prizes through their entries in the eighth month of the Round Table's race for showmanship honors.

To F. D. Nessel, manager, Jefferson Theatre, Goshen, Ind., the August Judges have voted the Silver Plaque for his excellent campaign on Republic's "The Harvester." And to H. D. Grove, manager, Fort Theatre, Rock Island, Ill., goes the Bronze Plaque for his spirited entry on Paramount's "And Sudden Death."

Next over the finishing line and not too far behind are two familiar names in the Competitions and to them go the only First Mentions voted for August. In this division are Lester Pollock, manager, Loew's Theatre, Rochester, who landed on United Artists' "Last of the Mohicans," and Raleigh W. Sharrock, manager, Palace Theatre, Morrilton, Ark., clicking with Paramount's "Rhythm on the Range." Both of these entrants came in a comfortable step ahead of the rest of the field, many entries being grouped as they broke the tape.

The standard of showmanship was gratifyingly high for the month and for this reason it was necessary to vote 12 Honorable Mentions, these going to theatremen who have clicked in previous attempts and also to men new to the Awards.

Among the latter are Horacio Castello, manager, Imperial Theatre, Porto Alegre, Brazil, who was aided in his campaign on "Modern Times" by Joas Freire, United Artists' branch manager. Batting for Manager McBride, at Loew's State, Syracuse, away on vacation, relief manager F. M. Murphy also brought in an Honorable. Complete list will be found in the adjoining columns.

It was a fine barrage of advertising and exploitation for August and bespeaks a whole lot of activity on the part of the showmen who participated. The boys who just did not manage to make the grade still have four big months to land and the Big News on the following page should encourage theatremen generally to bestir themselves in the Quigley Awards for the balance of the year.

Newspaper Campaign Sells "Ziegfeld" for Ayer

An extensive advance newspaper campaign for "Great Ziegfeld" was used by Ralph Ayer, Ute Theatre, Colorado Springs, Colo., with plenty of stories and art work in dailies and Sunday papers.

Entire front was done over with panels containing oil paintings of the various stars, colored circus heralds were distributed house to house in city and mailed to rural districts, and album of Ziegfeld stars was planted in showcases outside two of city's leading photographers' stores.

Dance Conventions Plug "Swingtime" Music Hall Date

Plenty of swing to that "Swingtime" campaign that ushered in the new Astaire-Rogers picture at the Radio City Music Hall, lots of the rhythm coming from the slick publicity planted through the leading dance teachers of the country. Two of the most important organizations, Dancing Masters of America and the American Society of Teachers of Dancing met in annual convention the week before and during the first week of the run and as both associations realized the value of the Springtime Waltz featured in the picture, the new steps were stressed in all newspaper publicity along with shots of the stars showing how. Similar tiein was with the National Dance League, which published a pamphlet on the number with technical and ballroom versions to be taught all over the country.

Night before the opening, the occasion of the annual Harvest Moon Ball staged by the New York Daily News, Ginger Rogers, in town at the time, attended and got the picture a lot of breaks in the paper. Ed Sullivan, m.c., put in a plug for the date, as did Bill Robinson, who spoke of the Astaire "Bojangles" number, dedicated to the Harlem terpsichorian. Roto pages and sections were planted in other New York papers.

Style tieups were numerous, Best's Fifth Avenue store using full window (see photo) with copy of the Rogers gowns and enlargements of the star wearing the originals. Music stores used shot of Ginger playing an accordion and stills to plug the records. Three networks cooperated on the radio publicity.

Unique "Swingtime" Pressbook

Quite practical and also ingenious is the four-section pressbook turned out by S. Barret McCormick's RKO Radio ad department on "Swingtime," cover in full-color, serving as a jacket for the different books and inserts. Behind front cover is revolving photo disc containing shots of the stars in the hit waltz and as disc is turned the dance unfolds.

Inside pocket holds the publicity material. Book One devoted to the exploitation, featuring the Packard free car tieup that includes prize contests for the public and autos as prizes for theatremen putting on the best campaigns. Second book carries the publicity with an unbound sheaf of feature stories, and the third, the ads. Tentative schedules for campaigns starting four weeks ahead are also presented.

Further publicity on the picture was obtained through a tiein with the Rexall Streamline Train, a drug exhibit on wheels. On arrival in the Newark metropolitan area, latest issue of the Hollywood Review, the drug chain magazine, entirely given over to the RKO Radio was distributed with main breaks to "Swingtime." Magazine is said to have over a million circulation.

Breaking on the opening day was contest with leading fan magazine wherein readers were invited to participate in a Swingtime Dancing game, a cutup idea, using series of Astaire-Rogers photos. Prizes are to be given for most accurate match-ups. Shot of Rogers on magazine cover was used for newsstand display, on trucks and one-sheets available for theatres to plug the idea.

Ginger Rogers' Fifth Avenue Style Window

Flash---

Here it is, folks. The grand news we've all been a-waiting is out. Put up your knittin' and bend an attentive ear.

For the second consecutive year, the Quigley Grand Awards are to be presented in Hollywood.

Yes, indeedy, friends, the impressive ceremonies in honor of the 1935 winners, the time-of-a-lifetime shown Harry Goldberg and Les Pollock are to be in order again for those fortunate theatremen who are voted this year's highest honors. Once again the studio gates will swing wide in welcome to the visiting showmen who will be feted and greeted by Hollywood's top executives, stars and directors.

Man, oh, man, don't that just sound too good. But there's more to come. The journey will, as last year, be made by air, via the airline out to the Coast and back in the height of style, safety and comfort, plus a lot of thrills thrown in. Imagine, riding through the sky and seeing the country unroll at your ease. Ain't that somethin'.

As was decided in 1935, winners of this year's Quigley monthly Silver and Bronze plaques are eligible for the Grand Awards and the Big Trip. That means theatremen who haven't clicked as yet still have four long months of the Competitions to land in the winners' column. Remember, the game isn't over until the last man is out and the end of December is far, far away.

The prizes are certainly well worth fighting for. Last year's winners are still talking about their reception, and plans are now in work to arrange a welcome to top even the high mark previously set. So get going, men.

If you have participated in the Quigley Awards, or if you have not, your chances are as bright as the next feller's. Go into conference with yourself right now and lay out your campaign whether you operate the fanciest kind of a big city de luxer, a neighborhood subsequent run or a small town theatre. Everyone starts from scratch; every man is as good as the next fellow; every campaign, big or small, is given the same consideration by the judges.

More on the Big Trip in next week's issue.

"Miss Wilmington" Campaign Staged by Cohn at Strand

A socko campaign was put over by Artie Cohn, Queen Theatre, Wilmington, Del., to select a "Miss Wilmington," who goes to Atlantic City to compete for the title of "Miss America of 1936" with the city's leading merchants coming through with complete outfits for the lucky gal.

Two weeks ahead full page co-op ads were run tying in merchants' advertising with pictures of finalists together with a missing letter contest advertising the Queen's attractions.

Arrangements were made with local photographer to snap all entrants, these were later made into a large setpiece for lobby display, Business Men's Association tendered dinner to Miss Wilmington and her maid of honor and extra stage show was run Saturday midnight at which formal presentation of promoted gifts was made, thus garnered some extra revenue on the stunt.

Lykes' "Rhythm" Bally Greets Pres. Roosevelt

Credit Jack Lykes, Loew's Stillman, Cleveland, Ohio, for stunt on "Rhythm on the Range" shown in accompanying photo. Attractive young lady attired in Western costume sat on saddle fastened to car which was driven to station to salute recent arrival of President Roosevelt. Thence, it drove along the line of the Presidential parade to the Exposition grounds where the President was taken for a visit and luncheon.

Jack says it is estimated that fully 300,000 persons witnessed the ceremonies and the bally attracted considerable attention.

Gold and Sirkin Build Attractive Lobbies

Some mighty attractive lobby displays are being turned out by Irwin Gold and his assistant Joe Sirkin, at the Walker Theatre in Brooklyn. For "Captain January," masked in with a fish net was a hand-painted sea and sky background with a miniature boat and compo lighthouse with searchlight blinking on and off. All around the base were rocks and seashells spelling out Shirley Temple, life preservers and cutouts completed the effect.

For "Under Two Flags" a full-size tent was installed, inside of which was cutout of Colman and Russell. Background was hand-painted, using parts of a six-sheet, sand bags were placed at front of tent, and a display of machine guns, sabres, rifles, bayonets and hand grenades attracted plenty of attention.

Design Unusual Front For "Anthony Adverse"

What is agreed to be an eye-attracting front was designed by managing director B. F. Moore, New York Strand for "Anthony Adverse" and constructed by the Sid Nagler Studios with 25′ high by 18′ wide electric letter display on both sides of marquee carrying title of picture.

Stretching across front was an opalite glass panel with title in cutout black flitter covered letters, changing light behind the glass gave added attraction of animation. Entire background was covered in antique gold satin pleated in four inch wide pleats and finished off in gold moulding. On both front panels set against the gold background were two seven foot natural wood oval frames with hand colored enlargements of the stars in portrait manner and the front of the box offce was a nine foot high by four foot wide opalite glass panel with the stars and credits in cutout black flitter faced letters.

Merchants Sponsor Contest For Burkhardt's "Mohican" Date

Despite a terrific heat wave and the opening of the Narragansett race track, Howard Burkhardt of Loew's State sent "The Last of the Mohicans" off to a flying start.

Besides getting several swell advance breaks in the press, he made some very effective tie-ups with local merchants to sponsor contests over the air with guest tickets as prizes, and arranged to have the radio transcription played two days before the opening.

Burkhardt blanketed the city with window cards, placing 25 special standees at strategic locations. Gladdings, the leading clothing store, devoted an entire window to a special display. Several other merchants cooperated effectively.

All Yellow cabs carried bumper strips, three leading restaurants distributed imprinted menus and the first 500 boys attending the theatre were given Indian hats.

"Community Sing" Featured Weekly By Edward May

There must be something in the atmosphere in Rochester, N. Y., that makes those showmen go to town in a hurry. Readers have been hearing frequently of what Les Pollock has been accomplishing at Loew's and now, featured in Dave Perkins' advertising reports on the activities of those fast-moving Schine theatremen, is a sweet campaign put on by Ed May, at the Riviera.

Few weeks back, May completed a tiein with Rochester radio station, WHAM, largest local station, on the newest form of broadcasting popularity, the "community sing," to be held at the theatre weekly. Realizing that during the hot weather folks would be thinking more of the lakeshore than the theatre, Ed worked on the idea, figuring that it would appeal to the greatest percentage of his patrons. Due to the general informality of the slant, with the folks given an opportunity to speak over the air and also request numbers they would like to sing, exploitation took hold immediately.

Tiein that costs the theatre nothing at all, is put on each Tuesday evening from seven to seven-fifteen. Radio station also contributed the services of one of Rochester's outstanding artists, Miss Irene Gedney, who has appeared with the Rochester Philharmonic and who acts as piano accompanist.

Box office, week days for the evening performance opens at six-forty-five, with the show starting at seven-fifteen. Patrons are urged to be at the theatre no later than seven o'clock to participate in the 15-minute "sing." At the beginning, current show is plugged over the air and at close, the following day's show is also broadcast.

May feels that the 15-minute broadcast including the free theatre advertising is invaluable especially at this hour of the evening. Program is further enhanced by the fact that announcer goes through the audience with the microphone to permit patrons to give their names and addresses, their reactions to the program and also request for the numbers they would like to sing.

New Show Season Goes on Wheels

Harry Shaw and Erle Wright, Poli theatres, New Haven, have arranged a novel new season ballyhoo stunt for the entire circuit. Tying up with the Indian Motorcycle Company they have promoted four special white motorcycles which four attractive gals are riding from town to town over the circuit. Starting in Worcester, stops were also made in Hartford, Meriden and New Haven where they were greeted by H. H. Maloney of Loew's Poli.

Cycles carry new season banners, girls carry scroll started off by the governor of Massachusetts and to be signed by other governors and mayors. Cycle company is buying ads in each town and tying up a dealer drive with the stunt. The cavalcade will wind up in New York City with a demonstration at City Hall. All expenses, except that of the girls' salaries, are paid for by the manufacturer.

Lampe Uses Gangster Angle To Sell Western Date

After all the publicity given the G-Men and the pictures with that background, Gus Lampe, at the Eckel, in Syracuse, N. Y., worked out a copy slant to utilize the build-up for his date on the horse-opry, "The Last Outlaw."

Copy reads: "You have seen the G-Man and the Federal Men get their Man, but have you seen a Two-Gun Cowboy go after a Two-Gun Man?" Slant not only is directed to attract those who like the outdoors epics but also those who have a weakness for the federal operatives in action.

Thomason Plants Speakers In Town's Leading Stores

Used for about three months by R. M. Thomason was a multiple broadcasting idea whereby some 15 loudspeaker units and wire promoted from the phone company were installed in the principal business houses and over which three broadcasts from the theatre were made during each week. Time selected was when rural trade was at its highest peak. Coming events at the theatre were broadcast, as were contests, etc. No money was involved, as Thomason and his projectionist did the actual hooking up.

On "West Point of the Air," Thomason constructed a kite nine feet high by six across, with large theatre banner used as the tail. A trip contrivance was arranged to send up balloons, passes, etc., from the ground to the kite, where they would be released. Publicised ahead, the stunt always played to crowds and later the kite was awarded as a prize in a kite-flying contest.

Kids Storm Theatre To Join Louie's Club

Going along under a full head of steam is Louie Charninsky's "Pop Eye Kiddie Club" at the Capitol, Dallas, the success of the organizations assured by the advance buildup. Campaign started a month ahead with trailers, giant Popeye cutout for lobby and display of Popeye toys in the lobby. Cards were distributed at public schools, favorable contacts made with heads of the P.T.A., and week ahead, Popeye impersonator was engaged to entertain the youngsters.

First meeting was a turnaway with kids receiving free badges, popcorn and other gifts with more coming at other meetings. Louie says it's the biggest club idea he has yet put over.

Gallemore Delivers Salinas To Major Bowes Unit

The Major got himself a great reception from W. A. Jake Gallemore, on the occasion of the Unit appearance at the El Rey, in Salinas, Cal., with the Round Tabler promoting the mayor to proclaim a Major Bowes Day and spotting copies of the proclamation in prominent spots well ahead. Gallemore also made announcements from the stage, secured several local amateurs for a stage tryout and used the best one with the Unit.

Parade was staged with high school band and many new model cars to meet the Unit at the city limits and after making the main street parade wound up at theatre. During performance Mayor and other prominents presented souvenirs to each of the visiting amateurs. Double truck with merchants' ads also helped the buildup.

"Tin Can Parade" Builds for Bevel

Some years back, L. W. Bevel, Princess, Harriman, Tenn., found profitable what he terms his "Tin Can Parade" worked one night a week. Large rack was placed in foyer and some 500 tin cans sealed ranged on the rack. In each can was a ticket calling for a prize at cooperating stores and in one can a cash prize of five dollars. Each admission was entitled to a can and the idea was built up for fancy returns.

On "Rio Rita" Bevel printed up a lot of cards four inches wide by six inches, topped with picture and theatre copy. On this card folks were asked to write the title as many times as possible for prizes and passes, first going to a school teacher who found room for 6,000, sharpening a fountain pen for more effectiveness. Entries were displayed in lobby.

For further interest on his radio program, Bevel tied in with station with a contest in which "L. W." himself, a talented musician, played a number from the coming picture and offered prizes to those who mailed in the title of the picture and playdate written as many times as possible on a penny postcard. Theatreman says this was built up to the outstanding program on that station.

Zinn Gave Away Piggy On "State Fair" Date

At the Uptown, Minneapolis, Charley Zinn thought up the clever slant of giving away a baby piglet on a Saturday matinee, prize going to one of the children present. Porker was small enough to be carried, and after the winner was presented with the prize from the stage, Zinn formed a parade in front of the theatre headed by the new owner of the piggy with two boys following with the crate properly bannered. Procession stopped a lot of traffic and the stunt got Charley a page one break in his local paper.

For one of the theatre's anniversaries, Zinn started what he termed the "Uptown Theatre's Birthday Name-Getting Contest." Printed blanks were distributed to the local Boy Scouts who went from door to door asking the folks to sign their names, addresses and phone numbers, copy at head of blank reading that the boys were gathering names for prizes to be given at the theatre's anniversary birthday show. Copy included the feature and shorts for the big week. All entrants were admitted to the show as guests and Zinn reports increased attendance as a result of the stunt and a lot of additions to his mailing list.

To further plug the Birthday Week, Charley secured congratulatory wires and letters from the governor, local mayor, civic officials and mounted the messages in the lobby, where it impressed upon patrons the value of the theatre as a community builder. The flash was pictured on page one of the paper, shown at meetings of various business associations and displayed during the "week" in a different store window.

Cooper Goes Illusion On "Phantom" Date

In addition to staging a Phantom Red color merchandising drive on "Phantom of the Opera" while serving in Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, in the silent days, A. R. Cooper, now in Charlottestown, Prince Edward Island, also worked a number of illusions that created a lot of talk. There was a Phantom Lamp in a window hooked to the edge of a piece of glass burning without any apparent connection to a socket. On the stage, Cooper had girls in black with skeletons painted on front in white dancing against a black drop in green spot. From background, man in black with face painted dead white suddenly appeared on stage. Girls shrieking turned their backs, apparently disappearing, and man jumping into and over the footlights also turned his back to disappear with all house lights out as title flashed on screen. Impression of audience was that all had dissolved into the air..

On "Louis Pasteur," Cooper worked with the Ladies' Aid of the local hospital to sponsor the picture and to sell tickets on percentage which obtained endorsement for the date from the medical and nurses' associations. Through local Superintendent of Education, the government Minister of Health conducted an essay contest in the higher grades on the life of Pasteur with data obtained from booklets distributed by the insurance companies. Prizes were awarded to three best in each school.

Calls Attraction Weak In Public Advertisement

When C. J. Latta, now Warner Theatres' Pittsburgh zone district manager, was skippering the Empress, in Shenandoah, Iowa, years ago, he booked a picture that proved to be pretty bad and immediately broke into international fame by coming out with a sock type ad headed "An Apology and a Warning" to tell the folks of the picture's weaknesses. He also warned those who had not seen it to stay away. Publicity on the happening spread all over, Latta even receiving letters and feature stories from as far away as China. From the tear sheets, "C. J." sends on, seems that the ad was commented upon in every part of the world. Ad certainly helped the theatre prestige and sold folks on the idea that Latta was farsighted enough to build his reputation with the truth, which of course brought a lot of extra admissions to the theatre.

In New Haven, at the Roger Sherman, Latta landed feature publicity with a special showing of his current picture for the benefit of a bedridden youth. The sick child had never seen or heard a sound picture so Latta rounded up a silent portable projector and with the phone company arranged to send the sound over the projection room via telephone wire to the boy's bedroom. Much rehearsal and synchronizing was necessary but it all worked out satisfactorily and of course "C. J." took a lot of bows.

Selette Provides Parking For Baby Carriages

In several of the theatres he has managed, Eddie Selette, Albany, Albany, N. Y., reports appreciation from patrons and good publicity on the idea, the Boston papers going for it when the stunt was pulled by Eddie in New England. Gag is to advertise parking space for baby carriages.

Very profitable also was the tiein made by Selette in Portsmouth, N. H., some years back with the bus lines covering 20 towns in a 40-mile drawing area to encouarge local transportation and to build business at the newly-opened theatres. Ten-cent bus ride ticket plus admission to matinee was sold for 25 cents, the same with evening admission for 30 cents. Regular admission prices were 30 and 35 with theatre standing one cent of the loss and the bus line four cents.

Eddie does a lot of good work with novelties, and among those that have clicked recently is a rectangular card topped by theatre masthead and prices. Rest of space labeled "Week of ——" is divided into seven equal boxes with day of week in each. Distributed at theatre, patrons are invited to fill in the spaces with the theatre ads clipped from any local paper, each ad to be placed in the proper spot designated. When spaces are filled with the week's ads, card signed at bottom, is brought to boxoffice for a guest ticket.

Another card, headed, "I Only Sell You Tickets" is given to patrons by cashier. Copy reads: "I don't have much time for conversation, but I am all enthused about our coming parade of hits and stars that I want to tell you about our shows." List of pictures and dates follow.

Laughing Photographs Win Guest Tickets

Folks out in Chuck Shannon's section of Pittsburgh were given an opportunity by the Belmar Theatre manager to win themselves guest tickets to "Doubting Thomas" some time back, by sending in photos of themselves, smiling or laughing. This was tied in with neighborhood paper which cooperated with display ads and publicity for the contest and picture. Prizes went to the ten best photos.

14 Merchants Tiein On Ad Writing Contest

Ernie Moule of the Capitol, Brantford, Ont., also sets great store by co-op pages, among his most successful being a four-page pink insert on "Strike Me Pink."

Another dividend-payer from this Round Tabler was an ad writing contest in which 14 merchants cooperated tied in. To start, a co-op page was run, with incomplete theatre ad in center and merchants' copy in equal size spaces. Readers were invited to complete the theatre ad and revamp the store ads. Guests tickets were given for best entries.

Singes Post Card Edges To Tell "Red Hot News"

Put together cleverly enough to have Charley Winchell, Minnesota Amusement circuit ad chief bite on it is the post card sent out by A. J. Sonosky, for a Shirley Temple picture at the Granada, Minneapolis. Edges of the cards were singed in candle flame after they were addressed and printed, copy headed: "Red Hot News For You." Winchell says the card was delivered to him address side face up and caught his interest immediately, assuming that it was burned in an airmail crash.

For a "May Cavalcade of Hits" some years back at the Orpheum, Aberdeen, S. D., Sonosky printed a four-page program, page one headed "Cavalcade of Big Hits at the Orpheum Theatre and a Cavalcade of Big Bargains at the following Aberdeen stores," followed by the names of some 15 stores which advertised in the program. Sufficient space for names and addresses was provided for immediately below and on the bottom a strip was sold for another store ad. Inside spread carried the theatre ad surrounded by the merchants' ads with the back page also given over to the outside advertising. Programs were mailed out in the rural districts, ads paying the cost of the effective publicity.

Personalized ad campaign on "Gabriel Over the White House" while still in Aberdeen is also offered by Sonosky as highly effective. Two column type ads headed "Abe Sonosky, Manager of the Orpheum, Says ——." Another with endorsement from Louis Peldo, assistant, and still others from civic officials did an out of the ordinary job of selling the date.

To aid a new cab company in getting before the public, Sonosky, while at the Riviera, St. Paul, arranged for patrons at the theatre to ride home free of charge providing they rode in one of the new cabs to the theatre. On entering cab, rider was given theatre coupon with theatre copy on current show which when stamped by theatre cashier was good for the ride home.

Withers' Fashion Parade De Cosmo's Top Stunt

His stage decorated as a juvenile shop, Eddie De Cosmo at Schine's Strand, Amsterdam, N. Y., put on a "Jane Withers Kiddie Fashion Parade" with a cast of 50 youngsters. Cooperating merchant paid all costs and went for a double-truck to advertise the show and also the Withers feature, "Paddy O'Day." Show ran two nights and Eddie says it was the year's best stunt for him.

Combination of the old fashioned Country Store and a Public Auction on the stage has proved a natural, says De Cosmo. From 20 to 30 merchants are promoted for articles which are auctioned to patrons and the total money from the sales is turned into a door prize. Stunt did so well that the circuit used it in many other spots.

Costumes of 18 Nations In Prytz' Street Parade

On "Women of All Nations," Roy Prytz, Granada, Duluth, Minn., broke out with a parade led by 18 girls attired in costumes of different nations. Banners and flags were carried by marines in uniforms and flags of different nations promoted for display on marquee. House staff wore uniforms borrowed from veterans and their participation in parade was picked up by newspapers, giving Prytz credit for providing finds for these unemployed.

The antique motor car is an eye-catcher any time, for ballyhoo says Prytz, and on "Taxi" he scouted around until he discovered a 35-year-old roadster which was bannered and sent through the business district during shopping hours. The driver in hick costume was instructed to break down at the busiest corners.

On "Dangerous Crossroads," in addition to lobby display of engines, lanterns, flags, red flares, and newspaper stories on crossing accidents, Roy had two stop-and-go signs with red and green lights working from flasher socket to read: "Stop-Go-See," etc.

Ricord Details Toppers Of Box Office Ideas

Campaign on "Grandma's Boy" is listed high by W. C. Ricord, Jr., of the Stadium, Los Angeles, Cal., street car pulled by a horse with the old fashioned seats filled with youngsters making a lot of noise serving as an ace bally. Harold Lloyd impersonator was also used and teaser newspaper ads carried copy asking whereabouts of Grandma's Boy, etc.

On "Dinner at Eight" Ricord promoted loan of elaborate table service with linen tablecloth valued at $5,000 and gold-filled dinner set worth $25,000, for which armed guards were necessary during the showing. Diamond ring was given for patron writing best letter on the picture, local jeweler supplying the prize.

For "She Done Him Wrong," the first Mae West star role, 3,000 gallons of nearbeer were served to patrons in the foyer. House personnel was dressed in costume of the picture and mothers over 90 accompanied by daughter or son were admitted free. Ricord also obtained diamond-studded garter from Mae West for display in a showcase along with a lot of gags.

Installation of a realistic foyer display on "Call of the Wild" was the topper on that date, with starched cornflakes for snow, mounted dog drawing sled filled with bear skins, etc. Real pine trees in the background were spotted with deer heads and mounted bear coming through the trees. Photo of above and another as elaborate and effective on Ricord's "Pine" date were run some time back in the Round Table. In addition "W. C." on the "Pine" date had special color effects in the auditorium, pine trees on either side of the stage, a lonesome pine out front with cutout of MacMurray.

MEMBERS TAKE ISSUE WITH TERRY RAMSAYE

On his editorial page, issue of Aug. 8th, Terry Ramsaye had occasion to discuss under the heading, "Hell Bent for Culture," photoplay study guides and such like and the danger of too close contacts with educators through "repeated and continued emphasis on the great educational values of the screen's offerings."

Touching upon a source of exploitation tapped frequently by the men in the field, Mr. Ramsaye's opinions on the subject as to be expected have not gone unchallenged. What some of the members have to say in answer is set down on this page.

A-MIKE

SAYS CULTURAL MEDIA AIDS THEATRE PRESTIGE

Dear Mr. Vogel:

Terry Ramsaye's recent editorial, "Hell Bent for Culture," seems a bit overdrawn to me in the ultimate results the current and popular usage of photoplay study guides will have on our business.

Much has been done already in restoring interest in the movies through these various media. It seems only logical to me that theatre managers have taken these avenues of exploitation for their pictures that merit such a means of selling. They have further opened up the way to new and unusual publicity, and have been only an undercover campaign, appealing to select groups.

A business man, when he concentrates on a particular article, points out the exceptional advantages such as value, durability, and so forth. Likewise, theatre managers, cognizant of the qualities of their attractions, are analysing these qualities that have the potential power to lure additional box office dollars, and are selling them to the public through these cultural media, providing the attraction warrants this means of selling approach.

It is needless to say that this type of selling lends a dignity that is seldom found in other exploitation media, and tends further to establish prestige for the theatre on the same high plane as other business institutions in the community.—Dick Wright, Warners Ohio District Manager.

EDUCATORS APPRECIATE HISTORY BACKGROUNDS

Dear Mike:

Mr. Ramsaye begins his editorial by commenting: "The educational institutions of the land are being invited to discover and appreciate the large injections of ready made erudition that can be had by the young on observing the projection of this and that imposing drama." . . . "what the results have been or are going to be educationally we shall perhaps have to wait a generation to discover . . . when the educators get over the fun and thrill of their new contact there may be a period of analytical consideration, an audit of the screen alongside the dry texts, the records. That is not a day to invite."

Mr. Ramsaye admits that the exhibitors have benefitted and are benefitting at the box office through the various comments of the educators on the educational merits of many so-called historical pictures and those made from famous stories, but he worries as to whether or not the young really do receive the education from the observation of them.

Naturally it would be folly to say that a motion picture pertaining to history or picturing a story from a book is the real McCoy. After all, we certainly should realize that these same educators surely understand that motion pictures are made primarily for entertainment. Few professors, no matter how "one-track-minded" or narrow, can expect, or do expect, that picture producers can afford to take a history book as a script and thereby magnanimously benefit the unlearned with such a grand philanthropic gesture. To my mind they fully realize our truly mercenary reasons for using their endorsements. They know, possibly more than we, that a picture especially a motion picture, which gives at least a good general idea of the fundamentals of history or good books, is the finest method of teaching. They know, as all of us have heard, that a picture is worth a thousand words. They know that a picture pertaining to the life of Napoleon will wind up at Waterloo and St. Helena. They don't care about the side issues. They know the fundamentals will be there.

For that reason there never will be a judgment day, as Mr. Ramsaye more or less puts it. The educators help us because of the basis of the story; the history. We care for the side issues, the romance, the comedy, the box office of the picture.

Any motion picture is educational, no matter how bad the picture. Mr. Ramsaye states that the story always gets better than the facts, but was any war story ever made as gruesome as war really is—or a love story as feverish as it sometimes gets? No, because to picture war as war is not entertainment. To portray love as love is too much entertainment.

"Please forward copies of your house organ"

RICKSHAW STUFF. Rickshaws used for transportation of folks at the Cleveland Exposition were used, as above, by Johnny Newkirk, Loew's Granada Theatre, for his street bally on "Suzy."

So let the motion pictures take their themes where they may, educate when they will, let the educators boost pictures when they want to—and when they stop wanting to, the exhibitor will have to find another angle for the betterance of box offices. But that is not a day to worry about. Some one will have an idea.—Hal Kopplin, Advt. Mgr., Wometco Theatres, Inc., Miami, Fla.

SEEKS CLOSE CONTACT FOR SCHOOL AND SCREEN

Dear Mike:

The writer has always respected Terry Ramsaye's pet column and his comments which so capably hit the nail on the head regarding subjects of moment in our industry. It is therefore almost with regret that I take the sword in hand to "call" Mr. Ramsaye regarding his treatise, "Hell Bent for Culture," in a recent issue.

Mr. Ramsaye, are you not over-emphasizing the possible tragedies and pitfalls that await us if we persist in encouraging the educational potentialities of pictures? Are you not underestimating the intelligence of our educators when you assume that these learned bodies will expect us to leave out the pepper and salt ingredients of fiction in our efforts to bring entertainment value and consequently student interest to historical and cultural subjects?

Is not the possible deviation from facts offset by the interest we recreate in the minds of students today? Certainly a good percentage of our student body can stand a little culture even if it is necessary to sugar coat it for their consumption. Surely if, as Mr. Ramsaye admits, box office results have been favorable and important to date on these so-called educational and historical subjects and in view of the fact that we have heard no squawks from the historians through failure to keep to the exact facts in our productions of Prisoner of Shark Island, Private Life of Henry the Eighth, Disraeli, and Queen Christina does it not seem that we might be unnecessarily alarmed?

We can see little reactionary danger in the future. There are plenty of anti-movie enthusiasts in America today, and if there was going to be an earthquake we should have heard a rumble before now. I am voting for more and closer contact between school and screen. If we can get the school children of today to our box office by educational motives as well as we do from the entertainment standpoint we will be nurturing the arteries through which will flow the life-blood of our industry in the future. —S. S. Holland, City Manager, Elkhart Amuse. Co., Elkhart, Ind.

Those Joe Brown "Yellers"

Another variation of the Joe E. Brown "yell" idea was perfected by Harry Rose, of the Oneonta, in Oneonta, N. Y., who placed two boys on the roofs of different buildings. At intervals each would let out a Brown yell to attract attention and then unroll an oilcloth banner containing theatre copy.

FIRST PUBLIC TELEVISION SHOWING IN ENGLAND DRAWS WIDE INTEREST

Eight Small-Booth "Theatres" at Radio Exhibition Screen Pictures from British Broadcasting's No. London Station

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

Television was publicly demonstrated for the first time in England when at Radiolympia, annual exhibition of the Radio Manufacturers Association, eight small-booth "theatres" screened pictures transmitted from the British Broadcasting Corporation's station at Alexandra Palace in North London.

Giving the press a preview of the program on Monday, August 24th, the exhibition opened to the public on Wednesday and every day since the Olympia patrons have reflected the general and keen interest in television by queueing up for the shows from opening until close.

So alive is this public curiosity that the crowds have to be kept walking through the television booths, getting little more than a glimpse of the new entertainment.

Program material for this first television entertainment, which is offered in a 15-inch picture, is drawn from films, with the documentary "Cover to Cover" as the main item, but there was a direct transmission of a panoramic view from the Alexandra Palace tower. Newsreel items were the filling.

A relatively flickerless picture, with good accompanying sound, was achieved at the press demonstration.

Transmitter in Each Booth

Each of the booths at Olympia has been fitted with a transmitter by a different manufacturer, the names of these concerns not being revealed.

During the week an individual demonstration at its own premises by Baird Television, with subject material approximating in makeup and quality that at Olympia, permitted a view of the actual receiving set. About the size of the usual gramophone or radio cabinet, this home receiver, giving a 12-inch picture on a mirror screen and sound reception up to good radio standard, is to be sold at prices ranging from £80 to £100.

With British Broadcasting Corporation transmissions scheduled to begin in October on the already announced basis of three daily sessions of one hour each, it is foreshadowed that Electrical Musical Industries and other makers also will offer receiving sets at approximately the same prices.

Receiver in Railroad Station

Realizing that theatre television is still some distance away, British television interests are determined to exploit to the full the public interest shown at Olympia. Installation of a receiving set in a waiting room at Waterloo station indicates the probable line of their propaganda activities. Further demonstration sets shortly will be planted in department stores and other public places.

Hinting at the line of development to be expected when the major obstacle of picture size is overcome is an announcement that Baird has perfected a "television camera" which will enable a news event to be filmed and the print presented ready for scanning and transmission within 60 seconds.

TELEVISION BROADCASTS IN ENGLAND SUSPENDED

Pending improvements in equipment in use at Alexandra Palace, its official station, the British Broadcasting Corporation has suspended television transmissions until mid-October, when regular programs broadcast on an experimental basis are to be resumed.

A feature of the last broadcast prior to suspension was the transmission of an outdoor scene to Radiolympia, where eight television companies had set up receiving booths for public demonstration purposes. This was the first outdoor scene to be transmitted.

When the television program is out of the experimental stage it is understood that BBC will use this apparatus for the regular transmission of news items, aiming ultimately to get ahead of the newsreel by hours in all cases and by days in some instances.

Exhibitor Group Reports Its Impressions of America on Its Recent Return to London; J. Hay-Taylor Dead

Britons on America

Expressing a view probably typical of most of the members of the party of British exhibitors just returned from the American side, Arthur Taylor, organizer of the trip and secretary of the London and Home Counties branch of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association, seems to have been most impressed by the Grand Canyon, by Radio City Music Hall, and by the Radio City reception with Martin Quigley and W. G. Van Schmus as hosts. The representative gathering of executives at that function was regarded as a great compliment by the British visitors.

While saying the Music Hall was "wonderful" and that he had never seen anywhere anything to compare with its stage show for scale or precision, Mr. Taylor indicated that New York theatres in general had not caused him to hold his breath. In the center of the city, said he, one found old fashioned buildings of a type unknown in the West End of London for many years, and his opinion of Broadway's lighting schemes was that they were badly in need of coordination and modernization.

The low "top" in New York theatres, which he worked out at two shillings three pence of British money, also looked strange to the Britisher, accustomed to a West End range going to 5/9 as a commonplace and to 8/- in many cases, and the prohibition of smoking or its limitation to the balcony was another surprise.

Giving rise to envy in the British breast was the standard of features in the American two-picture bills. Linked in this way the tourists saw many pictures for which the distributors in England demanded 40 per cent or more singly. To play with these pictures the Britisher would have to find, and pay for, two inferior "second features."

Gaping at Broadway's 2 a.m. activity, the CEA party, who have to shut down before midnight even in the center of London, also admired the way in which their American comrades began to fill up the house at 10 a.m. and the clever organization which enabled them to catch each shift of working folk in the off duty hours.

They marvelled a bit also in San Francisco at the setting of Eddie Cantor's personal appearance, with the public six rows deep on the stage of a thirteen-years-old theatre—but that theatre with a crowd of 2,000 before 11 a.m.

J. Hay-Taylor Dead

Linked to the earliest history of the motion picture in a very direct way, J. Hay-Taylor is dead in London. More than forty years ago he edited a paper called the Optical Magic Lantern Journal and in one of the issues of that publication he recorded the experiments of one Friese-Greene and informed his readers that they might expect shortly to see pictures in which the figures moved and lived. It was the first printed reference, in England*, to motion pictures even as a possibility. Hay-Taylor, when his forecast was fulfilled, looked further and saw the extinction of his paper, devoted to the lantern trade, as a certainty. Under new ownership the paper added "and Cinematograph Chronicle" to its title and in due course became the Kinematograph Weekly—surely the only trade paper in the world which can claim to have come into existence before the industry which it serves.

British Color Process

The British Chemicolour Process, to be used for the color sequences of the Max Schach-Trafalgar "Pagliacci," was demonstrated to a trade press party at the BIP studios at Elstree, exteriors and portrait shots of Ann Harding providing the sample footage.

The exteriors showed very true color values and the portrait shots good flesh tints, giving rise to the belief that this subtractive process, on the four-color basis, may prove a factor in whatever color developments may be due in the British industry. It is the invention of Otto Kanturek, cameraman, Viktor Gluck and Karl Grune, director of "Pagliacci."

Claimed for Chemicolour is that it demands only 15 per cent increase in studio lighting, that any standard camera can easily be adapted after slight modification, that prints can be produced in no greater time than is necessary for black and white and that no increase in projection lighting is called for. A laboratory on a service basis, with the process generally available, is the plan.

J. C. JENKINS—HIS COLYUM

Neligh, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

The common opinion of an American audience is that pictures should be built upon the one theory of entertainment alone, and producers have tried to comply with this idea. Some there are, however, who hold to the view that every picture should have a certain amount of educational value, and producers are trying to meet that view, also, which no doubt makes the task rather difficult.

The other night we went and saw "Fury" with Spencer Tracy and Sylvia Sidney. This picture will probably not be given very many stars by the reviewers of pictures because, as we saw it, it contains as much of the educational as it does of the entertainment value. To us this picture is a pretty strong preachment against mob violence, and mob violence is seldom if ever justifiable.

"Fury" combines both entertainment and education, but outside of the love scenes and its romantic feature, we doubt if it will please the ribbon counter girls and the boys from the hay field. It was well acted and well directed, and the time spent seeing it will be well spent, if we know pictures.

The radio and the newspapers tell us that a woman in Missouri gave birth to six babies. That's the way it is with Missouri. No matter what the rest of the world does, Missouri will always be just about one jump ahead.

The whole world looks rosy to us today. Last night it was so cool that we pulled a blanket over us for the first time since June 10th, 1936, at 11 a. m., but Noah has been kept busy calking up the sun cracks in that old schooner of his.

We have two grandchildren from Casper, Wyoming, visiting us who recently broadcast a piano musical program over WJAG at Norfolk, Nebraska, and they have one bicycle between them, and that bicycle causes more argument and receives more attention than all the pianos between here and McAllen, Texas.

We had a lovely garden that was growing fine last spring and everything we planted looked immense, but the hoppers came along and they ate up everything, and now they're eating up our garden fence.

We are wondering if Gertrude Merriam is still with the Herald force down in Rockefeller Center in New York. Our guess is that she is, and that she and A-Mike Vogel are assisting Ernie Rovelstad, and some more of the boys, in getting up the best motion picture trade journal published. Somehow we have a hankering to go down there and see the bunch, but, gee whiz, that would be a long walk this hot weather.

Speaking of pictures that combine the various elements of love, romance, spectacular thrills, underworld life with education and entertainment, we would refer you to MGM's "San Francisco," played by Clark Gable and Jeanette McDonald, most ably assisted by Spencer Tracy, Jack Holt, Jessie Ralph and Ted Healy.

In our judgment this picture will rank well up to the top, for it has a splendid cast, is well directed and is free from objectionable criticism. It depicts the underworld life of the Barbary Coast and the destruction of San Francisco by an earthquake that is shown so realistically that you will almost suffer as San Francisco did. Miss MacDonald sings the songs very remarkably, and the love scenes between her and Clark will make you want to hug the first pie woman you meet.

The scenes showing the destruction of the city by earthquake, fire and dynamite are most realistic indeed, and the wonder is that such scenes could be actually portrayed upon the screen, and it is really a marvel that human ingenuity could contrive such remarkable scenes.

To us the greatest scene in the picture came as a fitting climax when the people, gathered in tents on the common, learned that the fires in the city had been extinguished and marched back to the city by hundreds singing praises to the Almighty and were led by Miss MacDonald and Clark Gable.

MGM is certainly entitled to a lot of praise for producing this one, and if our advice is worth anything to you, we would advise all who haven't already played it, to get it and give it an extended run and additional billing.

A. F. Jenkins, of the City theatre at David City, Nebraska, sends us a check and wants to know if we will have his subscription to the Herald renewed. Why, of course we will. The only thing that would please us more right now would be for John Piller of Valley City, North Dakota, to send us down one of his blizzards.

A. F. says that the profanity we are hearing about this hot weather isn't coming from David City, so we are therefore assuming that it is coming from Billy Youngclaus of Grand Island.

When we get up in the morn
And find the sun has cooked the corn
And nothing we can see seems hardly fit,
And when we start to work today
We can hear each of you say,
"Good gosh, I certainly wish that guy would quit."

Replying to Section A, W. H. Edwards says: "The sound gate must be kept absolutely clean, smooth and unscratched. The tension pads and rollers must be kept at correct tension and alignment. If any part of the sound gate is adjustable with reference to the optical system or other parts, these adjustments must be checked frequently and their alignment maintained perfectly. One thousandth of an inch is a whale of a lot around the sound line-up."

J. R. Prater says, "Above all things the sound gate must be kept absolutely clean. Dirt of any kind lodged in the path of the exciter lamp light beam will reduce the light and thus the volume, requiring a higher fader setting. It may even cause complete loss of sound. If the lodgement happens to be on one side, it will cut off the peaks of that side of the variable area track and thus ruin quality. Regardless of the type of track, if a bit of lint, a hair or any obstruction lodges in a certain place and vibrates with the motion of the film, it will cause variations in the light beam, resulting in noisy or raspy sound. Tendency to such troubles are minimized by wiping the sound gate carefully with a piece of lintless cloth before each threading; also, by keeping the film itself clean.

"Regular inspection should include careful examination of the second gate film tracks and tension shoes (in some cases the springs themselves serve as shoes, making certain the tension is right, and the sound track held in perfectly correct position and flat across the light beam. If the film tracks wear unevenly so that the film curves across the width of the light beam, the sound will be affected, and not beneficially."

L. Cimisoski says, "Keeping the sound gate (pressure roller and sound take-up drum on RCA Photophone equipment) clean is an easy task, but its perfect accomplishment is of major importance. Oil or any foreign material such as dirt, film emulsion, etc., lodged at certain points, will cause poor quality, low volume, flutter or wows. Razor blades or any hard metal instrument is unsuitable for sound gate cleaning purposes, since scratches on the polished metal will only cause more dirt, film emulsion, etc., to adhere. Water will soften emulsion deposits, whereupon it is easily wiped off. Dry carefully, rubbing thoroughly to make sure all deposit is removed."

Hundreds of answers bore down on cleanliness as the one most important item, which is in a way correct, though we might perhaps say that important as it is, several possible machanical faults are equally so, particularly exact sidewise adjustment of the film itself and maintenance of perfectly even speed of the sound track past the scanning beam, which latter may be affected by several things. A bit of dirt on the face of the sound sprocket, or improper contact of the film with the driving element, for example.

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 40

(A) Explain how the cause of low volume can be traced down.

(B) How far or to what extent is the projectionist responsible for the maintenance of good quality in sound?

To join the Bluebook School merely send in answers. Place name and question number upon first sheet. Address F. H. Richardson, No. 3 Tudor Lane, Scarsdale, N. Y.

D. Danielson answers Section B thus: "(1) Distance to screen, (2) dimensions of screen image, (3) brightness of screen, (4) size and location of observation port and color of wall surrounding it, (5) cleanliness of glass port cover and angle at which it is set, (6) illumination of projection room itself, (7) reflection of light spot from port cover glass, and (8) condition of projectionist's eyesight."

William C. Brown says, "Many factors tend to reduce the ability of projectionists to see the screen image clearly. Too-small ports is one frequently met with. Improper lighting of the projection room is probably next in line. Then comes wrong setting of glass in ports so that light from within the room is reflected into the projectionist's eyes. A long projection distance makes it impossible for projectionists to see the screen image details well with the unaided eye. Inadequate screen illumination of course has its effect."

B. DiVietti says, "The one most outstanding fault that hampers clear view of the screen is light where light should not be, which includes light reflected from the wall around the observation port, improperly located and poorly shaded lights in the projection room. Light from the lamphouses, reflected or otherwise. In fact, light of any sort that is within view of the projectionist.

"Other things tending to reduce visibility of the screen image are: (1) observation ports of insufficient size or wrongly located, (2) glass port covers incorrectly set or unclean, and (3) port glass of poor qualtiy."

To which Rau and Evans add, "Glare spots, such as too-bright exit lights, reflection from the stage floor, piano tops, etc."

G. E. Doe adds a thought of high value, as follows: "Working in a well illuminated projection room, especially if the front wall is light-colored, the pupil of the eyes are contracted. This is a matter of common knowledge. After examining the projection room lighting plan presented in the new Bluebook of Projection, I am convinced it is founded upon absolutely correct principles, and I intend, as soon as oppotunity affords, to have it installed in my room."

POWER and SERVICE

ADDRESSING the Third World Power Conference in Washington, President Roosevelt, defending the administration policy of development of electrical power and pressures toward rate reductions, made much of the significant promise of social evolutions to come due to the special availability of the energy of the dynamo in transmission and its capacity for division into small units.

The President sees social developments hampered by the lingering influence of the steam age when labour had to concentrate around the power units. Electrically, power can go to the people.

This suggests that the Administration might well be cognizant of the degree to which exactly that sort of process of fluidity and divisibility has made the motion picture the servant of the whole people, delivering, too, a quality of amusement product at rate levels possible only to the great distribution machine of the screen world.

PRIVATE enterprise has achieved in the amusement world the sort of social application for which the President is arguing in the power industry, and backing the policy with Federal works.

Incidental to his power discussion the President commented on the prospect of increased leisure for the millions, and raised a question as to its effect upon "our culture and our way of life." "I would suggest," he said, "that the answer should not be left solely in the hands of bankers, government officials or demagogues."

In that connection there is provocation to suggest responsible examination into the manner of conduct of the government WPA theatre, beginning, just for instance, with the Living Newspaper production entitled "Injunction Granted" and devoted to indictment of the federal judiciary from the district courts to the United States Supreme Court—with names.

W.C.T.U. RE-TAKE

PROPAGANDA has its problems no less than Art.

This week the editor is bowed in sympathy with the W.C.T.U., so valiantly engaged in the making of a three part screen drama entitled "Ethyl Alcohol, What It Is and What It Does."

Production was going merrily in pursuit of the script for the exposure of Ethyl, in the Chicago Burton Holmes Studios, when it was discovered, revealed in fact, that one of the leading women, the comely and alluring Miss Carol Fisher, had been a model for Budweiser beer advertisement illustrations, issued by that famous old firm of art publishers, Anheuser-Busch, Inc., of Saint Louis, Missouri.

Can you fancy the scene when that story broke!

The annals of Ethyl were already half shot, and now the shooting has started all over.

IRVING THALBERG

RECORDING this week the tragically abrupt demise of Mr. Irving Thalberg one comes to a pause between laments for the living who survive to miss him and his final great triumph over fate that brings the curtain down upon success at its dramatic zenith.

It is given to Mr. Thalberg now, as to few men, that all that is ever to be known of him is success, achievement, victory.

Most likely, it would seem, Mr. Thalberg would have gone on to continuing successes. There was that about his career of the last trying decade which promised much for the next. He came through, with glory, a technological revolution of the art and survived in uncommon success the ordeals of the industry in the years of the depression.

But no matter what he might have done for the tomorrow. His contributions of what must now be the yesterdays were a man's work, and ample.

WORD-MONGERING

MR. HEYWOOD BROUN, labour agent for the unionized newspaper reporters, who incidentally writes a column for the New York World Telegram, while engaged in trying to make a case for the Red WPA theatre has found it necessary to assault the motion picture with a charge that "most of these fine ventures have an accidental quality. The medium has unlimited possibilities, of course, but there never was a setup more cleverly devised to stifle talent of all kinds."

The writings of Mr. Broun upon the subject of the motion picture reveal him as almost as well informed an authority as Mr. George Bernard Shaw. Both of these volatile gentlemen are remarkably unhampered by facts at any time, both are entirely willing to and do confuse facility in word-mongering with information and judgment.

One is forced to regret the loss of Mr. Broun by the sports pages to which his naively presumptuous journalism is best suited.

This Week

Price Raise Accepted

Tentative increases in admission prices made in numerous territories throughout the country are regarded as successful by exhibitors. In New York, Chicago and Philadelphia general upward revision is now under way or is planned, while in other sections of the country small advances have been made in more or less isolated situations. One policy being closely watched by theatre men is the practice of charging increased rates for special pictures. It is believed that success in instances where this is done may lead to a permanent adoption of higher scales for those houses. In several areas, however, exhibitors seem agreed that increases are not warranted for their theatres at present.

A general survey of the most recent reports on the problem may be read on page 13.

Wanger's Policy

Walter Wanger's organization policy, which enables him to hold on contract stars in general demand by lending them, when not engaged on his productions, to other producers whose assignments for them are in harmony with their employer's plans, is credited with effecting overhead economies beneficial alike to producer, distributor, exhibitor and player.

Details of Producer Wanger's policy are given on page 43.

Patronage Records

Unusually good business being done by a number of outstanding productions released since August 1st is presenting a flood of opportunities for claims to new house records for attendance and gross receipts in every section of the country. Recent tabulations are noteworthy for their quantity and because of the fact that they are being made in such numbers at a season of the year when the industry is usually only showing the first signs of recovering from the summer doldrums. Individual claims to greatness are being borne out by compilations of total grosses in key cities which are establishing new highs on their own account.

A review of claims made by various companies and a list of the records claimed to have been exceeded is printed on page 15.

New Financing Plan

A recapitalization plan for Consolidated Film Industries which provides for elimination of accumulated dividends on the present preferred stock by a part cash payment, and reduces the fixed annual cumulative dividend on the preferred stock now outstanding from $2 to $1, will be voted upon by the stockholders at a special meeting set for October 9th.

Details of the plan are outlined on page 37.

The G-B Deal

Rumors questioning the progress of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer-20th Century-Fox-Gaumont British deal were scotched this week when Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the board of 20th Century-Fox, explained in full the present status of the negotiations on his return from London. The distribution machinery planned for England under the agreement will be ready to start functioning on January 2, 1937, and GB pictures will be handled by the two American companies in this country after the start of the selling season next spring, he said. Few changes have been made in the provisions of the original agreement, he said.

Mr. Schenck's frank answers on the negotiations are quoted on page 42.

Merger Echoes

Influenced if not precipitated by the Schenck-Ostrer transaction relating to Gaumont British are two developments engaging close attention of the trade in England, formation of Associated Artists, Ltd., and the Independent Exhibitors Distributing company, both to function with exhibitors owning substantial interests. Trade conditions are reported as favorable to development of both projects.

Bruce Allan's story of these developments is published on page 54.

Pooling Patents

A pool of patents covering processes and devices used in the field of composite photography has been organized by producing companies owning the rights to 33 domestic and 13 foreign patents covering these processes. Immediate result of the action has been the withdrawal of five suits claiming infringement of patent rights, a court ruling on any of which would have made nearly every Hollywood studio liable for damages running into millions of dollars. The pool is regarded as an important advance in the technical branch of the industry since it may be the forerunner of similar agreements covering new developments in every field of production.

Details of the agreement will be found on page 56.

Soap, Soup, Gasoline

Cecil B. DeMille, Mervyn Leroy, Cary Grant, Patsy Kelly, Ruth Chatterton, Brian Aherne, Dick Powell, Smith Ballew and Margo were among the motion picture personalities presented last week on radio programs sponsored by advertisers of soap, soup and gasoline. "Quality Street" and "Bittersweet" are forthcoming films broadcast in condensed form. Each sponsor closed his program with announcement of other screen personalities scheduled to appear this week.

An account of the broadcasting is published on page 32.

Exhibitors Convene

Milwaukee exhibitors, members of the Independent Theatres Protective Association, met this week for their annual convention with a crowded program of speeches and events scheduled. The New Jersey branch of the Allied States Association adjourned after voting a fund of between $5,000 and $6,000 as its contribution to a national fund of $100,000 to be raised by the organization in its fight against producers and distributors in the field of exhibition.

Reports of the meetings are to be found on page 44.

Attorneys Agree

An initial agreement on stipulations of fact in the government's monopoly action against the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers has been reached by attorneys in the case. After a final draft of the agreement has been drawn up and approved by parties to the action it will be submitted to federal court for a decision.

The story of the agreement and developments in the Canadian licensing situation are told on page 16.

Blue Laws Up

Sunday blue laws prohibiting the showing of motion pictures on Sunday have been the subject of controversy in three localities. In one area, in Pennsylvania, residents of Washington County will vote on repeal of the laws this November. In Virginia one test case is in progress and another will be started soon. In Rockwood, Tenn., the city commission has voted to allow Sunday movies.

Reports from the various localities appear on page 31.

Signing the Navy

Herbert Wilcox has practically the entire British fleet at his disposal for his picture "The Navy Eternal," with a unit working at the naval base at Scapa Flow. First activity will center upon a filming of the autumn maneuvers from privileged camera points on all types of war craft, from battleship to submarine.

These and other developments at the British studios are recorded on page 55.

Production Sustained

Deep into production schedules looking forward to a big box office year, Hollywood last week maintained its recently heightened production activity. Eleven new pictures were put before the cameras. Nine films were moved to the cutting rooms. Confidence in the continuance of recent attendance increases was generally prevalent.

Gus McCarthy's story of the week's production activity, with titles and personnel of pictures started and finished, appears on page 43.

Shaw's Diatribe

A letter from George Bernard Shaw, published in the New York Times this week, in which he referred to an alleged attempt to censor the motion picture script of his play, "St. Joan," brought replies from individuals in and outside the industry which not only called attention to the many erroneous statements of fact but also raised the question whether the British dramatist had written the piece for ballyhoo purposes. What had happened was that Alexander Korda of London Films had sent an agent to Rome to get the script approved by "the Vatican authorities." Instead, the agent met a representative of an Italian Catholic organization known as "Azione Catholica." Whereupon Mr. Shaw proceeded to confuse this group with "the Hays Organization," the Legion of Decency and the Production Code Administration, no two of which are connected with each other, and adminster a word-lashing to all of them. From Cincinnati Archbishop McNicholas redefined the status of the Legion. Will Hays pointed out that the script had not even been submitted to the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

How it all came about is detailed on page 22.

Musicians Attack

Motion picture theatres, described as "morgues" without "living" music, were made the subjects this week of an attack by the American Federation of Musicians and American Federation of Actors to force reinstatement of "non-canned" music in order to relieve the musicians' and actors' unemployment ranks. "Forceful" picketing is being resorted to; and posters, window cards, buttons and radio mess-

Irving Thalberg

Death came swiftly this week to Irving Thalberg, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer producer, just as had career, success and fortune. Only last week he had left his studio office in Culver City to treat a cold acquired at a Del Monte outing. Morning brought the end, in his thirty-seventh year. Mr. Thalberg had started with Universal in a secretarial position at thirty-five dollars a week. It was but a few months later that he was being consulted on matters of business policy. Within two years he was placed in charge of studio management. His success at Universal brought him to the attention of Louis B. Mayer, then an independent producer.

The story of Mr. Thalberg's life and wider aspects of his passing are discussed by Terry Ramsaye on page 17.

The idea, says the home office, was to show that the animal could be prevailed upon to pull a plow. The camel prevailed instead, with the help of an unruly bison who joined in the game of tag.

PUBLIC PAYS PRICE RAISE WITHOUT PROTEST, IN TEST

General Upward Revision of Admission Scales Initiated as Steady Policy in New York, Chicago and Philadelphia

Policy Most Frequently Followed Is to Increase Admission Charge for Special Pictures; Patrons' Reaction Fair

Experimental advances in admission scales have been made in numerous areas throughout the country in the last two or three weeks and the results, so far, have warranted their adoption, according to major and independent circuit officials who declare that attendance figures have been maintained. Planned or proposed increases in other sections are being held up pending conclusive reports on the effect of mounting price levels in those situations where they are being tried.

New York, Chicago and, to a lesser degree, Philadelphia, are the chief territories thus far in which general upward revision of price scales has been attempted as a permanent policy but similar moves are being contemplated or are in the early stages of operation in many other cities. One of the most closely watched moves in this direction is the policy in general use this season of raising prices for special pictures. This practice has been almost universal in the case of "The Great Ziegfield" and "Anthony Adverse" as well as for other features of similar type.

In the case of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "The Great Ziegfeld," a minimum admission price of 25 cents is being insisted upon, it is reported. Where exhibitors have been scaling prices at 30 and 40 cents the distributor is asking that the price be advanced to 40 and 55 cents. Sales officials of Warner Brothers report that exhibitors similarly are advancing prices for "Anthony Adverse." Theatre operators declare that in every case in which this policy has been adopted no complaints have been registered by patrons, and this is taken as an indication that generally advanced scales can now be introduced in most sections of the country.

Exhibitors Are Cautious

Despite this feeling that increases will not meet with any opposition from patrons, however, exhibitors are being extremely cautious. In many cases larger circuits are increasing their prices for neighborhood and subsequent-run houses by not more than five cents, as a feeler. In other cities operators are refusing to make any move while awaiting the outcome of negotiations for unanimous adoption of a plan in the territory.

No major circuit as yet has inaugurated any nationwide advance in prices, increases being confined to small territories. There have been reports that a general policy would be adopted by the Fox West Coast circuit. Officials of the circuit point out that the present West Coast scale is 7½ per cent higher than that of competitors, the average admission being 31 cents.

"ROMEO" MAY PLAY TO HIGHER SCALES

Executives of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer are studying results achieved by "The Great Ziegfeld" which played to higher admissions in most of its opening runs, with a view to inaugurating the same policy for "Romeo and Juliet" after the picture completes the 15 roadshows now scheduled.

Reports on the admission situation, alphabetically by cities, follow:

Albany

Warner Brothers' Strand and Si Fabian's RKO Palace have increased their top prices from 40 to 55 cents for the runs of "Anthony Adverse" and "The Great Ziegfeld," but the increase will be for these two pictures only. Managers in the territory believe the time is not yet ripe for a general advance. There is to be an advance in prices for these two pictures also in Troy and Schenectady.

Atlanta

No effort to change admission prices in Atlanta or the neighboring territory from the 40 cent top prevalent for the last ten years has been made and none is indicated except in the case of roadshows. The federal tax is regarded as the chief obstacle despite agitation for an increase to at least 50 cents. In addition, managers believe any such attempt would not be received favorably by the patrons. Four deluxe houses in Atlanta have stabilized their price list at 40 cents top at night; matinees 35 cents; 25 cents to 1 o'clock, and 25 cents for balcony seats at all times. Neighborhood houses charge 15 cents for matinees and 20 cents at night.

Baltimore

Neighborhood theatres predominate in Baltimore and, operating at relatively low prices, they have held the scales in first run houses at a level which both operators and distributors agree is unfair. First-run exhibitors are afraid of driving their customers to the subsequent-run theatres.

In view of the move to increase prices on certain pictures, however, exhibitors hope they eventually may maintain as established policy the rates adopted on such occasions.

Many theatre men are of the opinion that juggling of prices may lead the public to interpret the basic price as evidence of inferior product. They also contend that box office prices should be not be lightly tampered with

Birmingham

Second and subsequent-run houses have increased their prices from 10 to 15 cents to 20 cents in most cases, with only a few theatres in northern Alabama retaining a 15 cent top price. Although the increase has not seriously affected patronage there seems no immediate prospect of a corresponding increase by first-run houses. An amusement tax is scheduled for action by the legislature this fall.

Boston

Immediate plans for an increase in the Massachusetts territory are not being prepared, but there has been discussion of such a change by various theatre executives including E. M. Loew, Warner, Mullins & Pinanski, and a few independent exhibitors. The owners and operators declare they are watching other parts of the country. The suburban houses look to the Boston theatres to make the first move, and almost all the houses have maintained the same prices for the last three years. Most of the theatres in New England, however, did not reduce scales when prices in other parts of the country were being cut.

Business conditions in the section now, according to a report issued by the New England Council, have reached a level not touched since 1930. With this fact and with the increased number of summer visitors and conventions, it is believed that the exhibitors will be favorably disposed to a general rise of admission prices in the fall.

The RKO Boston theatre with a two feature policy during the summer played to a 50 cent top, but this was increased to 65 cents when the fall program of stage attractions with a single feature was introduced on September 3rd, to capacity business.

Ten Warner houses in Connecticut will increase admissions by five cents this month as an experiment. New Haven houses are not included in the plan, although prices there will be advanced 10 cents for "Anthony Adverse."

Chicago

A general campaign of advance in admission prices has been instituted by the Balaban and Katz circuit in the Chicago territory. The increases so far have been cautious and gradual, the scales at neighborhood houses being raised five or ten cents. Reaction from the public has been excellent and it has been decided to make the move general throughout the circuit.

It is expected, however, that the real move for restablishment of 1929 prices will not come until the circuit inaugurates its double feature policy late in October or early in November. It is believed that addition of the extra picture will serve as a reason for a general increase in admission rates.

Independent exhibitors and other circuits are backing Balaban and Katz in the plans for price raising and there is no indication that any of the rival houses will use the opportunity for a rate war. Exhibitors did remarkable business for the hot weather. It is expected that the B. K. move will mean a 15 to 20 per cent increase in revenue within the next six months.

Cincinnati

The possibility of an advance in admission prices in Cincinnati appears remote at the moment, according to theatre executives.

"Cincinnati will not be affected by any increase in admissions on Broadway, or in any other city, at least not for the present," declared Arthur M. Frudenfeld, division manager for RKO Midwest, the dominating circuit. "Of course, we are paying more for pictures now than we have at any time in the past, but this is because the producers are putting more money in them, and turning out better product. We are doing very well with our present scales."

Aside from the RKO Shubert, at which the normal scale under the regular policy of stage shows and pictures is 35 cents until 1 p.m. and 55 cents thereafter, there are no "early bird" prices, these having been discontinued about a year ago when the deadline for lower admissions was extended to 5 p.m. This actually constituted a reduction, Mr. Frudenfeld explained.

The independents have been discussing an increase in children's admissions to 15 cents, although the consensus is that the adult prices also should be raised to be more in keeping with mounting costs in virtually every other line. It is not considered likely, however, that the adult rate will be changed according to reports from the Greater Cincinnati Exhibitors.

Cleveland

While most Cleveland exhibitors agree that the price level should be raised five cents, no one will make a start unless it is uniformly adopted by all theatres. Houses playing last runs in a zone charging 15 cents, which follow other subsequent-runs also charging 15 cents, contend that they should be allowed to remain at 15 cents while the houses getting pictures ahead of them should get 20 cents.

G. W. Erdmann, secretary of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association, has been instructed to call in exhibitors in zones where such conditions prevail, in the hope of ironing out the difficulty. If he is successful, it is believed there will be no delay in adoption of a five cent increase in the Greater Cincinnati area.

Nat Wolf, Warner zone manager, has raised the scale at Warners' Hippodrome, Cleveland, for "Anthony Adverse," which opened at 56 cents top instead of the regular 42 cents. This price includes a five cent federal and a one an a half cent state tax.

Akron exhibitors also are attempting to raise prices but are meeting the same difficulties as the Cleveland operators have encountered.

Dayton

The Victory, independent theatre in Dayton, has increased night admissions to 35 and 55 cents for balcony and lower floor, for the engagement of "Anthony Adverse." The week day matinee rate of 30 cents has not been changed but the Sunday matinee price has been raised to 35 cents. Children are admitted for 15 cents at any time. The new scale is the first price advance in the city in several years.

Des Moines

With the opening of the Orpheum in Des Moines by the Tri-States circuit this week, three other houses operated by the circuit have shifted their price schedules. The Des Moines and the Roosevelt, which formerly charged 26 cents to 2 p.m., 36 cents to 6 p.m. and 41 cents for evenings, have changed to 26 cents to 2 p.m. on weekdays and to 1 p.m. on Sundays and holidays, and 41 cents until closing. The Paramount, instituting a full week run, is now charging 26 cents to 2 p.m., 36 cents to 6:30 p.m., and 41 cents to closing, instead of the former scale of 26 cents to 6 p.m. and 26 cents for the balcony and 36 cents for the orchestra in the evenings.

Indianapolis

A temporary rise in prices has been announced by Loew's in Indianapolis for "The Great Ziegfeld," to open Friday. Prices will advance from 25 and 40 cents to 35 and 55 cents. No other changes appear imminent and theatre men are agreed that if any should be deemed advisable during the winter months they will be small.

COLUMBUS MARKS "MOVIES WEEK"

"The motion picture industry has become an important factor in the education and amusement of American citizens everywhere, and the industry is to be praised for showing better, cleaner and more educational pictures," Mayor Myron B. Gessaman of Columbus, Ohio, declared in a proclamation which set apart the week of September 7th as "Greater Movies Week" for the city. The executive also praised Columbus theatres for their current and future bookings of outstanding pictures.

Kansas City, Mo.

Loew's Midland in Kansas City will raise admissions from 25 and 40 cents to 35 and 55 cents for "The Great Ziegfeld," and the Glen W. Dickinson circuit in Missouri, Kansas and Iowa, will follow a policy of raising admissions five or ten cents on similar big pictures. Theatre operators in general regard this as the only move in the direction of an increase this year.

One other revision by an exhibitor, however, has given some theatre men some hope that a generally increased level is not far off. Jay Means, operator of the Oak Park and Bagdad in Kansas City, raises his prices on special occasions such as holidays and in connection with certain special pictures. He has found the practice so successful the past year that he will extend its use during the coming season. At the Oak Park for example, over the Labor Day holiday he increased the normal 20 cent admission to 25 cents.

"Out of 1,000 customers," Mr. Means commented, "only three or four will even comment on the increased admission, and they go on in. We have not had a definite complaint."

The average for Kansas City is just a little over 16 cents and for the area only about 18½ cents. This was computed from the scales of 134 theatres in 14 typical cities and towns and does not include towns of under 10,000 population. In addition many theatres listed as 35 cent houses go to 25 cents for some shows; 25 cent houses show at 10, 15 and 20 cents on some nights and 20 cent houses show at 10 and 15 cents. The elements of double bills, increasingly strong, and giveaways, which while a little slower in the summer have not run their course in the territory, were not taken into consideration.

Milwaukee

Fox's Palace and Wisconsin in Milwaukee raised their admissions from a 40 to a 50 cent top, on September 4th for the opening of their new season pictures. The scale is 25 cents until 1 p.m., 35 cents until 6 p.m. and 50 cents to closing, including tax. The previous scale was 25 cents until 6 p.m. and 40 cents thereafter.

The increase followed closely on one inaugurated by the Warner theatre for "Anthony Adverse." At that time it was declared the new price would be in effect for that picture only, but in view of the Fox increases it is expected to remain as the regular admission price. "Anthony Adverse" played to record crowds at the 50 cent top.

It is the first time in more than a year that first run houses in the area have increased admissions.

New Orleans

Harry McLeod, manager of the Strand theatre, during September, is advancing his price for daylight hours to that of the night rates, 25 cents straight on the orchestra floor plus a one cent welfare tax.

The move is the only change reported in admissions for the New Orleans territory.

New York

Between 80 and 95 per cent of the theatres in Greater New York have eliminated "early bird" prices and instituted a 5 p.m. evening scale and within the next few weeks it is expected that every theatre in the area will cooperate.

Efforts will be made to induce Howard S. Cullman, trustee of the Roxy, to join the move, since other operators reason that much depends on this house increasing its morning admissions, now set at 25 cents to 1 p.m. for a first run feature and a stage show. Independents along Broadway and 42nd Street contend that they cannot compete with this price if they charge 15 cents for "early birds."

C. C. Moskowitz, Loew circuit executive, said that 80 per cent of the houses in Greater New York had adopted the plan and that it was known by the committee before the plan went into effect that the Times Square theatres would be difficult to line up. He added that some neighborhood theatre managers had misunderstood the date.

Harry Brandt, president of the Independent Theatre Owners of America, declared that out of 585 theatres only 41 had not adopted the plan at the start, that 35 of these had joined at the last committee meeting, and that if the Broadway and Times Square theatres joined there would be 98 per cent cooperation.

All Brooklyn downtown first and second-run houses have increased admissions in addition to discarding "early bird" prices. The Fox has raised prices from 40 to 50 cents, the Paramount, Albee and Metropolitan from 50 to 55 cents. A number of independent and major circuit heads feel that no matter what other theatres do, their houses will continue to operate with advanced admissions.

Omaha

One group of theatres, the Carl Snider trio of ten cent houses in Omaha, raised admissions to 15 cents at the start of the summer heat, and weathered the elements so well that it seems they will be able to maintain this level. This was the only such move in the territory. Business in all cities in the sector is very much improved but theatre men see no excuse for general increases, especially in view of the crop failures in the territory.

Philadelphia

A survey of the Philadelphia area indicates that the general tendency this fall will be for upward revision of admission scales. The first

NEW SHOW SEASON STARTS WITH FLOOD OF BROKEN HOUSE RECORDS

At Least Thirteen Pictures Have Established Opening Day Or Subsequent High Marks Since August 1st, Present Season

Rush of Business Attributed to High Quality Product for 1936-7, and to Increased Showmanship - Management Bearing out their advance exploitation, the first releases on the new season's schedules are making new opportunities every day for producers and distributors to claim broken house records of every sort for attendance and gross receipts. Returns from first-run houses in every section which have opened with the new pictures support indications that the year will be one of the best ever.

In the period since August 1st, usually the dullest of the year, at least 13 pictures have established opening day or subsequent records at various houses. The producing companies, alert to report any broken attendance or gross receipts marks, found a constant parade of box office reports to justify claims.

The outstanding business done by the season's first pictures was attributed to various causes, chief among which is that the quality of the first samples of the new product are considerably in advance of that of their predecessors. An unusual number of such films have been shown to an amusement hungry and increasingly prosperous public. Extra sales efforts by exhibitors and intensive campaigns by distributors also have contributed.

See Reflection in Earnings

The returns for August and the first weeks of September are expected to reflect in the third quarter net earnings statements of most of the major companies. Preliminary financial surveys indicate that some of the companies, notably Paramount, Warner Brothers, 20th Century-Fox and Loew's, will have encouraging statements for the periods included.

After grosses in 28 key city first-run houses for the week preceding Labor Day were reported higher than any reached during the previous 50 weeks except the peaks reached late in November, 1935, and again at Christmas time, returns for the holiday weekend touched new highs. Executives of major circuits reported that business jumped 20 to 50 per cent over last year's Labor Day period. All circuit operators were enthusiastic. They unanimously attributed the results chiefly to the attractions being shown.

According to officials of eight major companies, 13 feature productions were strong factors in accumulation of the high grosses, and numerous house records were detailed as proof of the increased business. The fact that other companies or other productions are not included in the imposing list of records does not mean that they are not participating in the movement. In some cases major companies reported no outstanding releases had been scheduled for the period under consideration.

"Girl's Dormitory," debut vehicle for Simone Simon as a new 20th Century-Fox star, grossed $55,000 in its first week at the Roxy, New York, which the distributor said, was the largest in the history of the theatre while under the management of Howard S. Cullman. In its opening three days the picture established three individual records for attendance and receipts for Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays, a total of 74,555 persons having purchased tickets over the weekend. All opening day attendance and box-office records of the last four and a half years for the theatre were broken when the picture began its run on August 27th, and that mark was destined to be superseded soon. The totals for the day were said to be 20 per cent better than the opening day attendance for "Diamond Jim" and "Frankenstein," the previous record holders.

At the same time the picture set a new Labor Day record at Proctor's in Newark with a total gross of $4,877. Three days earlier, at the Fox in Detroit, the film played to the largest opening day business of the year with a gross of $3,615.

After an intensive local exploitation campaign, "Ramona," 20th Century film in color, broke opening day records on its Labor Day world premiere at the Alvin, Pittsburgh, according to John H. Harris, house manager there. The gross receipts were $3,619. The exploitation was coordinated with the 40th anniversary celebration of the Harris Amusement Company and included double newspaper space, airplane banners and special radio broadcasts.

"Sing, Baby, Sing," latest release by 20th Century-Fox, topped the weekend attendance record at the Roxy, New York, which had been previously broken by "Girls' Dormitory." According to Mr. Cullman, 75,397 persons attended showings of the picture on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, September 11th, 12th and 13th.

"Swing Time," latest Astaire-Rogers musical, has established several new house records for RKO-Radio since its release. At Radio City Music Hall, New York, the picture was reported to have drawn a bigger second week than its first. Attendance marks at the theatre were broken over Labor Day weekend when one film pulled a three day audience of more than 90,000, beating "Top Hat," the former record holder.

At the Orpheum theatre, New Orleans, the opening day was $200 over any previous gross.

At the Mayfair, Asbury Park, N. J., the house reported a new record with $300 over for the first week and $400 for the first day. The Brandeis theatre in Omaha equaled its all-time record.

In Philadelphia at the Stanley, Labor Day was the biggest occasion in the annals of the theatre, with the full week's business going more than $7,000 over "Top Hat." The Park theatre, Reading, Pa., the Palace in Chicago and the Albee in Cincinnati all exceeded former house records with "Swing Time" during their first weeks. The new Astaire picture also surpassed previous marks set by "Top Hat" in the Orpheum, Salt Lake City; the Golden Gate, San Francisco; the Hippodrome, Baltimore; Keith's, Washington, and the Pantheon, Toledo.

In Glens Falls, N. Y., the Rialto theatre broke all its previous records for a five-day run. At the Warner in Memphis, the theatre had its biggest opening day on record, while at the Palace in Columbus, Ohio, it was the first picture in the history of the house to be held over for a second week.

Paramount Top Is Set

Paramount's "The General Died at Dawn," with Gary Cooper and Madeleine Carroll sold 75,000 tickets over the Labor Day weekend at the Paramount, New York, breaking the 10 year house record. The picture, in addition, set a new opening day record on September 2nd when it topped the attendance mark set by "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," previous record holder at the theatre. The feat was repeated when the picture opened at the Paramount in San Francisco, grossing $2,720, which was 29 per cent better than "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" and the biggest first day business for the house in three years. The all-time weekend attendance record at the Fox theatre, Spokane, was broken by "The General" when 10,500 attended on September 12th and 13th.

The Paramount office also pointed to exceptional business scored by "The Texas Rangers." At the Majestic in Dallas the picture recorded the best business for 1936, topping the previous record of Rhythm on the Range by nearly $3,000, and in Oakland, Cal., at the Paramount theatre the picture brought an opening day gross of $2,700, better than any previous high at the house.

An opening day record at the Alvin theatre, Pittsburgh, was claimed for "Nine Days

FINANCIERS SEE DIVIDEND INCREASE

Reflecting the health of box office receipts, the motion picture industry fared better this summer than was anticipated, the Wall Street Journal observes. Loew's net income for the final quarter of its fiscal year, ended August 31st, was estimated at $2 a common share. This would mean about $6.50 a share for the full year, the best since 1931. It is indicated that Paramount will show a substantial profit for the current quarter and Warner Brothers, in the final quarter of its fiscal year, ended August 31st, may have added a few cents to the 60 cents a common share reported for the first 39 weeks of the year.

NEW SEASON RECEIPTS SET RECORDS

a Queen," latest release of Gaumont British, by the house management there. The picture opened its run on September 1st and continued to do exceptional business during its first week.

Heralded by an extensive campaign, Warner Brothers' "Anthony Adverse" scored 11 new records in different territories. At the Strand in New York the picture broke the opening day's attendance and box office records, and in its first three weeks exceeded the all-time business done by the house on several other occasions. Opening day attendance and gross figures were also smashed at the Boyd theatre in Philadelphia and the film, in addition, broke the week's record from August 21st to 28th. On August 22nd and 23rd it exceeded any previous weekend mark at the Warner theatre in Memphis, Tenn., and on August 25th at the Criterion in Oklahoma City it recorded the best Tuesday business in seven years. At the Warner house in Atlantic City the picture broke the all-time house record by 50 per cent on August 14th and scored the best opening day business on August 20th at the United Artists theatre in Detroit.

The biggest opening day in the history of the Broadway theatre in Charlotte, N. C., was marked at the picture's premiere there and a new house record for the Denver theatre, Denver, was set when the first four days' receipts topped the gross for a full week's engagement of "G-Men." At the Warner, Milwaukee and Keith's, Syracuse, "Anthony Adverse" doubled former record totals and house records were similarly surpassed at the Bonoff in Madison, Conn., despite advanced prices. A unique mark was made by the production when the Shea-Buffalo, Buffalo, guaranteed a second week's run before the opening.

Deviation from the usual practice of holding back good box office attractions during the hot summer months proved very profitable for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer according to company sales executives. Three August releases scored records of various types immediately after their first showings.

"The Great Ziegfeld" broke all-time records for MGM product during runs at five theatres in South Haven, Mich.; Traverse City, Mich.; Benton Harbor, Mich.; Atlantic City, N. J.; and Colorado Springs, Colorado.

At the Hollywood in Petoskey, Mich., during a five day run the picture was reported to have brought in business better than any film since "Tugboat Annie" in August, 1934. Similarly at the Plaza in Asheville, N. C., it was said to have established an all-time record for all productions played at any theatre in the two Carolinas and at the Paramount in San Francisco during a 20 day run it recorded totals exceeded only by "San Francisco" earlier in the summer.

"The Gorgeous Hussy" broke all records for MGM product at the Palace in Washington, D. C., and at the State in Minneapolis since 1934. Opening business broke the house record of the Albee in Cincinnati and the first day for the film at the Des Moines, Des Moines, was the best since New Years Day, 1935. The picture opened on a Saturday at the Great Lakes theatre, Buffalo, and the totals were reported the best Saturday business for any MGM picture since 1934. "His Brother's Wife" also surpassed any previous MGM record at the Michigan theatre in Detroit.

"PREVIEW" MACHINE RECORDS REACTIONS

Charles E. Ford, editor of Universal Newsreel, has invented what for lack of an official name is called the "Preview Machine." Some weeks ago he went to a coast preview and sat in on a conference at the studio later to discuss what was wrong with the picture. Nobody agreed on the audience reaction to the various sequences.

So Mr. Ford built himself a machine. It has two turntables with wax records and microphones. It's portable and can be plugged into any theatre light socket. When the picture begins he starts his records, and when the picture is finished he plays back every sound that has come from the screen and from the audience.

When laughs interrupt dialogue the effect is obvious. When funny situations or dialogue don't click there is silence. In one picture where it has been tried, additional film from the cutouts has been added to clear up the dialogue and give time for the laughs to die down. In another an entire sequence has been retaken.

Only one picture was on the release schedule for United Artists during August. "The Last of the Mohicans," Reliance production, has played in approximately 40 key situations including resorts and, while exact figures were not given, home office executives reported that the film has done 40 per cent above average business in most cases and has set new marks for United Artists' releases in many houses. The picture opened at the Rivoli, New York, on September 2 and attendance was reported as surpassing any since the first showing of Charlie Chaplin's "Modern Times." At the Aldine, Philadelphia, more than 7,500 attended the first showing of the film, the greatest attendance in the history of the house, according to the management.

Universal Pictures recorded new high totals for three houses with the simultaneous opening of "My Man Godfrey" in Los Angeles and Pittsburgh. Following an advanced price premiere on September 1st at the Pantages, Los Angeles, the picture started its regular run at that theatre and the RKO Hillstreet Playhouse with attendance figures better than any since the two houses changed to a picture policy five years ago. At the Fulton, Pittsburgh, the film broke all opening day records in spite of rain in the afternoon and evening.

Paramount Profit For Three Months Seen by Official

Paramount Pictures, Inc., will show a profit for the quarter ending September 30th, according to an unnamed executive of the company quoted in the Motion Picture Daily. Although the amount of earnings indicated by current operations was not indidicated it was said that the expected net would be realized without applying anything from the special inventory reserve of $2,500,000 set up out of 1935 earnings.

Substantiating the prediction, Neil F. Agnew, vice-president in charge of sales, announced that business had reached a five-year high for Paramount Week. Film rentals were 35 per cent higher than the figures for the same period last year, he said.

In both 1936 quarters Paramount's theatre operations showed a substantial profit and during the current quarter earnings from this source are running eight to 10 per cent ahead of the first half of the year with good prospects of an even larger increase during the current month. Distribution, likewise profitable in the first two quarters, is estimated to be a 12 to 15 per cent better in the third quarter.

The company's improving financial position is reflected in the present popularity and strength of its securities. The first preferred has advanced during the past three months from a low of 59 to its present 87, close to the year's high. The second preferred and common issues, likewise, have made significant advances in recent heavy trading.

Agreement Made In ASCAP Action

An initial agreement on stipulations of fact in connection with the Government's monopoly action against the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers has been reached by representatives of the Attorney General's office and Arthur Schwartz of Schwartz & Frolich, counsel for ASCAP.

With the completion of the conferences, the Attorney General's office will prepare a first draft of the stipulations. This must be checked by ASCAP and other defendants with the possibility that several months will elapse before a final draft has been approved by all parties to the action.

Leslie Boosey, president of the Performing Rights Society of London, is scheduled to arrive in New York on October 19th for conferences with E. C. Mills, general manager of ASCAP on the Canadian situation and the future policies of the organizations there.

Thalberg Dies and Hollywood Wonders About Heir to Crown

Death of Producer Joins Swift Succession of Career, Success and Fortune

by TERRY RAMSAYE

ALL things in life came swiftly to young, earnest Irving Thalberg, career, success, fortune, and this week the last of them, death, in his thirty-seventh year.

Last week Mr. Thalberg left his Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio office in Culver City to go home and treat a cold acquired at a Del Monte outing. He took to his bed in the provincial French cottage by the sea on Santa Monica Palisades. Pneumonia developed and flaming fever burned his slight strength away through the racing hours. Monday morning a little after ten o'clock he was dead.

Hours before the announcement of the end had come the New York wires were carrying dire reports, unconfirmed and unconfirmable. The official tidings, when they came, swept over the press wires, the market wires and the international telephone to the world capitals and thence under page wide headlines to the public of the whole world of the motion picture in which Mr. Thalberg achieved his fame.

This worldwide news import of the death of Mr. Thalberg is a spontaneously significant token of the importance of his position in the complex economic and political structure of the motion picture industry and its inter-related ramifications. His passing is an event on the international map of a new screen dominion which is even now forming between Hollywood, New York and London.

THE death of Mr. Thalberg brings the first fundamentally important change in the personnel structure of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production organization since its founding a dozen years ago.

With Irving Thalberg gone there must now ensue a re-orientation of production leadership not alone in Culver City but for all of the world of the screen. The potential consequences are many and complicated. While to the many Mr. Thalberg has been known chiefly as a maker of motion pictures he was all the while exerting large influence and authority on the executive chessboard of Hollywood. He had for several years asserted vigorously the doctrine of production control of the industry, of final authority and responsibility where the pictures were made.

It is to be remembered that just about a year ago there was the story of an episode and occasion when Will H. Hays was discussing deeply "in camera" a consideration of important policy decisions at a meeting of Hollywood executives and suggested that before a decision was reached "you gentlemen consult your principals in New York."

Life a Modern Industrial Romance

To that, it is related, Mr. Thalberg replied: "You are talking to the principals here, now."

THALBERG the producer was world famous, without proclamation. By kindred processes, also without proclamation, Thalberg the executive was felt, rather than known, and was, when Death came riding him down, on the way to more evident authority.

The attention which Mr. Thalberg gave to the commercial performance of and public reaction to his productions was quite as intensive as his creative endeavours.

The night of an opening of a Thalberg production of first importance, in New York, London or even lesser centers, in his office presented a scene like that of a presidential candidate getting the returns on election night.

The long distance telephones and the telegraph wires were a-chatter, reporting on the box office sales, the line-up in the street, the standing room, the audience reactions, the first flashes of press opinion, the notions of picture men and Metro personages at the showing.

On these occasions Mr. Thalberg was tense with nervous attentions. He did not smoke, but was given to sitting teetering with his chair on its back legs, a bit of walking up and down — and occasionally pilfering his secretary's desk in quest of chocolates.

While the Thalberg personality was less flamboyant, and less assertive, externally, his career, rise and influence in the production world was in some degree parallel to the rise and might of the emphatic Winfield Sheehan in the day of his dominance in the Fox picture domain. Chief of the differences of pattern was in the fact that Mr. Sheehan began as an executive and added production achievement, while Mr. Thalberg began with production and acquired executive importance and power.

Markedly the fame of Mr. Thalberg was nourished much by the always effective factor of competence-in-youth, notable in a number of motion picture careers and personalities. It was, it is to be recalled, a part of the making of Joseph P. Kennedy to be known as "the boy banker" before he moved into the motion picture scene and thence on to New Deal fame.

A POSITIVE PERSONAL FORCE, SAYS DIETZ

by HOWARD DIETZ

One could not have known Irving Thalberg and have been indifferent to his charm. He was a positive personal force. Careful in listening, careful in talking, considerate of personal feelings. His tirelessness was a true manifestation of self. He had continuous goals and was unhappy unless moving toward them. He was truly modest, but never silly about it. He knew that he knew his business, but he did not assume that others did not know theirs.

In the midst of his dynamic ways he was always friendly and thoughtful. He was truly in love with his wife and family and he also had love for his friends. It is true that he had made patience and painstaking effort the star parts in a career that has been considered one of genius. He was unquestionably the finest producer of films since the industry began.

He believed that good work was the result of good taste and hard work, and he was scornful of comments about his own brilliance. He never cared about personal publicity. In fact, in the midst of the great credit rush he never once allowed his own name to appear on a motion picture screen.

And again in the instance of Sam Katz, by coincidence both a producer for Metro and also introduced to the world of the motion picture in the service of Carl Laemmle, even as Mr. Thalberg. And again, not so long ago with Metro, there is the rather young David Selznick, also with spectacular successes to his credit. It would appear that Mr. Mayer, who is really no greybeard himself, has found the young idea something to encourage.

With his newly released "Romeo and Juliet" now playing, Mr. Thalberg was well into the labours of the eight pictures which he elected to give personal supervision for this season. On that schedule, just now complete are "The Good Earth" and "Camille." Others on that interrupted schedule are: "Marie Antoinette," "The Prisoner of Zenda," "Pride and Prejudice," "Beloved," "Maytime" and the Marx Brothers in "A Day at the Races."

THE outlines of Mr. Thalberg's life story etch a cameo of modern industrial romance, a bright page in the annals of the magic of Baghdad-on-the-Subway. He was born the thirtieth of May in 1899, to William and Henrietta Thalberg, in an oldfashioned brownstone house at 1303 Bushwick Avenue in Brooklyn. His father was a minor importer of laces. The boy went to Public School 85 in Brooklyn and was graduated by Boy's High School there. He was a frail lad and at the end of his schooling became ill and bed ridden for some six months. Two years elapsed before he could get about in normal activities.

Through his convalescence Mr. Thalberg applied himself to study at home. He read a great array of books, and went about learning shorthand, Spanish and the manipulation of the typewriter. When he was well enough he went to a business school and later took some special courses at New York University.

Then one day he inserted an advertisement in the New York Journal of Commerce:

> SITUATION WANTED—Secretary, stenographer, Spanish and English. High school education, inexperienced. $15.

Of the four responses to this advertisement one brought a job, at fifteen dollars a week, and within the year young Irving Thalberg had become assistant manager of a small exporting concern. He discovered limitations in the possible opportunities and began to look about for something else to do.

OPPORTUNITY knocked, and he ignored it, one day when on a visit to Edgemere in Long Island he met Carl Laemmle, president of Universal.

Mr. Laemmle, struck by the boy's manner and personality, offered him a job in the New York offices of the company. He rejected it, feeling that he wanted to remain in mercantile business. A while later the young man found himself walking past the Universal offices. He saw the sign, and, suddenly changing his mind about the moving pictures, went upstairs. But he did not ask for Mr. Laemmle. And without seeing the head of the company he got a secretarial position at thirty-five dollars a week.

Months later Mr. Laemmle, passing through the outer offices, discovered that the young man who had refused to work for him was on the payroll anyway. Then he offered him a position as his private secretary.

In a few months Mr. Thalberg was being consulted on matters of business policy. At the end of two years he accompanied Mr. Laemmle to the coast on a business trip and was left in charge of studio management while Mr. Laemmle went abroad. This worked out so successfully that he was made general manager of the studios.

There was one embarrassing feature about this for the young executive. He was under twenty-one and legally could not sign checks.

At Universal Mr. Thalberg was responsible for the making of such pictures as "Outside the Law," "Merry-Go-Round" and "The Hunchback of Notre Dame." Hollywood started to call him the "boy wizard" and the "boy Napoleon."

HIS success on the Universal lot brought Mr. Thalberg to the attention of Louis B. Mayer, who at the time was an independent producer. They met, liked each other and Thalberg decided to join the Mayer organization.

When in April, 1924, the consolidation of Metro-Goldwyn and Mayer took place, Mr. Thalberg became vice-president and a producing chief at the big Culver City plant. In a brief time he had reached one of the most responsible posts in the industry.

Mr. Thalberg's progress from this point was bedecked with story successes, and new talent discovered. "Ben-Hur" and "The Big Parade" marked the inauguration of Thalberg's preeminence as story producer. John Gilbert was one of his earliest acting discoveries. "The Scarlet Letter" and "He Who Gets Slapped" were early out-of-the-ordinary pictures.

Other players who developed, under Mr. Thalberg's leadership, included Greta Garbo, Lon Chaney, Ramon Novarro, Marie Dressler, Joan Crawford and Wallace Beery, and these were supplemented later by Robert Montgomery, Jean Harlow, Myrna Loy, Clark Gable, Jackie Cooper, Nelson Eddy, Robert Taylor and many others. Most of these people were unknown, obscure or misplaced when first engaged by Thalberg, under whose direction they attained fame.

DURING his development of new talent, Mr. Thalberg's attention was directed to a youthful actress playing in small parts in films made in New York. Her name was Norma Shearer. She was invited to join the MGM roster, and soon developed into one of the more talented players at the studios. Two years later Mr. Thalberg ventured his first off-the-lot engagement with Miss Shearer. In 1927 they were married.

The Thalbergs' domestic life has been held an example to hectic Hollywood. There are two children, Irving, Jr., who is now six, and Katherine, fourteen months old.

LAEMMLE RECALLS EARLY CONTACTS

by PIERRE AUTRE

in Paris

Carl Laemmle, visiting in Paris at the Hotel George V, was deeply affected by news of the death of Irving Thalberg. The veteran executive who gave Mr. Thalberg his start in motion pictures said that his death "is the greatest loss in the history of the industry. He was the industry's greatest man and nobody can replace him. His was an outstanding personality. It was magnetic," Mr. Laemmle emphasized, adding:

"I knew him when he was a boy of 17 and, although in later years he no longer worked with me, he kept in close contact, always reminding of what I had done for him and telling everyone of it. I was proud of him always."

The arrival of talking pictures placed Thalberg in the most challenging position of his career, obliging him to chart a reconstruction. His first dialogue film, "The Broadway Melody," broke records. From then on, despite the depression, his successes continued. Some of the outstanding pictures produced under his supervision include "Grand Hotel," "Smilin' Through," "The Barretts of Wimpole Street," "The Merry Widow," "What Every Woman Knows," "A Night at the Opera," "No More Ladies," "China Seas," "Mutiny on the Bounty" and the newly released "Romeo and Juliet." In addition to his supervision of pictures he was much concerned with executive decisions at the MGM studios. Meanwhile it was common for him to spend a day aiding in the cutting, editing, photographing or continuity treatment of several different pictures, in addition to keeping his ordinary office appointments.

Mr. Thalberg was the exact opposite of the film mogul of fiction and the stage. He was quiet, slight of build, ever-courteous, tireless in enthusiasm and energy but restrained in speech, and modest in the extreme. It was this trait which was responsible for the absence of his name among screen credits. He was, in fact, the only producer in Hollywood whose name was not given "top billing" on pictures individually turned out.

Studios Close for Thalberg Funeral

Irving Grant Thalberg was buried Wednesday morning in a crypt in Forest Lawn Memorial Park at Forest Park, in the hills of Hollywood. Funeral services were read at 10 o'clock, Pacific Time (2:00 P. M. Eastern Daylight Saving Time), at B'nai B'rith Temple, Los Angeles, by Rabbi Edgar Magnin. The services were private, with only Mr. Thalberg's family and intimate friends in attendance. Only the family attended the interment, conducted from the Malinow and Stevens funeral parlors on Venice Boulevard.

The honorary ushers at the Temple were Carey Wilson, writer; Sam Wood, director; Cedric Gibbons, art director; Robert Leonard, director; Douglas Fairbanks, actor; Sidney Franklin, director; Moss Hart, writer; Clark Gable, actor; W. S. Van Dyke, director; Fredric March, actor, and J. J. Cohn.

On receiving news of the death of their associate, Nicholas M. Schenck, president of MGM; J. Robert Rubin, general counsel, and Howard Dietz, director of advertising, left New York on a chartered plane for California. Flying with them were Edgar B. Hatrick, Douglas Shearer, Bert Nayfack and Joseph Mankiewicz, friends of Mr. Thalberg's.

On their arrival at Culver City, they found production at the Metro studios at a standstill. Edmund Goulding had halted work on "Maytime" and Sam Wood on "A Day at the Races," with the Marx Brothers. The studios resumed later, but closed again on Wednesday for the day. The company's home office in New York closed at one o'clock Wednesday, while MGM exchanges throughout the country ceased work for one hour with the beginning of the funeral services.

The official Soviet motion picture industry cabled from Moscow to its representative, Boris Schumiatsky, in New York, a joint expression of sympathy from the directors and motion picture artists in Russia.

The Association of Motion Picture Producers, Hollywood branch of the Hays organization, announced that "the entire industry" stopped for five minutes during the funeral services.

Thalberg Romance Was Filmic Idyl

It was through Irving Thalberg's habit of jotting down ideas in a pocket notebook that his romance with Norma Shearer began. When a young executive at Universal, he happened to catch a Los Angeles preview of a picture entitled "Channing of the Northwest." Something about the personality of the leading lady prompted him to watch for her name on the title card and he put down Norma Shearer in his book as a likely prospect for bigger things.

Rejects First Offer

Soon afterward the actress, then alternating film roles with posing for advertising photographers, received an offer, through her New York agent, to come to Hollywood. The offer was far below her expectations of a Hollywood salary and she declined, taking trouble, however, to pen a personal note of thanks for the interest in her work.

Mr. Thalberg switched over to a partnership with Hal Roach. Another offer was forwarded to Miss Shearer. Again she declined. When Thalberg joined forces with Louis B. Mayer a third offer—more tempting—reached the surprised actress. It contained a four-week guarantee with options for five years, beginning with a salary of

The personnel of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation expresses its deepest sympathy to the family and associates of Irving Thalberg, in whose passing this industry loses one of its most brilliant and best-loved leaders. His great abilities will forever be an inspiration, and the fine qualities of the man himself will forever be remembered.

IGNORANCE OR BALLYHOO BLAMED FOR SHAW'S ATTACK ON HAYS BODY

Briton Accuses MPPDA and Legion When Member of Italian Catholic Unit Prescribes Script Changes

George Bernard Shaw, British dramatist, wrote a long and bewildering letter referring to an alleged attempt to censor the motion picture script of his play "St Joan" which was published by The New York Times on September 14.

Mr. Shaw's letter, of which there was three solid columns, as printed in The Times, upon examination became to the informed an amazing document comprising innumerable erroneous facts and fallacious conclusions. It was remarked that this handsomely paid author might have earned a neat sum had he written for a fiction magazine a completely fanciful article of the same length instead of this letter of protest which is almost completely fanciful. It was remarked also that canny Mr. Shaw might have been only foxily foolish in writing the letter because of its ballyhoo possibilities for the scheduled production of his play.

Riled by Script Changes

It seems that "St. Joan" has been scheduled for production by London Films of which Alexander Korda is the head. It seems also that acting upon bad advice Mr. Korda several months ago dispatched an agent to Rome for the purpose of getting the script approved by "the Vatican authorities." Apparently the agent, unable to get any competent Vatican authority to act in the matter, did fall into the hands of a representative of an Italian Catholic organization, known as "Azione Catholica." This representative seems to have prescribed a long and fantastic list of excisions, alterations and amendments in the script.

Takes Pen in Hand

News of this prescription riled Mr. Shaw considerably. He took his pen in hand and hence the letter to The Times.

Mr. Shaw had heard of "The Hays Organization" in Hollywood and also of The Legion of Decency but what he had heard of them, or at least what he remembered, was full of error and misunderstanding. He remembered apparently that the Hays Organization had some arrangements for examining scripts and pictures. Also he seemed to remember that the Legion of Decency in the United States was concerned with the moral influence of motion pictures and that this latter organization was conducted under Catholic auspices.

Attacks Hays Organization

Out of all of this Mr. Shaw proceeded in a bewildering manner to assault the Hays Organization for mutilating his script; to assume that the Legion of Decency in the United States was identical with his Italian Catholic Action and to assume also that the Legion of Decency is somehow connected with the Hays Organization.

Ignorance or misunderstanding as to the following facts gave rise to the Shaw letter:

That the script of "St. Joan" has not been passed upon by the Hays Organization or even submitted to it.

That the Legion of Decency has no connection with the Hays Organization.

That the "Azione Catholica," named by Mr. Shaw, is obviously an Italian agency and is not the agency of Catholic Action on motion pictures in the United States.

Hays Issues Statement

The following statement was issued Monday by Will H. Hays:

"George Bernard Shaw in a letter to The New York Times published this morning relative to a proposed motion picture version of his play, 'St. Joan,' has committed several errors of fact.

"No motion picture treatment of the play has been received by the Association and consequently no opinion as to such treatment has been rendered.

"With respect to Mr. Shaw's statement that 'the censorship of the Hays Organization includes that of a body called the Catholic Action':

"In the first place, the functions of the Association's Production Code Administration are not censorship. They provide a self-regulation which is wholly cooperative on the part of those participating in its activities.

Entirely Independent

"Furthermore, our Production Code Administration functions entirely independently of any other organization. It is, of course, responsible to the public for the character of the motion pictures it approves. In this sense, the views of any responsible public agency are weighed by the Production Code Administration for their proper value. But no outside agency of any character controls or determines the judgments or opinions of the Production Code Administration.

"We have no knowledge whatsoever concerning the advices given to Mr. Shaw relative to the changes and deletions in his play which he says were suggested.

"There is no organization in the United States known as the 'Catholic Action.' The Catholic organization in the United States concerned with moral significance of motion pictures is known as The Legion of Decency, which organization for its membership reviews and classifies motion pictures following release and does not participate in any manner in the activities of the Production Code Administration."

On the day following the publication of the Shaw letter The Times devoted more than a column and a half to statements of various interested persons, all of them declaring that Mr. Shaw is badly muddled or, perhaps, just a good press agent.

Archbishop Defines Legion

Refuting the charges made by Mr. Shaw, Archbishop John T. McNicholas, in Cincinnati, speaking as chairman of the Episcopal Committee on Motion Pictures and for Roman Catholic Bishops in the United States, redefined the status of the Legion of Decency in a formal statement to the press, which follows:

"The Legion of Decency has no connection directly or indirectly with the Hays organization. It is not to be identified with it. The words 'Catholic Action' are used so loosely by Mr. Shaw as to embrace apparently the Hays organization and The Legion of Decency. Nothing could be further from the truth. There is no Catholic group in the Hays organization nor in the motion picture industry.

Hays, Answering Briton's Letter to New York 'Times', Says "St. Joan" Script Never Was Received by MPPDA

"The Legion of Decency is an agency of Bishops in the United States. It deals only with the morality of the cinema. Its chief concern is to point out what is contrary to moral principles and moral living. Groups carrying on other activities even under the name, Legion of Decency, have no commission from the general body of Bishops.

"In the confusion arising from the misuse of the words 'Catholic Action' in the letter of Mr. Shaw the impression is given that The Legion of Decency might concern itself with scripts and requisitions. The Legion of Decency does not undertake in any way to criticize specific scripts nor in any manner whatsoever indicate how a motion picture should be produced. That is not its business. But after a picture is produced it can and does say, if necessary, what wrong moral ideas are contained and that the picture is to be considered, in part or in whole, dangerous to Christian morality.

"The Legion of Decency has noted with great gratification that the motion picture industry has set up a system of self-regulation that is helping it to produce pictures that are becoming more and more acceptable to the general public. It must be unmistakably clear, however, that the Legion of Decency has no part in this self-regulating body nor has it any responsibility for it. Members of the American hierarchy constitute a conservative body of prelates whose judgment is always sane. They are never meddlers. They know their domain of doctrine and morality and Catholic action. Beyond that they never wish to go."

"Like Will Hays and some of the spokesmen for the Catholic Church, we are confused by George Bernard Shaw's letter to the New York Times on the alleged censorship of the scenario of 'St. Joan,'" said a statement issued to the press on Wednesday by the National Council of Freedom from Censorship, unit of the American Civil Liberties Union.

"Chuckles Over Excitement"

Meanwhile the New York Times extended the controversy by telephoning from London to Mr. Shaw on vacation in a remote corner of Wales, where, the Times correspondent reported to New York by wireless, "the octogenarian dramatist chuckled over the wire as he learned of the excitement he had created."

"Told of denials of a Catholic attempt to censor 'Saint Joan' as a moving picture," Mr. Shaw said, according to the Times wireless, 'Yes, they would deny it—let them fume for another week.'"

The Times dispatch added that "Mr. Shaw at the moment was unable to say exactly who raised objections."

Bahn Leaving Syracuse Herald

Chester B. Bahn, for years motion picture critic and editor of the Syracuse Herald, has resigned, but will not divulge his future plans for another week. Hayden Hickok succeeds him.

THE KEYSTONE OF YOUR FUTURE

MUSICIANS START 'WAR' TO RETURN MUSIC TO THEATRES

21 New York Houses Are First Targets of Pickets Demanding Use of Pit Orchestras and Stage Bands to Provide Jobs

Theatrical unions started this week to "gang up" on the motion picture business to create new jobs for their unemployed members, at a cost to exhibitors of millions of dollars annually in wages and added expenses to pay for the house policy changes which, they demand, be effected at once for the purpose.

The American Federation of Musicians, backed by the American Federation of Labor and sympathetic theatrical crafts, sent 6,000 men, first of a proposed national army of pickets, into the streets to enlist the public's support in a campaign to force music on exhibitors, to "return musicians and actors to movie-morgue theatres," and to aim their attack at the theatres' vital spot, the box office.

Then, but with considerably more finesse, Actors' Equity Association, never able to gain control over motion picture actors, made the unusual demand that the film industry turn a large part of its theatre holdings from motion picture policies to legitimate shows in order to create employment on the wholesale for stage players. (Equity's demands are reported on page 31.)

The musicians lost no time in getting their campaign off to a fiery start. Vitriolic messages about silent "movie morgues" and "Hollywood greed" were started on their way to the public through hundreds of thousands of posters and "buttons," carried and distributed by the 6,000 shock troops to pickets in front of theatres, to the public and to local merchants for display in their store windows.

21 New York Theatres Targets

A nationwide boycott is urged against theatres refusing to reinstate music through pit orchestras and stage bands. Twenty New York theatres were arbitrarily selected for concentrated picketing, pickets variously informing the public that, "Hollywood greed drove musicians and actors out of theatres," and urging them, "Don't patronize greed." Another style of the propaganda broadcast is: "Continuous movies impoverish the public as well as the musician and actor," and, therefore, the public should "Demand the best living entertainment."

"Live entertainment," the public is now being told, "is a hit at Radio City Music Hall, Paramount, Loew's State and the Roxy theatres," so: "Why not at your neighborhood theatre?"

Public Asked to Sign Pledge

The public is asked by the musicians to sign this pledge: "I will not patronize your theatre until living music and entertainment returns." The pledges are passed on to the local theatre owner as he is subjected to concentrated attack.

"Where will the art of music be after musicians are ploughed under?" ask the musicians in one poster message, while in still another they urge the public to "Stay out of movie morgues, create palaces of entertainment."

The pickets first appeared in full dress suits at the Capitol, Strand, Rivoli and Palace theatres on Broadway, where the union will conduct the "headline" aspects of the campaign. Then, turning to more vulnerable spots in those sections of Bronx and Brooklyn which are thickly populated by union men and their sympathizers, the musicians next selected for picketing Loew's Paradise and Loew's Boulevard, RKO's Franklin and Fordham, the Windsor, National, Chester, Royal and Bronx Opera House, all in the Bronx, and Loew's Pitkin and Kings, RKO's Fenmore and Tilyou and the Patio and Premier theatres, in Brooklyn.

On Tuesday, picketing of the new Criterion theatre in Times Square began.

The American Federation of Musicians, 16,000 strong, and claiming millions of sympathizers, is said to be determined to spend at least $250,000 to bring "non-canned" music back to America's film theatres with pit orchestras and stage bands.

"Forceful" picketing, house-to-house canvassing, strongly-worded propaganda addressed to the public, and advertising and publicity by the carloads will be used as the principal mediums for trying to force exhibitors to re-employ musicians.

The musicians claim not only the backing of the American Federation of Labor and its millions of members, families and sympathizers, but also the support of the American Federation of Actors, the Central Trades and Labor Council, and the Women's Trade Union League—all militant unions.

The picketing campaign is first to be directed against film and other theatres that have abandoned their orchestras, vaudeville acts and other stage presentations, and its beginning was announced last Thursday night at a mass meeting sponsored by the New York Local 802, American Federation of Musicians, at the Manhattan Opera House.

others listening to amplifiers outside, heard the announcement and pledged a boycott.

"We will regard this drive as the opening gun and a life-and-death matter for the musicians, actors and allied theatrical crafts," declared Jacob Rosenberg, secretary of Local 802.

The speakers included William Feinberg, acting president of the local; Joseph P. Ryan, president of the Central Trades and Labor Council; Ralph Whitehead, secretary of the American Federation of Actors, and Paul Dullzell, executive secretary of Actors Equity.

La Guardia Sends Message

Mayor La Guardia, of New York, in apologizing by letter for his inability to attend the meeting, said:

"A good musician cannot be produced overnight and if we are to leave to the next generation a class of musicians who can render good music, it is absolutely necessary that economic security of the present generation of musicians be provided."

Generally, the speakers assailed the motion picture for bringing about the reputed widespread unemployment among musicians. Mr. Whitehead denied that vaudeville was dead, and pointed to the success of music hall and night club enterprises through the country as evidence.

Too, Mr. Whitehead declared that the public was tired of double features and "fictitious forms of amusement," and blasted theatre managers for "bringing gambling into the theatre to corrupt our young people." He also assailed the theatre operators for bringing in amateur talent while so many professionals walked the streets, and accused the theatre men of being "so hungry for the dollar that they can't see their own destruction."

Points to Film Costs

Fred Birnbach, secretary of the American Federation of Musicians, maintained that the cost of some pictures equalled 50 per cent of the gross receipts which made it impossible for a theatre manager to employ an orchestra even if he wanted to. Another factor which motivated against musicians' employment, he said, was the admission tax, which applies to admissions of over 40 cents.

Paul Dullzell, of Actors' Equity, warned that without vaudeville the talent source of motion pictures was drying up, and that unless something is done to help vaudeville the films would be in the same position as vaudeville now finds itself.

Other speakers included Fred Waring, orchestra leader; W. C. Handy, composer; William Collins, AFL organizer; Rose Schneiderman, president of the Women's Trade Union League; Vincent Jacobi, business agent for Local No. 1, stage hands, and Jack Rosenberg, secretary of Local 802.

Actors Join Move

The campaign took a new turn on Tuesday when the actors joined the musicians to make it a joint drive. The Actors' Federation and other artists' organizations, it is claimed, are naturally interested in backing and aiding the musicians' movement, because it is intended for the benefit of all performers.

The proceedings at the mass meeting were broadcast over radio station WEVD and the sponsors of the movement have arranged for four 15-minute broadcasts subsequently in delivering the appeal to the public.

On October 13th, the musicians in New York will ask the public and the clergy to attend a "monster" mass meeting, at a place to be determined, in order to crystallize public sympathy. Mayor La Guardia has consented to be the principal speaker, it was said Tuesday at the local's headquarters.

FROM READERS

FINDS MATRON HELPS PROTECT PROPERTY

To the Editor of the Herald:

One of the finest assets to the theatre is the matron, under the new law regulating admittance of minors to theatres. It has helped to find out many things.

It has always been my belief that seat cutting was done by boys around the age of twenty. Now I find that in the past four weeks of our matron's time there has been a decrease of about 80 per cent in the cutting of seats, which means that most of the destruction has been done by children under sixteen. The constant attendance of the matron also keeps the children in check more than the ushers.

The theatre is much more quiet, and much comment has been given to me by adults, who can enjoy the picture more. I have also noticed a greater increase in adult business Saturday and Sunday matinees, due to this reason.—Joe Wallace, Wyckoff Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.

On Friday morning, at the local's offices, near Rockefeller Center, New York's outstanding orchestra leaders are scheduled to meet with the union's officials in order to determine what their role will be in the drive. "We expect it to be an active part," Local 802 officers declared, mentioning Fred Waring and Dick Himber as being "sure to be present."

50,000 Buttons Distributed

Up to Sunday night, concluding the third day of the "war," the musicians gave away to the public some 50,000 of the campaign buttons, broadcasting the message: "Make jobs by returning musicians and actors to theatres." Some 20,000 copies of a new union paper, "Theatre Pit," created for the purpose, were also handed out, and 10,000 window cards were placed in neighborhood stores in New York, Bronx and Brooklyn. Some 20,000 additional window cards were ordered.

Picketing shortly will be extended from the 20 theatres now under fire, to every motion picture house in the Metropolitan area which at one time or another in the past played vaudeville, stage shows or pit orchestrations.

The local said this week that "We are very well satisfied with the results to date in hitting the theatres where they feel it most—at the box office," through boycotting and picketing.

While Broadway heard reports that the large theatre interests in New York, principally the major circuits, were secretly talking about injunctions to restrain the pickets from parading in front of their theatres, exhibitors and managers of individual situations appeared on the surface to be calm over the threatening attack. In any event, the large circuits were preparing to meet immediately to determine their strategy in retaliation.

That the "forceful" picketing was undertaken arbitrarily, and without any more than one day's notice served on the theatre owners, proved especially irksome to some of the large interests. A spokesman said that they definitely do not intend to employ pit orchestras unless the present all-film policies are changed and vaudeville is reinstated, a plan which is regarded as remote at this time.

Elsewhere, from a circuit spokesman assigned to study the situation for the combined major circuits, came the observation that the large interests are privately deprecating the musicians' efforts as a lost cause.

"People do not want vaudeville," he said, "and neither the musicians, nor anyone else are going to shove it down their throats. That prevents any return of the so called 'stage band.' Obviously 'pit orchestras' are impossible because of the musical scorings and dialogue accompanying the pictures being screened.

"We're thinking about it," was the reply of officials of the Chicago musicians union regarding their joining in the American Federation's campaign to force music on theatres. If the New Yorkers succeed it is indicated that the Chicago union will start a similar plan.

However, one executive of a large Chicago circuit said that demands for the using of more bands in theatres would meet with serious consideration at this time, as a good business getter.

Smaller exhibitors in Chicago who would like to use "live" music in their theatres point out that the union salary scale for theatres is too high.

James Petrillo, head of the Chicago local union, is understood to favor action for getting more musicians in the theatres this fall but is awaiting reports of the New York locals' attempt to force music on the theatres.

Film Service Plan May Be Extended

A centralized film exchange being established in Philadelphia by Horlacher's Delivery Service may be duplicated nationally by other film carrier concerns, according to James P. Clark, president of the company. The establishment of the system throughout the country will be discussed at the next meeting of National Film Carriers in Chicago. The Horlacher company will set up the community exchange service in Washington and possibly other eastern centers in which it operates, according to present plans.

The Philadelphia unit will be known as Clark Film Distributors, Inc., and has leased over 10,000 square feet of floor space in the Warner Building. It will handle complete physical distribution for any distributor or producer in the territory. Mr. Clark asserted that the project will not cause unemployment since arrangements will be made to take over film inspectors and shippers from exchanges which close down after subscribing to the service.

This will be possible, he said, because the bureau will operate 24 hours a day, seven days a week. Numerous economies are claimed possible for branch operation through the use of the community film exchange.

"LOGGING ALONG"

EQUITY ASKS FILMS TO PUT STAGE SHOWS IN THEATRES TO AID ACTORS

Says Opening Picture Houses to Legitimate Shows Would Provide Actors' School and Inspire Practical Dramatists

"The motion picture industry controls thousands of theatres which may house legitimate drama, either exclusively or one or more days a week. Opening these houses to legitimate drama will open up a nationwide school for actors and a new incentive to would-be dramatists." This time it is Actors' Equity Association speaking again.

Equity, a union, exists on dues paid by its working members. The fact is generally known that the low estate of the stage also has caused Equity huge losses, through depleted ranks and subsequent reductions in income from dues. Equity does not control motion picture players, whether or not recruited from the stage, except indirectly through the "union" of the Screen Actors' Guild in Hollywood.

Addressing its plea to "the wise movie men" to enlarge the field for talent, Equity is asking the producers to supplant motion pictures at some of their theatres, exclusively or otherwise, with stage shows of the type of the legitimate theatre, in order to put more actors to work. It charges films with killing off the talent sources of the road, stock, tents, repertoire, chautauquas and whatnot

Equity asks pointedly whether Hollywood gives the training a dramatist gets when his play is produced in the legitimate theatre, overlooking the fact that dramatists and stage players themselves flock to Hollywood for contracts, and scarcely a play or a book is written today without film royalty rights in mind. Then there is Hollywood's $2,000,000 annual investment in Broadway stage plays, even if Hollywood has in mind the developing of a source of story and talent material through each new play it finances, or sponsors.

Wants "Talent School"

While Equity demands that motion pictures open a "talent school" by way of legitimate shows at film houses, most of the large studios in Hollywood for some time have been conducting schools on their own lots. At Radio Pictures, in Hollywood, Leila Rogers is in charge of a stock school. Paramount's stock school is directed by Mel Shauer, as supervisor, and Phyllis Laughton, as coach. Universal has Rufus Le Maire acting as supervisor, and Sylvan Simon as coach. Florence Enright is in charge at Twentieth Century-Fox, while at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Oliver Hinsdell directs the stock school for Culver City. Melvina Fox Dunnis is the coach at Warner Brothers-First National, Harold Winston at Columbia.

Complimenting the motion picture for its achievements, before crying that signs of danger are ahead, the Actors' Equity Association, in its organization magazine, this week observes that: "As a closely allied art, we have recently turned our attention to conditions in motion pictures, and Equity yields to no one in its admiration of the technical and artistic achievement which is daily exhibited. There is every evidence that directors, writers and actors, and all departments ranging behind them, are extraordinarily alert, accomplished and vital. And from the trade papers we learn that mechanical progress is not at a standstill and that new and valuable advantages to the art are in the way of accomplishment."

SCREEN SCENARISTS PRAISED BY ODETS

Actors' Equity has advanced the thought that the motion picture business should open its theatres entirely or in part to legitimate shows in order to train and develop acting and playwrighting talent of which the organization feels there soon will be a painful lack because of the loss to the theatre of the formerly numerous stock companies and roadshows.

Clifford Odets, perhaps Broadway's best known playwright of the hour, in Hollywood on his first assignment, "The General Died at Dawn" for Paramount, declares on the other hand that aspiring playwrights should frequent the corner film theatre frequently. "The average movie scenarist knows more about construction than all the playwrights in the country," he maintains.

Regardless, warns Equity, "There are accompanying this progress signs of danger—danger signals which should be carefully examined." These signals Equity explains as follows:

"A fundamental in every good picture is sound, experienced acting and competent playwrighting. One danger signal says, what is being done to develop competent actors for the future?

"Another danger signal says, is all possible being done to develop a continuing body of intelligent, experienced playwrights?

"A second necessity for the consistent financial success in motion picture production is the giving to the patrons of motion pictures sufficient variety so that their interest is not dulled.

"From these premises arises a third danger signal, is everything being done to give patrons of motion pictures that needed variety?

Cites Narrowing of Field

"An examination of pictures produced today will show that a very large proportion of the acting bone and sinew has been drawn from the legitimate theatre. For 15 years or more, and especially since the advent of talking pictures, the men and women who gained their experience in the legitimate theatre have been more and more in demand.

"This would clearly indicate that those who gained experience in the legitimate theatre have some especial quality to give to pictures. It will hardly be denied that this is so.

"But of late years this legitimate field, where these actors may gain needed experience, has been gradually narrowed. Nearly all the great trying-out grounds have disappeared—the road, stock, tents, reps and chatauqua.

"This poses the question where is the motion picture actor of tomorrow coming from?

"It is also true that a large proportion of the best minds among the dramatists gain their experience in writing legitimate plays. Scores of these dramatists are in Hollywood. But does Hollywood give the training a dramatist gets when his play is produced in the legitimate?

Association Addresses Plea to "Wise Movie Men" to Enlarge Field for Talent, Urges Elimination of "Prejudice"

Without the legitimate theatre to develop their art, where is the experienced dramatist of tomorrow coming from?

"The production of pictures with new and interesting ideas, with new and interesting slants, is daily becoming more difficult.

"What may be done to secure that variety which holds interest in motion pictures?

"Equity suggests that by appropriate cooperation between the motion picture industry and the legitimate theatre, these impending dangers may be lessened and perhaps removed.

"That cooperation should aim to secure the reopening of the legitimate theatre throughout the United States, instead of leaving it as it is, confined to the principal cities. Such a reopening may be brought about with comparative ease if there is genuine cooperation.

Protests Prejudice

"The motion picture industry controls thousands of theatres which may house legitimate drama, either exclusively or one or more days a week.

"Opening these houses to legitimate drama will open up a nation-wide school for actors and a new incentive for would-be dramatists.

"There will be much to be ironed out—brains may be necessary to strike a needed balance—some give and take will be required to secure harmony—but both arts have a firm hold in the hearts of our citizens, and that hold should not be lost.

"With better times at hand, with reduced railroad rates, with bus competition, with millions for the first time being brought into contact with the legitimate theatre through the government expenditures, it would seem obvious, if the dangers above noted are really dangers, that now is the time that all those interested should sit down together and substitute imagination and foresight for prejudice and procrastination, and at such a get-together, develop plans for the common good."

Sunday Blue Laws Topic of Dispute

The so-called blue laws prohibiting showing of motion pictures on Sunday are the subject of controversy in three localities, in one of which the voters will decide in November on continuance of the ordinances and in a fourth area the laws have been repealed.

In Washington County, Pa., near Pittsburgh, five districts which now enforce a ban on the Sunday shows, have cleared the way for a referendum on the subject. They are Burgettstown, Cecil Township, Centerville, McDonald and Finleyville.

A test case on the subject is in progress in Danville, Va., with Lem Long, a projectionist, appealing a $5 fine which was imposed on him for operating a motion picture machine at a paid performance on Sunday.

Sunday shows began September 6th in Rockwood, Tenn., the city commission having voted to allow them.

180 Minutes With Soap, Soup and Gasoline

A Volunteer Investigates the Radio Activities of Divers Screen Personalities

by WILLIAM R. WEAVER

At 9:59 p. m. eastern daylight saving time September 14th Cecil B. DeMille dedicated ten seconds of the Lux Radio Theatre's allotted sixty minutes on the air to silent tribute to Irving G. Thalberg, taken by death that day in Hollywood.

Minutes previously, such is radio, Mr. DeMille and Mervyn Leroy had exchanged compliments in a dialogue inclusive of this whimsy:

Mr. Leroy: Knock-knock.

Mr. DeMille: Who's there?

Mr. Leroy: Lux.

Mr. DeMille: Lux who?

Mr. Leroy: Lux hope the people haven't tuned out.

At least one hadn't. This one was your reporter, self-assigned to find out for himself whether radio programs featuring motion picture personalities are worth staying home from the cinema to listen to. He had dozed through a microphone version of Sir James Barrie's "Quality Street," in which Ruth Chatterton and Brian Aherne doggedly delivered dialogue written for utterance in costume and setting, coming awake to hear how Mr. Leroy, program guest of the evening, had progressed from child actor to producer of "Anthony Adverse" and to hear Mr. DeMille's brief, well spoken announcement of the silent tribute to the deceased. He regrets to report the opinion that many a dial had been spun long before the master of ceremonies abandoned the evening's business of selling soap to speak sincerely as one great producer of another.

Sales Methods Diversified

Mr. DeMille's methods of selling soap, it turns out, are many and diversified. On this program, for instance, Miss Chatterton returned to the microphone, after doing what she could to give life to Barrie's at best difficult heroine, to say that she always carries Lux Toilet Soap and a parachute when flying and, therefore, knows no fear. At another point, Mr. DeMille introduced the screen test director of the MGM studios, whose remarks implied that success in the films and use of the sponsor's toilet article are practically inseparable. These, it seems, are routine practices, but introduction of the product name in the interview with the guest of the evening, Mr. Leroy, represents a development. Dr. A. H. Giannini, program guest a week previously, was spared this obligation.

Mr. DeMille's technique in this no doubt essential detail of his avocation appears to an inexperienced listener decidedly superior to most. Perhaps that is due in part to a past which includes production of a protracted series of silent pictures in which no leading lady could work out her emotional destiny without bathing, at least once, in a tub that out-Craned Crane (never billed as sponsor) and powdering her nose at a dressing table strewn with gadgets, atomizers and what not Woolworth hasn't matched to this day. In any case, your investigator notes that players appearing on the Shell Chateau program are not interviewed as to the kind of gasoline they use in their automobiles and, as far as the program reveals, guest stars of Hollywood Hotel are permitted to take their Campbell's soup or let it alone.

Opportunity Is Ignored

Smith Ballew, who officiates for Shell Chateau, might make a note of that. Last week, for instance, he missed a natural. Cary Grant, in the course of a gory little ten minute tidbit entitled "Emergency Operation," sped up to a filling station and murdered the attendant to get money to pay for his dying lady friend's operation. He could just as well have told the victim, before he shot him, "Fill 'er up with Super Shell," but he didn't. Neither was the product named by Patsy Kelly, featured in separate bits on the same program, although she did put pep into the script by admitting that she didn't understand some of the gags either.

Mr. Ballew's program, to an untrained ear, makes up in sound and fury what it lacks in finesse. Compared to Mr. DeMille's, it is as a page advertisement in the Hearst newspapers is to a campaign in Harper's Bazaar (to keep the journals in one family). He announced at the opening of this one that the music by Victor Young's orchestra would be from "The Big Broadcast of 1937" and out came a tune from "Rhythm on the Range," perhaps because Martha Ray was there to sing it as in the picture. He made good later, though, and it seems to be a radio rule that close is close enough.

Investigator Is Puzzled

Just why anyone should stay home from the movies to listen to Mr. Ballew's program is not clear, however, to one who, faithful to a self-imposed duty, did so. Mr. Grant's enactment of a gangster in hideout was not precisely of what is called the essence. And Miss Kelly's tussle with the wisecracks in the script was no better than a draw. Between them the pair utilized twenty-seven of the available sixty minutes, appearing separately, and a good start on a double feature bill can be made in that much time.

Reasons why a normal individual deprived of seeing the play during its long and notable New York run might have made it a point to be within earshot of a radio when Maxwell Anderson's "Winterset" was broadcast on the Hollywood Hotel program, with members of the original cast pronouncing the lines, are somewhat more evident. The play has been the subject of much discussion, in part as demonstrating that blank verse is a commercially marketable medium of dramatic expression in this generation, in part as recipient of a majority vote taken among New York drama critics to determine the best play of last year. A wish to give ear to this exclusively oral presentation of the work in condensed form, the while awaiting its production upon the screen, was conceivably rational. As matters turned out, it was also rash.

Play Given 18 Minutes

The Hollywood Hotel presentation of "Winterset," a play overlong for stage purposes in its original form and dependent for effectiveness upon scenic investiture and the steady, cumulative cadence of its dialogue, was shoved through the loudspeaker in eighteen minutes. Interspersed, necessarily, with swiftly spoken synopses of abridged episodes and speeches, it came to listeners with all the subtle charm of a police alarm calling all cars.

Prior to the massacre of Mr. Anderson's poetry, Dick Powell had sung a good deal and Louella Parsons had confided her belief that the players, most of them newcomers to Hollywood, would find the place congenial and their screen futures assured. After the play, as frequently before, there were nice things said about Campbell's soup, and then "Valiant Is the Word for Carrie," with Gladys George in the principal role, was announced as the next week's attraction.

This, then, is the new competition of the screen, and these were three hours, 180 minutes, time enough in which to have seen a motion picture program free of soap, soup or gasoline salestalk, uninterrupted by station identifications, rounded, complete, a thing independent in and as and of itself.

Competition is a strong word.

Decency Legion Classifies Nine

Of nine new pictures reviewed and classified by the National Legion of Decency in its list for the current week, seven were classed as unobjectionable for general patronage, one as unobjectionable for adults and one as objectionable in part. The new films and their classification follow:

Class A-1, Unobjectionable for General Patronage: "The Devil Is a Sissy," "Draegerman Courage," "Ich Sehne Mich Nach Dir" (German), "King of the Royal Mounted," "Sea Spoilers," "They Met in a Taxi," "Two in a Crowd." Class A-2, Unobjectionable for Adults: "Christopher Bean" (French). Class B, Objectionable in Part: "Walpurgis Night" (Swedish).

When you see a HERALD review quoted:

You know it was not written as a vehicle of verbal antics by a reviewer seeking the glorification of advertising display the next week—or merely trying to be smart.

And the Herald, with its articles and editorials widely and continuously quoted in the world press, enjoys a status and acceptance that can not be enhanced by quotation of reviews inside an industry which already knows the Herald above all others.

Herald reviews are inventories of product for the showmen who will have that product to sell on their screens. Herald reviews have no other purpose.

Thalberg Romance Recalled as Idyl Of Screen Capital

$150 a week, double her average income. She accepted with alacrity.

Boy Meets Girl

It was when she arrived at the studio that the actress and Thalberg met for the first time. Entering the main office, Norma asked a passing young man to announce her to Mr. Thalberg.

"I am Mr. Thalberg . . ." he replied.

Taken aback, because of his youth and boyishness, Norma found herself speechless, utterly forgetting the nice little greeting she had all rehearsed.

In the months that followed, Norma went through the studio grind all young players experience. The company became the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation. Production expanded and the studio hummed with activity. And in this great hustle-and-bustle Norma felt she was being sidetracked into obscure roles. Indignant, she went in to see Mr. Thalberg.

"I want you to know," she said, "that I had two other offers before I came here!"

"Yes," he replied, "I know," and from his desk he extracted the two letters she had written, expressing thanks for the offers.

Probably in the realization of that moment was born the first romantic thought Norma entertained for Thalberg. But whatever was in their hearts or minds on this subject never cropped to the surface in any tangible sign.

Norma saw Thalberg at social functions with other girls. He saw her swained by other young men. Then came the night that Norma wearily climbed the stairs to her dressing room, flipped on the light and started to remove her makeup. The telephone rang. It was Vivian Newcomb, Thalberg's secretary, calling to ask Miss Shearer if she would accompany Mr. Thalberg to a premiere that night.

Instead of replying directly, Norma merely whispered into the telephone: "Why don't you ask me yourself, Mr. Thalberg?"

Thalberg, caught listening-in, laughed in confusion. Then: "Well, will you?"

"Yes," she replied.

Mr. Thalberg Proposes

It was much later, in the Hotel Ambassador's Cocoanut Grove, that Mr. Thalberg asked Miss Shearer, simply, "When shall we be married?" But it was the secretary, again, who summoned the actress one day to the executive's office, asked her to await her turn, and then admitted her as though to a business conference, whereupon Mr. Thalberg pointed to a jeweler's tray and invited her to select her engagement ring. Followed their simple wedding, attended only by family and close friends, and, six months later, a European honeymoon.

The Thalbergs rarely talked business. Between pictures, Mrs. Thalberg was altogether the wife and mother. At the studio she was always the actress, her husband the executive. Never did she enter his office unannounced. That was the prerogative of just one person—Irving Thalberg, Jr.

Cuban Government To Censor Newsreels

The Department of the Interior of the Cuban Government has ordered Havana distributors of American films to submit all newsreels for special censorship. The order was issued because of fear that shots showing the civil war in Spain might cause disorders among members of the Spanish colony in Cuba who are sympathetic to opposing factions abroad.

Philco Claims a "Fight for Life" In RCA Action

As hearings commenced on Tuesday in the Court of Chancery, Wilmington, Del., on an injunction action brought by the Philadelphia Storage Battery Company, parent of Philco Radio and Television Company, to restrain RCA from terminating a licensing agreement under which the latter concern operates, Philco spokesmen described the company as making "a fight for life." Basic patents covering radio and television apparatus, of which RCA is said to hold upwards of 4,000, and the basis of royalties for their use, are involved.

The present hearing follows the bringing of suit by PSBC against RCA in May, 1935, to prevent termination of an agreement under which PSBC and Philco, its subsidiary, distribute products through various subsidiaries, including Transitone Automobile Radio Corporation. In a cross suit RCA maintained that PSBC had violated its agreement when, in July, 1934, Philco, until then a 100 per cent subsidiary, was reorganized as an independent corporation.

There is also a claim on the part of PSBC that the company has been overcharged for royalties.

On the same day RCA filed answer in the supreme court to Philco charges made August 5th that representatives of RCA had used unfair business practices in obtaining trade secrets of Philco.

New Consolidated Finance Plan Up for Vote Oct. 9th

A recapitalization plan for Consolidated Film Industries will be voted upon at a special meeting of the company's stockholders on October 9th. The plan provides for elimination of accumulated dividends on the present preferred stock by a part cash payment, and reduces the fixed annual cumulative dividend on the preferred stock now outstanding from $2 to $1.

If the proposal is approved, holders of the present 400,000 shares of preferred stock will receive in exchange for their shares, together with unpaid accumulations in excess of $1 cash dividend to be declared with the stockholders' approval of the plan, one and one-quarter shares of the new preference stock and one-quarter share of new common stock. Holders of the present common stock will receive two-thirds of a share of new common for each share of old.

The new preference stock carries a fixed cumulative dividend of $1 per share per annum, and as a class takes one-half of all dividends declared by the corporation in excess of such $1, the common as a class taking the other half. Unpaid dividends on the preference stock will amount to $5 per share on Oct. 1.

Under the plan the authorized capitalization of Consolidated Film will become 500,000 shares of preference stock, all of which will be outstanding, and 600,000 shares of common stock, of which 449,982 shares will be outstanding.

INCREASES START IN NEIGHBORHOODS

move was made by Warner Brothers on Sunday, September 6th, when an increase in Sunday matinee admissions went into effect for all key neighborhood houses. The circuit recently acquired the first-run Fox theatre as well as four first-run neighborhood theatres formerly under the management of Paramount Publix. They are the Nixon, Tower, Frankford and Roosevelt.. The transaction, officials said, will eliminate direct competition between the Tower and 69th Street theatres; between the Nixon and the State; and among the Frankford, Roosevelt and the Circle. It previously had been reported that when the transfer was completed admission prices in all the Warner key houses would be increased to a uniform .52 cents and 37 cents, and this announcement is expected soon.

The change in the Sunday matinee scale to make it correspond with Saturday evening prices is regarded as the first move by the circuit toward a general increase in which they will be followed by the independents who, while not welcoming a change, want to maintain a five cent differential.

For "The Great Ziegfeld" and "Anthony Adverse" Warner set the scale at 57 cents and 42 cents, an average increase of almost 40 percent.

Pittsburgh

A number of theatres in western Pennsylvania towns plan to raise their admissions for the first time in several years when they play the big pictures to be released this fall. Among the first to report increases are houses playing "The Great Ziegfeld" and "Anthony Adverse." The State in Altoona raised its top from 25 to 40 cents with "The Great Ziegfeld" and expects to follow suit with "Swing Time." The Warner circuit increased the scale at the Stanley in Pittsburgh when that house switched to straight pictures with "Anthony Adverse." The former 40 cent top advanced to 55 cents. The scale at Loew's Penn similarly was increased for "The Gorgeous Hussy." It is reported that the new prices will be permanent for all such special pictures but the reaction of patrons will govern the theatre operators in any plan to make the higher scales permanent.

Increased prices were charged for the showing of "The Great Ziegfeld" in Loew's Richmond. Matinee prices were advanced from 30 to 35 cents and evening prices from 40 to 55 cents. Children's tickets were increased from 15 to 20 cents. George Arthur Jones, manager, said the increases would hold only for the single picture.

St. Louis

Loew's theatre has raised admissions for "The Great Ziegfeld" to 65 cents top against 55 cents formerly. The Missouri theatre, reopened as a first-run, will charge 25, 35 and 55 cents, while the St. Louis, second-run house with films and vaudeville, is charging 25 cents to 6 p.m. and 40 cents at night. No price changes are being made by the Ambassador, Fox and Orpheum.

San Francisco

4,550,000th PATRON GETS FREE TICKET

Two days before the Fox theatre in Spokane, Wash., celebrated its fifth birthday customer No. 4,550,000 bought a ticket and was given another by Al Baker, manager of the house.

Coffee and cakes, the western premiere of "The General Died at Dawn," and the Fox Theatre Handicap, sixth race of the opening day at Playfair, marked the birthday week celebration.

An indication of a gradual shifting of the admission scale is seen in the recent action of Cliff Work, RKO division manager in San Francisco, in raising the scale at the Golden Gate theatre from 40 to 55 cents top on several occasions. The theatre showed "Mary of Scotland" with the 55 cent scale and theatre men believe the policy may be retained permanently. Fox West Coast recently reacquired the 5,000 seat Fox theatre and will impose a scale of 30, 35 and 40 cents after many months of a 25 cent admission.

Herman Cohen, who operates the United Artists, first-run, and the Market Street subsequent-run house, the Strand, consistently has held the United Artists to a 55 cent top. Mr. Cohen also operates the Embassy, outlet for independent first-runs, reissues and used often as the RKO continuation house. The Embassy scale until a few months ago was 35 cents general admission, with the customary 30 cents for afternoons. The recent top price has been 40 cents for evenings. A similar policy prevails at the Fox West Coast continuation house, the St. Francis. Although 40 cents general admission always has been charged by the Fox West Coast Paramount, the price was advanced to 55 cents for the showing of "The Great Ziegfeld."

Suburban subsequent-run prices remain unchanged, the majority of houses charging 20 cents afternoons, 30 cents evenings and 40 cents for loges. A few set their evening general admission at 25 cents.

Seattle

Prices at the Hamrick-Evergreen Fifth Avenue theatre were advanced for "Anthony Adverse." Matinees until 1 p.m. are 35 instead of 25 cents; from 1 until 5 p.m. the rate is 40 cents plus tax and after 5 p.m. the scale is 55 cents including tax. The increase will be effective only during the showing of this picture, according to Andrew Saso, manager.

A five cent advance in evening admission rates at the Palomar theatre changes the former scale of 20 and 30 cents to 25 and 35 cents. Matinee prices remain unchanged at 20 cents top. The program includes a feature, shorts and five acts of circuit vaudeville.

John Hamrick, general manager of the Hamrick-Evergreen theatres in Seattle, declared that executives in the city would vigorously oppose any tendency to increase admission rates.

Sioux City

The first important admission price increase went into effect in the Iowa territory this week when Evert R. Cummings, district manager for the A. H. Blank theatres, raised rates at five subsequent-run houses. The increases are: the Loop, 11 to 16 cents; Hipp and Rialto, 11 to 16 cents for matinees and 16 to 21 cents evenings; Iowa, 16 to 21 cents matinee, and the Granada, 21 to 26 cents evenings.

Spartanburg, S. C.

The Strand theatre in Spartanburg, featuring second-run attractions, has advanced its admission to 20 cents after 6 p.m. The price was formerly 15 cents at all hours.

Spokane

A five cent increase a year ago at four Evergreen theatres, controlling most of the first-run product, raised admissions to the 40 cent limit where they will stay in order to escape the federal tax of 10 per cent, according to J. J. Rosenfield, city manager. The raise anticipated the general increase now being discussed elsewhere in the Pacific Northwest.

Cecil Miller, speaking for the Peoples Amusement Company, recently formed, said prices at the Empress, Ritz and Post Street theatres would remain unchanged. There are no bargain hours in town, no bank nights and only one single feature house, the State.

Washington, D. C.

Although no theatre operating companies have announced any general increases, there are indications that there may be agitation for such a move at an early date. The report, at present, is based on announcements that increases will be made for certain pictures.

Loew's, Inc., is said to be contemplating a sliding scale, the basic price to be that currently charged, with increases for particular productions. The dominating circuit of the territory, Warner Brothers, does not admit to any move to increase the scale. Officials feel that in certain situations admissions are too low but that conditions are not favorable to an increase.

"The Green Pastures" played at A. E. Lichtman's Lincoln, Negro theatre, at a top of 35 cents, advanced from the normal 30 cents. It is reported that both attendance and receipts were unaffected by the move. Warner exchange spokesmen indicated that a similar policy would be adopted by exhibitors for showings of "Anthony Adverse."

Monogram Revival Set for Next Year

Monogram Pictures Corporation, which is being revived by W. Ray Johnson, will not become operative until the 1937-38 season, Mr. Johnson said this week. Organization work will occupy the fall and part of next winter and a sales convention will be held in the spring. The reorganized Monogram plans to sell franchise to circuit operators, who would develop their own exchanges along the lines of the original First National plan, Mr. Johnson said. In this way the distribution problem existing because of many independent distributors being tied up with other franchise deals already, might be solved.

Independent producers would contribute to a schedule of 36 features and four serials. Trem Carr, former production head of Monogram, will not be associated with the new company because of his existing contract commitments. Mr. Johnston is reported dickering with Warren William to make three pictures a year, with continuing options starting with the 1937-38 season. Monogram has acquired the screen rights to a published magazine story by Albert Payson Terhune to be released under the title "College Sweetheart." Another recent purchase is an original "The Girl Next Door." Mr. Johnston has also secured the screen rights to the book, "The Million Dollar Mystery," by Harold McGrath.

The Big Broadcast of 1937

(Paramount)

Music and Romance

Following precedent and desirous of capitalizing on the prestige established by its predecessors, Paramount spared neither time nor expense on "The Big Broadcast of 1937." Nor did it ignore the all important matter of names; a host of screen, stage, radio and concert stage notables were rounded up.

Here's the roster of who and what they are: Jack Benny of radio and picture repute, especially "Broadway Melody of 1936," Burns and Allen, who need little identification; Bob Burns, on the radio with Crosby and Whiteman, in pictures in "Rhythm on the Range"; Martha Raye, the surprising comedienne of that picture; Leopold Stokowski and his orchestra; Benny Goodman and his band, Bennie Fields, and plenty more like Shirley Ross, the new coming Frank Forest, Eleanore Whitney, Louis DePron, Ray Milland, Sam Hearn, Virginia Weidler, David Holt, Billie Lee and Irving Bacon. Like its predecessors, the 1937 big broadcast looks like a showman's natural.

Naturally the motivating story is one of comedy, music and romance. It all develops when Burns and Allen go into business and decide to advertise on the radio. Ensues the parade of celebrities as the underlying comedy, companionate romance and light drama are worked out.

The production is based on a topical original story by Erwin Gelsey, Arthur Kober and Barry Trivers. Music and lyrics were prepared by Ralph Rainger and Leo Robin. Dance ensembles were arranged by LeRoy Prinz. Musical direction is in the hands of Boris Morros. Fantastic imaginative photographic effects were devised by Gordon Jennings and Paul Lerpae. Responsibility for production success is Lewis E. Gensler's job and direction is taken care of by Mitchell Leisen, maker of "Hands Across the Table" and more recently "Thirteen Hours by Air."

15 Maiden Lane

Drama

Beyond the "Fulton Street Deadline" stands 15 Maiden Lane, headquarters of the diamond trade in New Lork, a building that is taboo to crooks and thieves. But despite hordes of secret police, plainclothesmen and uniformed officers, despite steel safes and clanging burglar alarms, thieves cracked the most carefully guarded building in the city, outwitted the police and got away with a fortune in jewels. That is the situation that builds a suspense laden story, which places a girl's life at stake, makes possible the introduction of a refreshingly contrived love contrast, and permits a girl to round up the crooks when police departments, detectives and insurance investigators fail.

Something different from the routine crime-crook girl theme, the production is based on an original story by Paul Burger, with the screen play the combined effort of Lou Breslow, David Silverstein and John Patrick. Direction is in the hands of Alan Dwan.

Claire Trevor, most recently in "To Mary, with Love" and "The Holy Lie," is the heroine of the story. Lloyd Nolan, now in "Texas Rangers," has the role of a detective lientenant, and is the romantic and dramatic hero. The heavy, engineer of the sensational robbery, is Cesar Romero who, more concerned with his power to charm a pretty miss than with his own safety, falls victim to the trap Miss Trevor sets for him. With Douglas Fowley, a slick, thieving double crosser of the first water, this group accounts for the principal action. Supporting players, in characteristic roles, include Lester Matthews, Robert McWade, Russell Hicks, Howard Hickman, Murray Kinnell, Paul Fix and Holmes Herbert.

In addition to the potential entertainment to be provided by the story, production detail promises to give an illuminating insight into some of the most carefully guarded secrets of the diamond cutting trade.

Libeled Lady

(Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer)

Comedy-Romance-Drama

Star power as represented by names in this production should give any kind of exhibitor something to conjure with. It has "The Thin Man" pair, William Powell and Myrna Loy; Powell fresh from "Ziegfeld" and "My Man Godfrey," Miss Loy direct from "To Mary, With Love." Spencer Tracy, who scored a personal triumph in "San Francisco," is included, as is Jean Harlow, who did all right for herself in "Suzy." Walter Connolly is important in the story, as are Charley Grapewin and E. E. Clive. Also there's quite a roster of lesser lights, notably Cora Witherspoon, Lauri Beatty, Spencer Charters, Greta Mayer, William Benedict and Hal K. Dawson.

Story material appears to be uiquely suited to talents and personalities of stars and principals. Essentially a comedy, quite modernly flamboyant and rowdy in character, it is wholesome and invigorating fun in spite of its mixed matrimonial situations, high pressure drama and romantic intrigue.

Publisher Tracy, threatened by Miss Loy with a whacking big libel suit as the result of accidentally published scandal, hires Powell to sidetrack the menacing lady. To complicate things, however, Tracy causes Powell to marry Jean Harlow. Ensuing situations readily can be visioned with Powell falling in love with Loy, Tracy thinking that he is being double crossed, and Harlow, who married just because she wanted a trip to Reno, rising in wrathful indignation.

The yarn is an original by the onetime newspaper man Wallace Sullivan, and the screen play is by Maurine Watkins and Howard Emmett Rogers. Jack Conway who balanced his rough and ready "Viva Villa" with the classic "A Tale of Two Cities," is the director.

Million Dollar Profile

(Radio)

Comedy-Romance

This title has definite showmanship value. In connection with the story, its theme and production detail, principal backgrounds for most of the comedy and romance being a high class model posing advertising agency, the significance from an exploitation point of view is strengthened. It becomes further valuable in its connection with the two leading players in this production, the third in which they have appeared, Gene Raymond and Ann Sothern. The other two were "Hooray for Love" and "Walking on Air."

The story concerns two young folk, a professional advertising model and a young man who, to be near her and convince her to marry him, causes a rival agency to be established, whereupon accidentally he becomes her companion model. Generally the situations are gay, in line with previous successes.

With lively and wholesome fun as its primary attraction and the angle that showmen will like to stress, the potential draw of Raymond and Miss Sothern as co-stars is increased by the pulling power of those who will be seen in support. Erik Rhodes and Eric Blore will be seen in characteristic comedy parts. Since "The Gay Divorcee" both have added to their popularity. So has Helen Broderick, seen with Raymond in "Love on a Bet" and "The Bride Walks Out."

Being produced by Edward Kaufman, maker of "Walking on Air" and "Ex Mrs. Bradford," the story is an original by Muriel Scheck and H. S. Kraft, with screen play by Viola Brothers Shore, who did "Walking on Air." The director, Joseph M. Santley, also handled "Walking on Air."

Valiant is the Word For Carrie

(Paramount)

Drama

In essence the story told in this production is of deeply human interest. In quality it is comparable to the most impressive heart touching themes. While intimate, it is warmly wholesome and down to earth, dealing practicably with elements that are the basis of life. It is the story of a bad woman of a small town, who forsakes her careless ways when two youngsters touch her heart as no man could, takes those children to her, and when they attain maturity rescues one from a life of despair that the happiness of both might be assured.

On the surface this would appear to be a difficult attraction to exploit. Yet considered primarily as a woman's picture, not lacking, however, in elements profoundly appealing to all adults, it automatically recommends itself to real showmen.

The novel from which it was adapted was written by Barry Benefield and was one of the most widely read books of the past year. Further, it marks the screen debut of Gladys George, one of America's foremost dramatic artistes. Known directly or by reputation to thousands, Miss George promises to be a screen attraction of high rank. As Wesley Ruggles, serving as producer and director, collaborated with Claude Binyon in preparation of the screen play, it can be expected that none of the original's power will be lost.

While Miss George undoubtedly will prove to be the most exploitable personality, the inclusion of such figures as Arline Judge, John Howard and Isabel Jewell assures a name value strength.

SCHENCK EXPLAINS GAUMONT DEAL; WILL GO INTO EFFECT JANUARY 2

GB Pictures Will Be Handled in U. S. by MGM and 20th Century-Fox with New Selling Season Next Spring

Rumors reaching New York from London variously in recent weeks questioning the progress in the negotiations for effecting the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Twentieth Century international operating agreement with Gaumont-British were set at rest this week by definite statements on the present status of negotiations from Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the board of 20th Century-Fox, who arrived on the Normandie from London on Monday.

Mr. Schenck, interviewed by Motion Picture Daily in his suite on the liner as it steamed up the bay from Quarantine to its North River pier, said the distribution machinery planned by the three companies will be ready to start functioning on January 2, 1937, and that GB pictures will be handled in this country by MGM and 20th Century-Fox with the start of the new selling season next spring. He emphasized his view that the deal "is advantageous to all three companies."

The board chairman, although wan from an illness which he suffered immediately before leaving England, seemed in good health and even better spirits. He answered all questions without hesitation and appeared anxious to have the status of the deal explained thoroughly and exactly. His reasons for seeing the three way merger as advantageous to the companies involved and to the industry generally, were explained when he said:

"If the Ostrers, who have absolute control of GB, sold out to John Maxwell, who always has been ready to buy, Maxwell would have control of 60 per cent of the theatres in England, thereby putting into the hands of one man the power to practically dictate terms."

Korda Not in Deal

Michael Balcon, production head for GB, will occupy that position in the production setup under the triple management in England and Alexander Korda will not figure in the deal, Mr. Schenck declared. Cabled reports have been received at various times from London that Mr. Korda would be included in the program and become general studio head of the combined production in England and that Mr. Balcon would join MGM in Hollywood as a producer. "There is absolutely no truth to these reports," Mr. Schenck said.

"Negotiations have been completed and the legal departments of the companies will take the next 110 days to draft the contracts so that the deal can become operative immediately after the first of the year," the executive said. He explained that the points in the agreement have not been "fundamentally changed" from the original program. The only major variation in this connection, he said, was the fact that the three companies will keep their GB stock instead of depositing it with a holding company which, it had been planned, would supplant the Metropolis & Bradford Trust, present holding company for GB stock. This was made necessary under English law he said.

The complete interview with Mr. Schenck follows:

JOSEPH M. SCHENCK, chairman of the board of Twentieth Century-Fox Films, on his arrival Monday aboard the Normandie from England, where he had spent the last six weeks on business.

"Isn't most of the detail of the transaction set and of the remaining, isn't it merely a routine matter of the Ostrers depositing their stock?" Mr. Schenck was asked.

"Not all the details are set," he answered. "Operations of the distribution for the three-way company have yet to be worked out. There will be no change in this country or England. Sidney R. Kent will go over this month or next to work out the details."

"Isn't it a fact Sam Eckman will supervise the sales of the three companies when the merger becomes effective?" he was next asked.

"Nothing has been determined at all because there has not been a meeting of the three companies to decide."

Q.—Has the name been decided for the new company to replace Metropolis & Bradford Trust?

A.—There will not be a holding company. The stock of G. B. will be divided and held by each company. It was originally intended to form a new holding company, but this legally could not be done.

Q.—How much stock will M-G-M and Twentieth Century-Fox have?

A.—Combined, Twentieth Century-Fox and M-G-M will have 40 per cent, the Ostrers, 20 per cent and the rest will be in the public's hands.

Q.—It has been widely reported Alexander Korda will tie in with the deal, perhaps as general production head. Have you anything to say on this? Will Michael Balcon join M-G-M on the coast as was discussed about a year ago, or will he continue to head G. B. production?

A.—There is absolutely no truth at all to the reports. As a matter of fact, Balcon will produce for the three companies. Although G. B. is scheduled to produce 24 this year, the combined production of the three companies will be increased to 36.

Q.—We understand M-G-M and Twentieth Century-Fox will each distribute a minimum of five annually in America under the G. B. deal. Is this correct?

A.—Yes.

Chairman of 20th Century-Fox, Home, Says Balcon Will Continue as GB Production Head in England

Q.—Is there any maximum?

A.—No. This depends on the quality of product made.

Q.—Reports indicate G. B. distribution in America will be discontinued not later than the spring of 1937 with absorption of the sales force by M-G-M and Twentieth Century-Fox. Is it possible that the American sales staff of G. B. will be absorbed by Jan. 1?

A.—That's our present intention. There is no chance of taking over G. B. distribution in this country by the first of the year. The company must sell its product here for the rest of the season and this position will not be changed until our next sales convention, probably in May.

Q.—Are there any changes in the deal as first announced? London has reported the stock setup has been altered to further reduce the Twentieth Century-Fox and M-G-M participation in Metropolis & Bradford Trust.

Original Deal Stands

A.—Fundamentally, no. In details many changes have been made on account of legal points. You cannot operate there as you do here, and vice versa. But fundamentally the deal is set up as originally contemplated.

Q.—Is it not a part of the plan to retire the Ostrers from active management within a year after the deal becomes effective?

A.—The only change which has come about from what we originally contemplated is that we have abandoned the idea of setting up a new trust company to replace M. & B. We didn't deem it advisable to have the Ostrers as a one-man control. We are now doing away with that so the control will not be in one man's hands.

Q.—Has any stock changed hands?

A.—No.

Q.—Who will direct the activities of the new combined company?

A.—That will be up to the board of directors. Twentieth Century-Fox will have two men on it, M-G-M, two and the Ostrers, two. Of the remaining six, these men will be impartial and will act for the best interests of G. B. They will not be rubber stamps, but regular directors.

Q.—Any date set when M-G-M and Twentieth Century-Fox will ratify the deal?

A.—I understand the Loew board has given my brother the authority to ratify the pact. The Twentieth Century-Fox board will hold a meeting as soon as Mr. Kent comes back from Maine. I understand he is due back Tuesday.

Q.—Has the G. B. board ratified the deal?

Calls Approvable Inevitable

A.—The Ostrers control the G. B. board and it is bound to approve the arrangement. The G. B. board hasn't had a meeting because the papers have to be drawn and submitted to the members. It wouldn't be practical for them to ratify the deal until we have done it first. After our boards have passed on the pact, the G. B. directors will meet and dissolve Metropolis & Bradford Trust.

Q.—Many of the G. B. theatres in the provinces are antiquated and outmoded. How far have plans progressed for reconstruction or rehabilitation and is the report correct that plans have been discussed to augment the circuit by

The Wanger System

"Unless he has star talent under exclusive contract an independent producer who aspires to make grade A pictures is not really independent. Without such talent to offer in exchange, he is placed in the position of being dependent upon the good offices or business necessities of brother producers when he seeks to borrow top flight names."

That is Walter Wanger's reason why he has invested more than $1,000,000 a year in a super stock company. The group, unique in Hollywood independent production annals, includes six ace players, Sylvia Sidney, Joan Bennett, Henry Fonda, Madeleine Carroll and Charles Boyer, and the current secondary players, Peggy Conklin, Tom Rutherford, Alan Baxter and Pat Paterson, whom Wanger hopes to develop into stars.

The investment in exclusive personal contracts has two purposes. Its primary aim is to serve Mr. Wanger's ambition of giving exhibitors consistently good pictures in which, from a showmanship viewpoint, the all important requirement of adequate name value is assured. Secondly, it permits him to loan and borrow under the most advantageous conditions possible. With these players, all of whom, incidentally, are in constant demand, to serve as collateral, he can make sound trades and procure strong casts for his own pictures.

Mr. Wanger, however, instead of being a star seeking borrower, is in the odd position of being an independent producer who lends stars to major rivals. Illustrative of this is the case of Henry Fonda, who starred in two Twentieth Century-Fox features prior to making his debut under the Wanger banner in "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine."

With his high ranking sextette, Producer Wanger has more than enough established personalities to accommodate the requirements of his program of seven pictures. Yet, while not working for him, his players are not sitting idly around eating up overhead. They are loaned so that the expense of their contracts is absorbed by the borrowing producer and loaned in such a manner that their screen appearances are mutually beneficial. Thus Charles Boyer was loaned to Selznick-International to co-star with Marlene Dietrich in "The Garden of Allah" and Madeleine Carroll to Paramount to appear with Gary Cooper in "The General Died at Dawn." Later Boyer will be loaned to MGM to be with Greta Garbo in the picture to follow "Camille."

Mr. Wanger's lendings are not shots in the dark made merely for the purpose of keeping his people working. When approached for a player, he analyzes the proposed story, informs himself of the details of production and makes his deal so that his property is fully protected. He ascertains that in every detail the proposed picture will be of the same high caliber which he produces. With the fact of these circumstances established, Wanger appreciates that the borrowing company will give his player a publicity campaign that will redound to his benefit.

Following his system Mr. Wanger is not compelled to force his own talent into too many pictures produced under his own auspices. As his exclusive talent is regularly employed, he can operate his company economically, plan his schedules accordingly, so that when he makes a picture he can get his money on the screen, a value which, after all, is the thing exhibitors are paying for.

There is no necessity to maintain a large organization. Nevertheless, Mr. Wanger is not unaware of his responsibility and duty as a producer to develop new personalities. Under his own sponsorship and through loan-outs Alan Baxter, Tom Rutherford, Peggy Conklin and Pat Paterson are kept on the screen and given ample opportunity to develop their talents in the same manner as do his higher ranking stars.

Though Mr. Wanger has done much loaning in a manner beneficial to the entire industry as well as personally, it is not a fetish or specialty with him. He is first a producer. As such, and cognizant of the buildups that have accrued to his players under his own auspices from past deals and anticipated in connection with future trades, he is planning to use the entire group in "Arabian Nights," which will be made next year.

Production Holds Pace

Production activity continued apace during Labor Day week as eleven pictures started and nine finished. Despite the dual holiday period, which also included California Admission Day, there was no letup in intensive programs now occupying practically all studios.

Leadership in new work went to Universal, which started three films. In "Empty Saddles," a Buck Jones production, the star is featured with Louise Brooks, Lloyd Ingraham, Frank Campeau, Harvey Clarke, Charles Middleton and Claire Rochelle. Les Selander is directing. The second picture, which David Howard is directing under Trem Carr's supervision, will present John Wayne and Jean Rogers in the leading parts. Just started, "Three Smart Girls" currently features Diana Durbin, Barbara Reid and Nan Grey with Mischa Auer. Henry Koster is directing.

Following several weeks tryout of material in Coastal theatres, MGM started "A Day at the Races." Featuring the three Marx Brothers, the film will also present Allen Jones, Margaret Dumont and Esther Muir. Additional castings will be made as the picture progresses. Sam Wood is directing. With a cast headed by Lionel Barrymore, Freddie Bartholomew and Spencer Tracy, "Captains Courageous" also started. Victor Fleming is directing.

At the Hal Roach studio an untitled Laurel and Hardy feature went into work.

Two pictures were started by Columbia. In "The Depths Below," which Erle Kenton is directing, Richard Dix is teamed with Dolores Del Rio in the leads supported by Chester Morris, Ward Bond, George McKay, Marc Lawrence, Ron Rowan, Lucille Ward, James A. Mack and Si Jenks. The cast for "North of Nome," a Larry Darmour production for Columbia, includes Jack Holt, Dorothy Appleby and Evelyn Venable.

Goldwyn started "Love Under Fire" with Merle Oberon, Brian Aherne and David Nevin in the top roles.

At Warners "Mountain Justice," which will feature George Brent, Josephine Hutchinson, Guy Kibbee, Robert Barrat and Frieda Inescourt, started. Michael Curtiz is the director.

Twentieth Century-Fox started "Charlie Chan at the Opera." Warner Oland again is starred, supported by Boris Karloff.

Warners dominate in the list of completed pictures as four moved to the cutting rooms. The large cast for "God's Country and the Woman" includes George Brent, Beverly Roberts, Robert Barrat, Alan Hale, Barton MacLane, Joseph King, Billy Bevan, Bert Roach, Roscoe Ates, Addison Richards, El Brendel, Herbert Rawlinson, Susan Fleming, Victor Potel, Mary Treen and Eily Malyon. William Keighley directed. "Green Light," which Frank Borzage directed, will present Errol Flynn, Anita Louise, Cedric Hartwicke, Walter Abel, Margaret Lindsey, Henry O'Neill, Spring Byington, Erin O'Brien-Moore and Henry Kolker. Leading players in "Stolen Holiday" are Kay Francis, Claude Rains, Ian Hunter, Alexander D'Arcy and Alison Skipworth. Michael Curtis directed. The fourth picture, "The Making of O'Balley," features Pat O'Brien.

Universal wound up active shooting on two pictures. "Four Days Wonder" features Jeanette Dante, Kenneth Howell, Alan Mowbray, Martha Sleeper, Walter Catlett and Margaret Irving. Sidney Salkow directed. The cast featured in "The Flying Hostess," which Murray Roth directed, includes Judith Barrett, William Gargan, Astrid Allwyn and Etta Logan.

"Ladies in Love" was finished at Twentieth Century-Fox. Janet Gaynor, Constance Bennett, Loretta Young and Simone Simon are co-starred Paramount checked "The Accusing Finger" off its active schedule. Important cast names are Paul Kelly, Kent Taylor, Robert Cummings, Martha Hunt, Harry Carey, George Irving and Bernedine Hayes. James Hogan directed.

The final picture on the completed group is "Ghost Town Gold," credited to Republic. It will present Robert Livingston, Ray Corrigan, Max Terhune, Kay Hughes, LeRoy Mason, Burr Caruth, Bob Kortman, Milburn Morane, Frank Hagney and others.

THREE EXHIBITOR UNITS STUDY TRADE PRACTICES

Independents at Milwaukee Gathering Tackle Advertising and Copyright Problems, with Allied Leaders as Speakers

Exhibitor attention was focused this week on the problems of theatremen as organized discussions were held in New Jersey, Milwaukee and California, and western Pennsylvania theatre owners set October 19th and 20th for their annual meeting to formulate policies for the year.

The New Jersey branch of the Allied States Association, meeting in Atlantic City, N. J., voted financial and moral support and cooperation with the national body in the proposed legislative fight against producers and distributors in the exhibition field.

Talks on organization, territorial problems, prospects for the coming year, advertising and the copyright situation inaugurated the annual convention of the Independent Theatres Protective Association at Milwaukee on Tuesday.

In California a membership meeting of the Independent Theatre Owners ratified the action of Attorney Frank Hutton regarding day and date bookings, extended runs and unfulfilled product contracts.

Allied of New Jersey will raise between $5,000 and $6,000 as its share of the national defense fund currently set at $100,000 which is to be used in the fight against control of theatres by producers and distributors. The action, supporting the decision reached last June in Cleveland by national Allied, was voted unanimously at the 17th annual convention of the New Jersey branch in Atlantic City.

The New Jersey quota is to be raised by a special committee which will be named by Lee W. Newbury of Belmar, president of the organization. The fund will be used both for litigation and in efforts to obtain enactment of legislation seeking the separation of theatres from producer and distributor ownership. This, it was pointed out, has been done in other industries.

Speakers declared that such separation of manufacturer from retailer has been successfully carried out in lines such as meat packing, and is mandatory in the liquor business.

"And in our field," one speaker pointed out, "we have to buy our films from the producers, yet we may have a theatre across the street, competing with us, controlled by that same producer and getting first choice of his product at special terms."

All Officers Reelected

Reports also were received on the progress of the campaign against blind buying and block booking, the subject of the Neely-Pettengill Bill in Congress. Speakers included Nathan Yamins of Fall River, Mass., president of the national organization; Herman Blum of Baltimore, its treasurer; Arthur Price of Baltimore, eastern regional vice-president; Arthur Howard of Boston, business representative of the New England group, and Sidney E. Samuelson of Newton, N. J., past president of the New Jersey group.

The entire slate of officers of the state organization was reelected at the closing meeting of the session. In addition to President Newbury those retained in office are: Louis Levin of Newark and Simon Myers of Moorestown, vice-president; Jacob Unger of Hillside, secretary; David Snaper of New Brunswick, treasurer, and Edward Lachman of Morristown and Maurice Miller of Passaic, assistant treasurers.

A crowded program was drawn up for the ITPA convention in Milwaukee this week. The first day's session, called for two o'clock Tuesday afternoon at the Hotel Plankinton, began with an address by F. J. McWilliams, president; an outline of the convention activities by George Fischer, convention chairman, and four addresses on topics of interest to exhibitors.

In one of these talks Congressman Thomas J. O'Malley declared that hearings conducted in connection with the copyright bill, S3047, during the last Congress did some good even though the measure was not passed. He said that the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers has ceased to bring suits against non-profit and charitable organizations for violation.

Aaron Saperstein, also a speaker at the opening session, pointed to the situation facing exhibitors in Cook County, Ill., where Publix will shortly launch double features and will ask for an extra week's allowance, as an example of the need for cooperation among independent exhibitors.

Californians Act

A membership meeting of 80 exhibitors of the Independent Theatre Owners of California this week ratified action taken by their attorney, Frank Hutton, on day and date bookings, extended runs and unfulfilled product contracts. Los Angeles and Arizona exhibitors have been notified by the organization, through Mr. Hutton, that pictures not delivered on current contracts must be delivered in 1936-37.

The group upheld the action on the Fox West Coast consent decree regarding extended bookings in the outlying territories which was signed in 1930. Mr. Hutton has the organization's permission to take any necessary legal action. His moves will depend on the replies received from distributors.

At the meeting Jack Berman was named chairman of a committee to study the closed shop plan suggested by the International Association of Theatrical Stage Employees.

Schenck Explains GB Deal Status

acquisition or construction of new theatres throughout the United Kingdom?

A.—A substantial amount of money has been appropriated to rehabilitate theatres naturally. The theatres are much finer than I thought they were and business is very good. Where G. B. business is not very good is in the producing end. Yes, a policy of expansion is natural as soon as the deal goes through.

Q.—Who will run the G. B. circuit and is it fair to assume that the operator will be an American theatre executive sent over from this side?

A.—An Englishman, by all means. We may send over technical men, if needed. No change in management is contemplated. The present operator is a good man. However, we will send over a man to make a report so that we know what we have. I believe there are about 340 theatres.

Q.—What about A. C. Blumenthal's commission?

A.—Blumenthal will get his as soon as the deal is finished. He will be paid by the Ostrers and Twentieth Century-Fox and not from M-G-M. The Ostrers and Twentieth Century-Fox are selling something, while M-G-M is the buyer.

Q.—In view of M-G-M's first announced plans to send important talent over, what is the plan now that G. B. will be the production outlet for M-G-M in England? What talent from Twentieth Century-Fox will go abroad? How does Bob Kane fit into the picture?

A.—M-G-M will have to answer for itself. Twentieth Century-Fox hasn't yet decided. Whatever will be the best policy for the production company will be worked out by the three companies, not by one man or one company. Michael Balcon will remain as the top man, but with the help of more producers. We know we're going to have a new producing company to be financed by the three firms and naturally we will do everything to make it a success. Bob Kane will be in the new company in a business capacity.

Q.—The G. B. studios at Shepherd's Bush are recognized as antiquated and old-fashioned. What are the plans for a new studio and is it true the new Amalgamated studios will be used?

A.—Yes, Shepherd's Bush is antiquated and expensive to produce in. Alexander Korda has a fine studio and we may make a deal with him. If not, we will have to get new studios. Korda's studio is ideal. The layout is such that we could increase offices and stages under the present arrangement as much as we want. If we cannot make a deal with him, we will build a studio large enough to make as many pictures as we decide. We may even rent space at other studios.

Central Distribution

Q.—Counter moves on part of other American and British companies have been reported. Radio and Columbia are reported talking to John Maxwell. C. M. Woolf is said to be buying theatres on the q.t. What is there to say about this, if anything, on the theory the G. B. deal and counter moves are popularly believed to be influencing a widespread change in the entire alignment of the British industry, putting independent exhibitors on their guard and perhaps influencing them to band together to fight distributors either now or planning to go into exhibition?

A.—We have nothing to say. Ask the people making the moves. We are not disturbed over rumors or reported moves. The conduct of our negotiations speaks for itself. Rumors will be rife until we start operating.

Q.—What will be the name of the new company distributing in England?

A.—Probably M-G-M-Twentieth Century-Fox-G. B., or in some other order. I am giving the names of companies in the order of their importance. We haven't given the matter any thought.

Q.—What will become of the corporate names of M-G-M, Twentieth Century-Fox and G. B. in England?

A.—All companies will be dissolved into one name. The sales forces will be retained, but distribution will be handled by a central unit.

Sees 5% Sales Saving

Q.—How much will be saved by one distributing system?

A.—I have no idea, but I think from four to five per cent of the gross.

Schenck said he had signed Janet Johnson, an Australian, who is now appearing in a London show. She is not expected to arrive here until the show closes, which will be Jan. 1.

The Twentieth Century-Fox board will meet and authorize Kent to go through with the deal as made before Schenck leaves for the coast in about two weeks, the chairman of the board stated. The only communication Schenck has had with Kent on the deal is by transatlantic phone and cable. The two will get together immediately to discuss all phases of the arrangement and within the next month or six weeks, "Kent will go abroad and work everything out."

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

Ramona

(20th Century - Fox)

Comedy-Drama

"Ramona" is valuable screen merchandise. The soft-toned color abets interest in motivation and is a considerable advance over anything previously seen. Consequently the film has high artistic merit. The title and the novel from which it was adapted are widely known. It tells a moving heart-touching story in which are exquisitely treated the entertaining theatric ingredients of warmly human, romance, drama, devotion, comedy and tragedy. In translating these elements to the screen through dialogue, action and illusion, care has been taken to make them just as much a part of the picture as they were parts of the Helen Hunt Jackson literary classic. Gayety and lively human humor are mingled with surging drama, devoted love interest and emotion stirring tragedy. Occasionally the film includes effective bits of thrill action. It is played by an accomplished cast whose work gives every indication that it knew it was associated with an important picture and was determined to exert every effort to make it so. Loretta Young, Don Ameche and Kent Taylor are the leads.

The story is impressively appealing. In the atmosphere of gay fiesta, Ramona is happily in love with Felipe. Also she becomes attached to the Indian, Alessandro. Thus there is disappointment, but little sorrow, in her heart when Senora Moreno's denunciation of her as part Indian drives her into Alessandro's waiting arms. Married in a sequence in which comedy and sentiment are richly contrasted, the couple happily settle down to till fertile California soil. In time prosperity and a baby come.

After the first chapter of the film story, the sublime happiness turns to stark tragedy as rapacious whites drive Alessandro's brood off the homeland. Wandering in a raging storm, they are befriended by a mother squatter, Aunt Ri Hyar. The baby falling ill from exposure, the now harried life of Romana and Alessandro is terror filled as the father unsuccessfully seeks a doctor's aid, but does get medicine. He "borrows" a horse when his own goes lame. Trailed by the animal's owner, Farrar, who is beseeched by Ramona to tell her why he wishes to see her husband, Alessandro is murdered. Ramona finds comfort in the words of Aunt Ri Hyar, solace in the knowledge that her baby will live and, as Felipe, who has heard of her plight, again appears, she visions a new happiness with him.

There's nothing wishy washy about "Ramona." It's not a concoction of sugary sentimentality decked out with a lot of beautiful color. Rather, it's simple powerful human drama, no more dated than the most modern sophisticated love story. It provides audiences with all they could want for entertainment. Further, it provides exhibitors with just about everything necessary to devise showmanship campaigns to insure its commercial success anywhere and any time.

Previewed in Grauman's Chinese theatre. The audience watched it attentively. Occasionally, in appreciation of some exceptional bit of player work or beautiful pictorial effect, the audience applauded. The spectators generally, however, preferred to watch in silence, which was accepted as an indication of their appreciation and respect for the picture as a whole.

As You Like It

(Inter Allied – 20th Century - Fox)

Shakespeare Comedy

Elisabeth Bergner, with the laurels she won in "Escape Me Never" still fresh, is here seen in the part which made her famous on the Continent of Europe. Her Rosalind, recognized as one of the great performances of the contemporary stage, is presented on the screen as in the theatre, practically as Shakespeare wrote it, with no concessions to the film public's supposed desire for speed, spectacle or an original "twist." It is straight Shakespeare, with the advantages and the disadvantages applying to that circumstance.

In this faithfulness to its original lies the best suggestion for the selling campaign. Besides Miss Bergner's international reputation in the part as the big recommendation of the film to the better class public there is the fact that screen craft, in the sense of presentation, is by no means absent. The picture of the Forest of Arden is one no stage could present; yet the picture remains subsidiary to the text and to the interpretation, by a great artiste, of one of the great Shakespearean parts.

It is an important point also that the interpretation of every other part in the film is in the hands of an English player of established reputation. Laurence Olivier, Henry Ainley, Leon Quartermaine, Felix Aylmer, Sophie Stewart, J. Fisher White and the others represent the tradition of Shakespearean acting. The film offers, in short, a Shakespeare play as well played, in Shakespeare's language and by Shakespeare's fellow countrymen, as America ever is likely to see.

The story of "As You Like It" scarcely calls for recapitulation. Essentially its charm is in the situation, in the sylvan setting of the Forest of Arden. The Youthful Rosalind, banished from the Court of Duke Frederick, masquerades in boy's attire and, as Ganymede, leads the love-lorn Orlando to make love to her, in her assumed character, as a deputy for the Rosalind she really is.

Of subsidiary but considerable interest are the fortunes of the banished duke, Rosalind's father, who lives with his followers in Robin Hood style in the forest, and of the maid Audrey, who falls in love with the pretended Ganymede.

Of individual points of appeal, apart from Miss Bergner's whimsical, lovable and fascinating picture of Rosalind, one of the most outstanding is the delivery of the famous "Seven Ages of Man" speech by Leon Quartermaine as Jacques. The beautiful elocution of Henry Ainley will delight any audience which can appreciate the music of real English.

"As You Like It," then, is Shakespeare certainly undefiled and almost pure; the "almost" is used only because some cuts have been made, out of considerations of time. The dialogue is by William Shakespeare, unassisted.

The premiere at the Carlton was a big social event in London. A press view preceded it, and after-comment there was all on the same lines of appreciation of the almost severe fidelity of the film to the play, and of Miss Bergner's charm. Such box-office doubts as were heard were based on the obvious consideration that great artistic virtues almost imply a certain degree of commercial doubt.

The Captain's Kid

(Warner)

Comedy-Drama

In this comedy drama of Cape Cod folk and life, artificial and generally ineffective melodramatic and romantic theatricalism has been so inserted that the motivating homely humor has been noticeably hampered. The result is a consequent lessening of the amusement quality and potential exploitation value. Essentially the picture is a juvenile attraction. As such, it has definite entertainment and commercial possibilities. Adults, while undoubtedly finding certain chapters of it gayly amusing, are apt to consider others as just so much unnecessary and irrelevant footage.

The picture deals for the most part with the experiences of three persons. One is a kindly, whimsical old waterfront character. The second, an impressionable young miss, and his boon companion, is an enthusiastic audience for his colorful yarns. Third is a steely minded old woman, who, sure that the old timer is a bad influence on the little girl, is determined to free her from it.

Asa's finding of a much ballyhood buried treasure brings about the death of hijacked Chester, and the old salt is clapped into jail on a murder charge. His predicament is comically intensified when, before a coroner's jury, little Abigail portrays him as a ferocious buccaneer sea rover who'd rather kill than eat. But as things look black for Asa, and irrelevant romance involving Betsy and Tom is woven through the action, old Marcia's dramatic efforts to make some sense out of the senseless situation bear fruit when chauffeur John recognizes the deceased Chester's feminine pal, Mabel, as an erstwhile Brooklyn crook. Ensues a hectic chase which precipitates the news that Chester was a notorious mobster, that Asa killed in self-defense, that Abigail is a heroine.

The character of the story has certain merits to be brought chiefly to the attention of juvenile audiences, and so it should be sold to youngsters as something to amuse and interest them. Other than pleasant entertainment, it provides little that recommends itself to adult attention.

Previewed in Warner's Hollywood theatre, a deluxe first-run house, the audience, while sympathetic to and appreciative of the work of Guy Kibbee, May Robson, Sybil Jason and the members of the support, was not strongly impressed. Their reaction indicated that the picture should meet with best success in smaller and more neighborly houses.

In His Steps

(Grand National - Zeidman)

Modern Drama

Based on a book which has had a greater circulation than any other volume, except the Bible, "In His Steps" is impressive modern dramatic entertainment. It is not a Bible story, nor is it a literal picturization of the content of the Charles M. Sheldon original. From any viewpoint it is the kind of picture that any exhibitor, especially those operating theatres in which family type audiences constitute a large proportion of patronage, can recommend to his customers.

It is an impressive picture, undoubtedly one of the most powerful dramatic themes ever been brought to the screen. It is intelligently prepared and produced. Acting, direction, photography and mood inspiring musical accompaniment are of high caliber. A continued note of faithful understanding is seen in capturing the dramatically spiritual atmosphere, not the detail, of the original. "In His Steps" is a spiritual story. It is heart touching drama.

Influenced by spiritually minded Davidson, the young and modern Tom Carver forces Ruth Brewster to elope with him. Though the youngsters' fathers are business enemies, the children seek only their own happiness. Robert Brewster, abetted by his wife, demands that Tom be captured as a kidnaper. There's a hair-raising auto chase. Outwitting pursuit, the boy and girl obtain a license and are married by lay minister Adams. The secret of their whereabouts known only to Adams, his wife and Davidson, the couple learn the first hard lessons of life wringing an existence from the soil. Highly dramatic situations, vividly portraying Mr. and Mrs. Brewster's efforts to revenge themselves upon Calvin Carver with Tom as the pawn, lead to an episode in which the young couple learn that their friend, Davidson, is being hounded by the law.

Over the objections of Mrs. Adams, Tom and Ruth decide to go home and face the music. Follows a court trial, in which Judge Grey, in a difficult position, chooses to permit an interpretation of divine rather than worldly law to guide him. Calvin Brewster accepts responsibility for his son's seeming rashness. Begging Mr. and Mrs. Carver to see the light as he has seen it, he pleads for forgiveness for himself and his son.

An unusual picture, exhibitors should be prepared to adapt unusual methods in its marketing. As a marked deviation from the usual round of sentimentalities and heroics, it should carry an impressive appeal for any kind of audience, adults or youngsters. Especially it should entertain fathers and mothers and adolescents. For them it teaches a powerful moral lesson of tolerance and understanding. It is profoundly instructive in that character.

Because it is the first picture by a new company, though produced by B. F. Zeidman, who long has been associated with the industry, it would seem logical that the picture be given as much advance build-up as possible. If it can be done, an advance showing should be arranged for clergymen, newspaper editors, social workers and other influence creating groups.

Thank You, Jeeves!

(20th Century - Fox)

Mystery Comedy

Hurly burly farce hokum mystery comedy is the essence of this picture, for which a P. G. Wodehouse is the framework. Strictly a secondary attraction, geared to suit the fancy of those who find amusement in slapstick-tinged goings on, it has few elements, besides story source and several credible individual performances to recommend it to general audiences. Wide liberties having been taken in adapting the original, the film bears little resemblance to anything Wodehouse might have had in mind when he wrote it. Only in the character of Jeeves, as presented by Arthur Treacher, is there anything that savors of the author's style.

Jeeves, having trouble enough tending to the wants of his willy nilly master Bertie Wooster, runs into more when he becomes involved with Manville and Marjorie, both of whom have parts of blue prints for some new invention.

Paradoxically, the show has many high-grade exploitation angles. Arthur Treacher's work in the leading role is almost certain to find favor with audiences. Thus his name, in connection with the title, can be used to carry much of the exploitation load. Virginia Field, in her debut, looks promising. David Nevin, Lester Mathews and Colin Tapley, the other principals, give performances that rise measurably above the material provided. It can be sold as just a big dose of foolish fun, aimed directly at those who respond to that entertainment quality.

Ghost Patrol

(Puritan)

Modern Western

This is a story of the west as of today, with mail planes brought to earth by desperados on horseback through operation of a secret ray and with a G-man in chaps and sombrero tracking down the criminals. The title is derived from the location, a western town deserted after exhaustion of the gold mine accounting for its erection. This is the gang's hideout and base of operations.

The novelty of the picture resides chiefly in the story factors noted in the preceding paragraph. Staging, direction, acting and general procedure adhere to formal lines. There is a deal of shooting and a minimum of dialogue. The romantic element is incidental.

Tim McCoy has the principal role, that of a government investigator sent into the mountain fastness to investigate the wrecking of two mail planes and disappearance of their cargos. He poses as a crook and affiliates himself with the gang. Claudia Dell portrays the daughter of an aged inventor, captive of the criminals, whose apparatus for producing a ray capable of grounding the planes is concealed in the crook's hideout. He effects their capture and marries the girl.

Reviewed at the Tivoli theatre, where two features plus shorts are available at fifteen cents a copy and the very plain people present seemed to want precisely this kind of picture.

Craig's Wife

Character Drama

In several of its phases, it cannot be maintained that this is always a pleasant picture. At the same time it cannot be said that "Craig's Wife" is not provocative. Stripped of all substantiating detail, it is a revealing character

EVERYTHING YOU'VE HEARD IS TRUE

The most eagerly awaited picture of the year... talked about as the great Sinclair Lewis novel from which it was adapted ran into hundreds of thousands of copies sold...discussed as the Broadway dramatization made by Sidney Howard ran on and on, month after month, in city after city... by millions of friends, who loved this story of Sam and Fran, who went away to look for happiness...

It was great as a novel; it was greater as a play; it IS Greatest as the Picture, its thrilling entertainment coming not alone from superb performances by WALTER HUSTON, RUTH CHATTERTON, MARY ASTOR, PAUL LUKAS, David Niven and a hundred other brilliant players, but from William Wyler's superb direction, from the powerful adaptation made by Sidney Howard, and from the beautiful production in which Samuel Goldwyn has mounted the great story of drama. Some who witness it may be inclined to see in its principal character a composite portrayal of women they know. Others may argue that no such creature of flesh and blood could exist. Essentially it is a woman's picture pointed directly at women audiences. In the title role, Rosalind Russell, essaying a wholly unsympathetic character, gives a remarkable performance. To a great degree she is the whole picture.

The picture is modern in atmosphere and production settings. Harriet Craig is a selfish, suave, iron minded wife whose only love is her house, which she keeps in meticulous show window fashion. It is her warped idea of respectability and security. Her husband must go outside to smoke. In one way or another, she alienates the affection and devotion of the aunt, Miss Austen, her servants Mrs. Harold and Mazie, neighborly Mrs. Frazier and niece, Ethel Landreth. Willful, lying, self centered and suspicious, she puts her husband into crime in order that her idea of respectability might be maintained. Finally she drives her husband from her side to be left a lonely woman in a cold, dead house.

Adapted from a Pulitzer prize winning play, the picture sticks closely to the original. No effort has been made to soften or humanize the central figure. In this manner it departs entirely from formula. Primarily it seems that the picture will meet greatest favor with women and specialized audiences. A different kind of production, it calls for other than routine showmanship. It would be advisable to see it prior to presentation, in order to fit showmanship to locale likes and dislikes.

Previewed in the Alexander theatre, Glendale. The audience, quickly sensing the theme and atmosphere, reacted favorably to the story and acclaimed Miss Russell's work wholeheartedly.

Der Kampf

(Amkino)

Russo-German Documentary Drama

Unlike the majority of films produced in Russia and distributed under Soviet auspices, this one is not limited in point of interest to Soviet sympathizers. It has in common with its source sisters, to be sure, the patent implication that the Soviet government is by wide margin the best prevailing upon this more or less troubled planet, but its primary subject matter is German and it deals with its subject in that tongue, the prints for American distribution being equipped, of course, with superimposed English captions.

The expansive term, documentary film, applies very directly. The incidents are represented as taking place in Germany before and after the Reichstag fire, for which George Dimitroff was tried and of which he was acquitted, enrolling forthwith in the forces of the Soviet. Authentic camera shots of Dimitroff, Van der Lubbe and others, made during the trial, are incorporated in the picture.

Around this historical core is built a fiction drama involving characters contemporary with the period and incidents designed to show that it is a policy of the Nazi government to counterfeit offenses against itself, such as the fire, and charge them to innocent parties for the purpose of gaining popular sympathy. The picture sets forth that the plain people resent this and resist with what success they may and in all instances heroically the brutal, unfair and altogether malicious machinations of the Nazis.

The cast is made up for the most part of German players described as exiled and enjoying sanctuary in Russia. The incidents pertaining to the Reichstag fire are offered as factual. Incidents pertaining to the fictitious family principally concerned in a melodramatic tale having to do with similar and contemporary Nazi operations, all of which are luridly melodramatic, are presented as typical of customary procedure.

Because of the language employed and the nature of the subject matter, it would seem that the picture possesses as much appeal to the German audience as to the Russian, an impression borne out by the character of the gathering present at the New York showing covered in this report. As to the spirit in which a German-American audience might be expected to receive a Russo-German indictment of the Nazi government, ornamented with an emphatic implication that the Soviet system is a far superior thing, your reporter refrains from making prognostication.

Reviewed at the Cameo theatre, dedicated to the exhibition of Russian films, which had capacity attendance on the afternoon of the third day at forty cents the copy and which echoed with applause, as is not unusual, whenever action or dialogue extolled the glories of the U. S. S. R.

(Warner)

Band Presentation

Outstanding item of this brief and somewhat brisk presentation is Bill Brady's song number. Mr. Brady has what the profession used to call pipes and makes full use of them. Vicki Joyce also sings, and Chester Fredericks dances, without spectacular result. The subject ends with Leon Navara's band showing how it would play a given number, presumably, if it were various other bands, the director tossing in a bit of piano for full if not especially good measure. Altogether, though, it isn't bad.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Porky Poultry Plant

(Warner)

Looney Tune Cartoon

Here in simple manner is depicted the improbable but engaging spectacle of porcine Porky, poultry fancier, opposing to the death one rapacious hawk and its allies. A lot of music keeps the proceedings from getting tiresome and a lot of speed helps, too. Humor is not overabundant, but action is. The thing is over before there's time to become critical about it, which is just as well.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Rush Hour Rhapsody

(Warner)

Urban Musical Novelty

For a few moments at the start of this subject there's just a trace of earnestness in depiction of the inroads busses are assumed to have made upon subway revenues. It turns out, though, that this is merely by way of setting the scene for a number of band and vaudeville numbers, represented as staged by the subway company at various stations for the purpose of entertaining passengers and thus retaining patronage. All of which adds up to equal a smart, swift and satisfying subject, sure of favorable response in the urban territories and likely to elicit the same elsewhere. Half a dozen vaudeville names appear in the cast.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Colorful Occupations

(Warner)

Occupational Study

Color may or may not enhance the appeal of this survey of occupations beyond the routine. It is employed, in any case, to photograph such things as a man who carves cocoanut shells, a woman who colors balloons, another who achieves pictures by use of leaves and that extremely regrettable fellow who molds grotesque figures which appear, ultimately and by grace of camera, on the covers of such magazines as "Esquire," which is not named in the picture. The subject matter is surefire by nature and the presentation employs understatement effectively. A nice little item for anybody's program.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Choke's On You

(Warner)

Slapstick Comedy

In the Mack Sennett pattern of long ago, down to the bathing beach episodes, and with the wrestler and boxer as they are today, this consistently loud and occasionally funny comedy is the week's test picture for showmen who hope against hope that the laughter of yesteryear is not dead but sleeping. In a word, Joe Palooka's manager matches him with the wrestling champion for a bout and Joe wins. The comedy is woven into that, some of it good and some of it not so good. It's the kind of thing that people shout about or put up with, according to the people, and about par for the series. —Running time, 21 minutes.

Vitaphone Pictorial Revue, No. 1

(Warner)

Miscellany

If you care about tap dancing or skiing, two of the four subjects combined in this short treat smartly and briefly of the technique of each. If cuisine is your weakness there's a shot of Oscar of the Waldorf superintending the preparation of a lamb stew. After which, to end the reel, gals parade furs and the color camera does its best by them. There's little relation between the subjects treated, but there's commendable restraint on the part of cutter and commentator, so that none bores.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Toy Town Hall

(Warner)

Radio Revue

Almost too briefly for complete satisfaction, an extremely virtuous fault, this cartoon in color brings to a sleeping infant a dream in which Fred Allen's radio program presents a number of the air's leading entertainers. The vocal and instrumental representations are extraordinarily expert. The plot is pleasantly simple yet adequate. The subject is of the rare kind which leaves its beholders wanting more, than which this typewriter knows no higher praise.—Running time, 7 minutes.

The following replies to section A have been selected for publication:

Dale Danielson answers thus: "I believe there are no commercial screens available that can be restored to their full reflective values by cleaning. There are, however, surfaces that may have their reflection values restored to a great extent. Even non-tarnishable metal reflectors cannot be restored to their full former reflection power by polishing or cleaning. All screen surfaces undergo chemical reactions; also dirt becomes so embedded in the pores of the material that it cannot be wholly removed."

B. DeVitti says: "Depreciation of reflective value of a screen—any screen—begins at the time of its installation in a theatre. From that time forward its reflection value is gradually lessened in direct proportion to its abuse, the locality of the theatre (air purity) and the intelligent care that is given it. It is impossible to entirely restore this loss by cleaning. None of the many different cleaning processes will restore the whole reflective power, but it nevertheless is possible to restore much of it. The reflection power of a screen surface will be less wholly restored to its original power by each subsequent cleaning."

J. R. Prater replies: "Except in the case of the plate glass "mirror" screen, of which there now are but very few in use (Are there any now?—F. H. R.), no screen surface can be so cleaned that its whole original reflection power will be restored. Invariably the cleaning process leaves an amount, perhaps small but still an amount, of the more stubborn dirt particles embedded in the surface as well as removing or damaging a portion of the surface itself.

"The glass portion of glass bead screens can be wholly restored, but the pigment between the beads suffers discoloration with age, as well as with every cleaning. Since the beads themselves are transparent, much of the reflection power of the beads is dependent upon their backing, and that, too, suffers slowly with time."

G. E. Doe replies thus, and to my mind rather perfectly: "As our teacher, Mr. Richardson, has many times told us, no screen surface can be so cleaned that its original power of reflecting light is restored, regardless of statements to the contrary. And that stands to reason, since certainly the materials used for finishing screen surfaces cannot possibly be as they were when new. In the first place, age dulls every form of pulverized matter used for such purposes. The air has a chemical action upon it and that action is such as tends to dull its reflecting power. Then, too, minute particles of dust penetrate into the screen surface and cannot be removed by any process that does not remove a considerable portion of the reflection surface itself.

"I believe, however, the dirt particles have far less effect than does chemical action. I have been told, too (and it seems not unreasonable) that there is even some loss in reflective power in the material that backs the beads in glass bead screens."

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 40

(A) What constitutes the best screen border? Please set forth your own views on this matter at length. It is a highly important item.

(B) Why are permanent grounds employed and why must all high resistance grounds be detected?

To join the Bluebook School merely send in answers. Place name and question number upon first sheet. Address F. H. Richardson, No. 3 Tudor Lane, Scarsdale, N. Y.

[I, too, have been told that, but, while it very possibly is true, I don't think the effect, if present, amounts to very much. It is a matter that could only be proven by expert measurement of reflected light from a new glass bead surface and one, say, two years old.—F. H. R.]

(B) B. L. Sanderson answers: "Using a 10 x 12 foot screen as the basic unit and the illumination per unit area of one square foot as 100 per cent, the total area would of course be $10 \times 12 = 120$ square feet, whereas the total area of a 15 x 18 screen would be $15 \times 18 = 270$ square feet.

"Since, disregarding optical system losses, the total amount of light incident upon both screens would be equal, but would be spread over a surface as large again as 270 is greater than 120, which may be expressed as 120/270, and that means the larger screen would have only 120/270, or 44 + per cent as much illumination per unit area as would the smaller one. In other words, it would be only 44 per cent as bright as would the smaller one."

W. H. Edmonds says: "A 10 x 12 foot screen has 120 square feet area. One 15 x 18 covers 270 square feet. Therefore, disregarding the optical system differences set up, the brilliancy of the two screens would be as 120 to 270, which means the larger one would have only 4/9 of the brilliancy of the smaller one. As to the losses of the optical systems necessary for the two screens, it would be influenced by so many things that estimating them is impossible unless all data be at hand." [Correct. Sorry you did not name them. The data you supplied on that was not so good.—F. H. R.]

G. Thompson says: "As screen area is increased, total light remaining the same, the light must of course cover a greater area of surface, hence it will illuminate each square foot of area less brilliantly. That is quite obvious. One of the screens named in the question has 120 square feet and the other 270 square feet of area. It then of course follows that the larger screen (total light being equal) would have brilliancy of illumination in proportion as 120 is to 270, which works out into 4/9ths or approximately 44 per cent as much for the large as for the smaller screen."

BRITISH HEAR AMBITIOUS PLANS FOR COOPERATIVE DISTRIBUTION

Associated Artists Formed by Stars, Directors and Authors to Produce with Cooperation of Various Exhibitor Groups

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

Two important schemes for new trade organizations on a cooperative basis were published in London in the first week in September.

Associated Artists Ltd. was announced by Leslie Howard and Dudley Murphy as a production organization in which stars would be directors and shareholders.

The Independent Exhibitors' Distributing Co., in a preliminary statement, made its bow as a distributing organization planned on the basis of a twenty-five per cent capitalization by theatre owners, from which the chairman and a majority of the board of directors would be selected.

Seeing in these news items the possible appearance of a British United Artists and of a British First National Circuit, or at the least of two trade organizations obviously deriving in principle from these important American precedents, members of the British trade were quick to see both developments as a sequel to the recently announced Twentieth Century Fox-MGM-Gaumont British deal.

Circuit Being Formed

Also regarded as an instance of defensive organization in face of the possible threat of the big merger to other interests was the news that a new major theatre circuit was in process of formation.

The chief names in this third significant development of a highly significant week were those of Lord Portal and J. Arthur Rank, with the name of C. M. Woolf unofficially but generally associated with this plan to place from 100 to 200 British theatres in a new group.

This is the Howard Murphy scheme of cooperative production, which has proceeded to the stage of the registration of Associated Artists, Ltd., and the announcement of a very definite policy and program in which the chief points are:

1.—A founder membership of ten, composed of four stars, three directors and three writers.

2.—Leslie Howard definitely to star in one picture a year.

3.—Dudley Murphy, director of "Emperor Jones" and "Twenty-four Hours," to be chief director.

4.—Anna Sten and her husband, Eugene Frenke, to dissolve their present company and to join Associated Artists.

5.—Hugh Walpole, famous British author and screen author of "David Copperfield," to be scenario editor and to write exclusively for Associated Artists.

6.—"Riviera," by Franz Molnar, and "Bonnie Prince Charlie," from a Walpole script, scheduled as the first two Leslie Howard vehicles. The second to be directed in color by Dudley Murphy.

7.—Other stories already lined up, "King for a Day," from a story by Dashiell Hammett, author of "The Thin Man," and "The Martyr," by Liam O'Flaherty. James Hilton, author of the three current film productions, "Knight Without Armour," "Lost Horizon" and "Goodbye, Mr. Chips," also to write for the organization.

8.—A total of 15 pictures to be made in the next two years at a cost of £675,000; three major productions to cost £85,000 each and 12 others to cost £35,000 each.

Ultimate Policy Divulged

Filling in these details at the press party at Dudley Murphy's Park Lane flat, at which the story was broken, Messrs. Murphy and Howard, the latter on the eve of his return to New York for the stage production of "Hamlet," to be followed by two Warner pictures, stated that the ultimate intention was that all the principals of Associated Artists would devote their services exclusively to the company, once present contractual obligations in other quarters had been taken care of.

That the production of Associated Artists would probably be located at the new Amalgamated Studios, erected by Soskin, Major Bell interests at Elstree, was a further statement; added was that it was intended to start operations in November, that a permanent staff of technicians would be assembled, and that an occasional picture might be made in Hollywood.

Weigh Distribution Offers

On the important point of distribution it was stated definitely that two good offers by major concerns were being considered and suggested that, on his New York trip, Howard might have something to do with negotiations in this direction.

This last statement from Dudley Murphy was in reply to a HERALD question about the rumored association of this new producing group with the Independent Exhibitors' Distributing Company, project of Capt. A. C. N. Dixey in combination with various leading members of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association. Mr. Murphy said definitely that Associated Artists was not committed to the Dixey scheme. With equal precision he admitted that the matter had been discussed and that no decision had been made for or against.

A clue to the general scheme of the Independent Exhibitors' Distributing Company was to be found in this statement.

All that is known about this organization officially is that it proposes to establish a distributing organization, with a line-up of 20 or more pictures yearly from various sources of independent British production, and that the constitution of the company calls for a contribution of 25 per cent of the capital of the company by exhibitors. With a total capital of £100,000, and an exhibitor contribution of £25,000 of this amount, the individual contribution (per theatre) would be only £50 if even 500 exhibitors joined up.

A strong exhibitor influence in the control of the company is aimed at by a provision that the chairman of the board shall be a leading theatre man and that three other exhibitors shall be directors, with an expert on distribution, a production expert and a financial director.

Independent Exhibitors Distributing Company To Ask Theatre Owner Investment Equaling Fourth of Total Capital

No compulsion to take the company's product will be imposed on exhibitors, whose obligation is to be limited to the original small capital investment.

Inferred in the letter which the I. E. D. C. circulated to exhibitors with an invitation to attend a meeting, to hear the full scheme, at the Balmoral Rooms, Trocadero, on Sept. 9th, was that the company had a guarantee of 15 first-class features and six super-productions a year from established production units.

Private information is that the promoters have scheduled Associated Artists to provide six pictures a year; Ensign Productions, two Paul Robeson films; six, including two supers, from Liberty Films; three from Bebe Daniels and Ben Lyon; three or four from Franco-London, producers of "Guilty Melody."

Investigations prompted by the obviously very tentative negotiations between the new organization and the first of these companies suggest the production basis of the I. E. D. C. schemes to be generally provisional at this time. Wardour Street opinion is that if the new organization gets the enthusiastic backing of exhibitors as a body it can probably get all the product it wants.

Trade Situation Favorable

A better indication of the probable reception of the scheme by exhibitors is to be found in the trade situation underlying its origin. This cooperative plan was first definitely heard of at Eastbourne, where a Summer Conference of the C. E. A. this year largely concerned itself with film prices and the allegedly oppressive methods of film distributors.

Interested in the scheme, though not necessarily associated with it, are President Fligelstone and Vice-president Metcalfe of the C. E. A., Jack Prendergast, hard-hitting orator of the organization, and, it is believed, Major A. J. Gale, of H. & G. Kinemas. Their interest, it is assumed, is that of officers of a trade association bound to investigate all measures suggested as in the interests of its members

Theatre Invasion Continues

Meanwhile, with this possibility of an exhibitor invasion of distribution only in the air, interests associated with distribution and production continue placidly to invade the theatre field. The Portal-Rank-Woolf extensions, previously mentioned, will give screen time under direct control to the Universal and other products handled by General Film Distributors and will be a link in a studio-distribution-theatre tieup with the production end centered at the new Pinewood studios.

IN THE BRITISH STUDIOS

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

Signs the Navy

Herbert Wilcox is to make, under the title "The Navy Eternal," a subject which, with a fictional background, will aim chiefly to illustrate the activities of the British sea service in all its branches. Cooperation of the Board of Admiralty is being given on the most lavish scale, the Wilcox unit at the naval base at Scapa Flow having in effect the whole British fleet at its disposal, from the latest battleships down to destroyers and submarines.

The story has been written by "Bartimeus," who won the reputation of a sort of Naval Kipling during the War, and hinges on the rescue of British subjects from a country in revolution. Norman Walker is to direct.

It is planned that Sir Guy Standing play the part of a British Consul, with Anna Neagle probably scheduled for the leading feminine role, as his daughter.

The first activity of the Wilcox unit will be to film the Autumn maneuvers from privileged viewpoints on ships of all classes.

The current Wilcox production, "London Melody," with Anna Neagle and Tullio Carminati, was to be transferred to the Pinewood studios this week as the first film to go on the floor there. The first three weeks' work was done at the B. I. P. studio, Elstree.

Dialogue for this picture has been written by Monckton Hoffe, and in the cast are Robert Douglas, Horace Hedges, Arthur Chesney and Sebastian Smith.

Shots and Big Shots

A gun fight in a department store was staged at Worton Hall a day or two ago for Criterion's "The Thousand Windows." Margot Grahame, Rene Ray, Basil Sydney and Joseph Cawthorne are the chief players. They fired two thousand rounds without breaking one of the thousand windows—perhaps because they were all blank rounds. Matched with the studio shots were exteriors of the Harvey Nicholls store at Kensington, with honest to goodness shoppers acting as extras without their knowledge and without any strain on the cost sheet.

Football

British football—which is decidedly different from the American variety—is to provide the atmosphere in a new British Lion picture, "Playing the Game," with Sandy Powell featured. Powell is a big comedian in the North of England, where they take their football very seriously. New in this picture will be sidelights on the football pools, gigantic sweepstakes which have the majority of the male population filling in coupons every week. Associated with British Lion in this production is Tom Arnold, ace pantomime producer in the provinces. Gina Malo is the woman star.

Three of six girls under contract to London Films to be groomed for stardom are Nina Keech, Marian Everall and Peta Mannering. At the moment they're frolicking at the River Colne which weaves through the Denham studio grounds.

Concentrating for the moment on exteriors on the ground of the famous Sheffield Wednesday football club, Herbert Smith, director of "Playing the Game," was to bring the unit to Beaconsfield for interiors on completion of the Ben Lyon-Bebe Daniels "Murder in the Stalls."

Fine Weather

Brilliant sunshine helped production of exteriors for the Miriam Hopkins "Triangle," at Denham Court, an old world mansion close to the London Films studio. The scene was a reconstruction of Hyde Park, made realistic by the sheep, loungers, lunch-hour oarsmen and other familiar features of that part of the London pageant.

Also to be used as background in this Walter Reisch-directed feature are Fleet Street, the Royal Academy, West End theatreland and some of the luxury hotels best known to American visitors. Sebastian Shaw, in the role of an actor, is opposite Miss Hopkins.

London Films, seeking the most of the weather, during the past ten days has completed "Rembrandt" exteriors and put into the can the thousand-crowd scene of "Fire Over England," which shows Queen Elizabeth reviewing the troops whose job it is to meet the Spanish Armada.

Racing Film

The Sir Arthur Conan Doyle "Silver Blaze," one of the Sherlock Holmes stories, is to go on the floor at Twickenham on September 23rd, Arthur Wontner repeating his famous impersonation of the great detective. Thomas Bentley will direct.

With a famous racehorse as one of the chief characters, "Silver Blaze" will have a plentiful sporting atmosphere in its backgrounds. Also promised is that H. Fowler Mear, adaptor, will bring in Inspector Lestrade, the sinister Professor Moriarty and Sir Henry Baskerville, of "Hound" fame, from the popular range of characters in the Holmes stories.

Finished for the Twickenham organization is Henry Edwards' "Beauty and the Barge," with Gordon Harker and Judy Gunn. Final exteriors were at Bournemouth.

Also completed is the Edward Everett Horton "The Man in the Mirror," and Horton has returned to Hollywood. Last sequences handled by Maurice Elvey, at the J. H. Studios, Elstree, were in a night club setting, and "Bubbles" Stewart did special numbers.

Itemized

Margot Grahame made her last shot for Criterion's "The Thousand Windows" four hours before sailing for New York. . . . Joe Rock's "Cotton Queen" unit is back in London after shooting greyhound racing sequences at Bellevue, Manchester. . . . J. Elder Wills, who directed the Robeson "Song of Freedom" for Hammer-British Lion, now is managed exclusively by Dave Bader. . . . Miles Mander is leaving to play the part of an insurance underwriter in the Twentieth Century-Fox "Lloyd's of London.". . . Dave Burns and Edmon Ryan were arrested for speeding while playing a scene for Criterion. . . . Tay Garnett was in story conferences with John Balderston for his British picture at Worton Hall. . . . The "Wings of the Morning" camera unit put in two extra weeks in Ireland getting more color exteriors for background use. . . . Marie Tempest made her first scenes for the Paderewski "Moonlight Sonata" at Denham. . . . The Goodwood race course grand stand was reproduced at ATP studio, Ealing, for the Sinclair Hill Grosvenor feature, "Take a Chance.". . . Elizabeth Bergner's "Dreaming Lips," at Denham, is being given London backgrounds in place of the Berlin setting of the first film of the title. . . . Roland Young is over his food-poisoning and has obtained his labor permit for "Tzigane" for Warner-First National.

PRODUCERS POOL 46 PATENTS AS FIRST STEP TO WHOLESALE ACTION

First Result of Move in Field of Composite Photography Is to Settle Dunning - Pomeroy Patents Case Out of Court

A patents pool through which the processes and devices used in the field of composite photography are to be made available to every bona fide producer of motion pictures upon payment of a fee sufficient to cover only the cost of acquisition or development of a particular process, has been set up by the Hollywood studios which own or control the rights to 46 important patents in this field. The move is regarded as generally important in that it is the first attempt to organize such a pool in the motion picture industry and may be the forerunner of similar agreements covering all technical improvements in screen production.

The pool is the result of an idea first broached by Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, in his annual report for 1933 when he proposed free circulation of technical advances in the industry in a manner similar to that in which automobile patents are made available to all manufacturers in the motor industry.

The first immediate result of the pool has been to effect an out of court settlement of litigation involving Paramount Productions, Inc.; Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc.; United Research Corporation, a Warner subsidiary; the Dunning Process Company and Roy J. Pomeroy, owners of patents covering various methods of composite photography.

RKO Studios, Inc., RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 20th Century-Fox Film Corporation, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures Corporation, Universal Pictures Company, Inc., Columbia Pictures Corporation, United Artists Corporation, Educational Films Corporation and Hal Roach Studios, Inc., are signers of the agreement in addition to Paramount and Warner, although they do not control any of the patents.

The litigation, for which application for withdrawal has been made in federal court in Los Angeles under the terms of the agreement, affected every studio since a court ruling in any of the five separate suits filed would have placed all companies using the processes in the position of being liable for damages running into millions of dollars.

Under the pooling agreement, effective for ten years, all participating studios except Paramount and Warner will make an initial payment to a central fund which will be turned over to Paramount for final payment of $35,000 to Roy Pomeroy and the Dunning Process Company for the rights in the patents as co-owners. An additional fund of $20,000 for legal expenses also will be collected.

The companies then agree to grant each other licenses for the use of the patents now in force and, further, to make available to each other any patents they may acquire in the future. In this case provision is made for the payment of a fair proportion of the purchase price if the patent has been purchased from others or a share of the cost of developing and patenting the invention if it is the result of research and development.

The licenses are to be royalty-free, nonexclusive, personal, non-assignable and for the full term of the patents. The 46 patents listed as now in force cover all the important processes developed for composite photography, or the combining in a single film of a number of scenes or objects which previously have been photographed separately. They include 33 domestic and 13 foreign patents contributed as follows:

Paramount: one American, one English, one French; Pomeroy, as co-owner with Paramount: eight American, two German, two French, two English; Warner: 17 American, three English; United Research: four American, two English; Fox: two American, and RKO: three applications for American patents.

To afford an opportunity to all producers to use the process involved, whether or not they have signed the agreement, the companies agree to grant a license similar to the ones they exchange among themselves to any bona fide producer who applies for it. The same conditions agreed to by the signers will obtain in the granting of such licenses.

One of the principal clauses of the agreement provides for the settlement of any future claims by arbitration hearings with any licensee under the terms of the pool being privileged to demand arbitration of any dispute by giving the MPPDA office written notice of its complaint. Mr. Hays then will appoint a panel of nine arbitrators from whom the disputants can select three members to adjudicate the claim. Their decision will be final in all cases.

If the pool is successful it is believed that attempts will be made toward similar pooling of patents covering other processes of production now in use or to be developed. Studio engineers and technicians say that such cooperation will have a beneficial effect on research in that it will stimulate the free exchange of ideas between the studios.

Print of "Ecstasy" Disappears After Trial of Exhibitor

Judge Marion D. Waltner of the Kansas City circuit court who, on September 10th, heard the trial of Breckenridge Fagin, manager of the Royal theatre, on charges of showing an immoral picture and of showing a film without a permit from the censor, has cited the police director, the city manager, the city counselor and the superintendent of the police property room to appear before him and show cause why they should not be held in contempt of court because they had not returned the print of "Ecstasy," the picture which caused the court action, to its owners.

At the trial the jury freed Mr. Fagin on the charges that the picture was immoral but fined him $35 and costs for showing a film without a tag from the city censor, Guy Holmes. The print of the picture, confiscated by the police when they arrested the theatre operator on August 27th, has not been seen since the trial.

Otto P. Higgins, police director, said he did not know where the film was but that he would try to find it. He added that he was fishing in Canada when the confiscation took place. The other city officials did not appear in answer to the court citation.

Lieutenant Leo D. Mullin, in charge of the police property room, said that so far as he knows "Ecstasy" was never in his charge. Robert J. Coffey, chief of police, pointed out that he, too, was away when the picture was seized.

Joshua Barbee, an assistant city counselor, asserted that he knew nothing about the film. He said, however, that he had a letter from Roy Rucker, attorney for the theatre, who said he had lost a note from Marcy K. Brown, lawyer for the city in the trial of Mr. Fagin, admitting that the city had received the film. This, Mr. Barbee said, might be interpreted as a receipt acknowledgment. But Mr. Brown denied ever having given the theatre a receipt.

H. F. McElroy, city manager, who has asserted that the picture "won't be shown in Kansas City," doesn't know anything about the film either.

Operators of the theatre still are uncertain as to whether they will continue plans to seek a court order requiring the city censor to give the film a permit. In the meantime Judge Waltner has given Mr. Higgins more time to look for the print.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Columbia

ABDUL THE DAMNED: Nils Asther, Adriene Ames—Don't be fooled into buying this waste of a date. That is what it was for me. It just isn't entertainment. Running time, 80 minutes. Played September 5-6.—H. M. Gerber, Roxy Theatre, Hazelton, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

COUNTERFEIT: Chester Morris, Margot Grahame—This was a mighty entertaining little picture. Pleased my patrons and that's what I am trying to do. You don't need to be ashamed to run this one; everyone seems to like these action pictures. Running time, 74 minutes. Played September 1.—L. C. Denton, Rex Theatre, Caliente, Nev. Small town patronage.

DEVIL'S SQUADRON: Richard Dix, Karen Morley—A thrilling story of the pilots who do stunt flying to test out new inventions and improvements to airplanes. Pictures based on aeroplane stories never fail to draw a good business in this locality, and this was no exception to the rule. There is little comedy relief in the feature, so accompanying program should be light and humorous. Running time, 79 minutes. Played August 5-8.—William Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

FORBIDDEN TRAIL: Buck Jones, Barbara Weeks—Another swell reissue western, which is what I said on the last five or six if memory serves correctly. Running time, 65 minutes. Played September 6-8.—C. E. Fismer, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

IF YOU COULD ONLY COOK: Herbert Marshall, Jean Arthur—I was a little skeptical about this one but after the first showing I was sorry I didn't get behind it with a bigger advertising expenditure, as it is a very fine picture. Not a kick registered, and plenty of praise. A better picture than the one preceding it, which I paid just twice as much for. Running time, 72 minutes. Played September 4-5.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town and rural patronage.

KING STEPS OUT, THE: Grace Moore, Franchot Tone—Grand production. Should do business.—Rudolph J. Covi, Covi's Theatre, Herminie, Pa. Small town patronage.

LOVE ME FOREVER: Grace Moore, Leo Carrillo—Shoved back until we could duck it no longer. Not the type for us. Running time, 92 minutes. Played August 26-27.—C. E. Fismer, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

MEET NERO WOLFE: Edward Arnold—A mystery melodrama in which the theme is developed in a unique and novel manner. Lionel Stander and Edward Arnold provide excellent foils for each other and their dialogue provides many good audience laughs. Business was good and the picture seemed to have the faculty of pleasing both sexes of all ages. Running time, 70 minutes. Played August 27-29.—William Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

MINE WITH THE IRON DOOR, THE: Richard Arlen, Cecilia Parker—I can't say very much for this picture; they must be running short of story material when they have to use this kind of stuff. I always liked to read Harold Bell Wright's stories, but for some reason, when they try to put them on the screen, they lose the something which made the story interesting. Running time, 68 minutes. Played August 28-29.—H. M. Gerber, Roxy Theatre, Hazelton, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

MR. DEEDS GOES TO TOWN: Gary Cooper, Jean Arthur—If a medal were to be awarded for the most entertaining picture of the current year, the honor would certainly go to this feature. It's the kind of a picture that should have a long running time inasmuch as patrons go out talking and building future patronage. Running time, 116 minutes. Played August 23-25.—William Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

PRIDE OF THE MARINES: Charles Bickford, Florence Rice—This is a very nice little story, very well done. The hot weather raised Cain with the receipts, but that was no fault of the picture. Running time, 66 minutes. Played August 15-16.—H. M. Gerber, Roxy Theatre, Hazelton, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

PUBLIC MENACE, THE: Jean Arthur, George Murphy—Pleased everyone. We cater to a class that enjoys action western product. Running time, 73 minutes. Played August 26-27.—C. E. Fismer, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

YOU MAY BE NEXT: Ann Sothern, Lloyd Nolan—Dandy radio story which provoked much favorable comment. Find that Columbia program is best human interest program for our patrons that one can buy, and we don't have to put a second mortgage on the building to pick up the C. O. D. Their specials are bonafide and not the usual three guesses. Keep up the good work. Running time, 69 minutes. Played August 2-4.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

First National

BRIDES ARE LIKE THAT: Ross Alexander, Anita Louise—A swell little picture. Pleased 90 per cent of patrons. Alexander rapidly becoming a favorite. Business above average both days. My opinion is an exhibitor won't go wrong on this one for good program picture. Plenty of laughs. Running time, 67 minutes. Played August 13-14.—C. J. Hubley, Jr., Cameo Theatre, Tallulah, La. Rural and small town patronage.

BRIDES ARE LIKE THAT: Anita Louise, Ross Alexander—Here's a little picture with no name drawing power that will make a real hit in any small town if you'll work out some stunt that will bring them in. It went over with a bang here. Lots of clever lines, a good down-to-earth theme. Just entertainment for the folks, that's all. Running time, seven reels. Played August 26-27.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

CHINA CLIPPER: Pat O'Brien, Beverly Roberts—Best airplane story to come out of the west yet. Very good story. Played September 6-7.—A. J. Simmons, Plaza Theatre, Lamar, Mo. General patronage.

EARTHWORM TRACTORS: Joe E. Brown, June Travis—Didn't do as much business as I have on some other Joe Brown pictures but "Earthworm Tractors" seemed to please and the audience got several good hearty laughs. Running time, 68 minutes. Played August 23-24.—C. R. Gregg, Liberty Theatre, Caney, Kan. General patronage.

GOLDEN ARROW, THE: Bette Davis, George Brent—Not liked, although well acted. Bette Davis unpopular here. Played August 26-27.—A. B. Jefferis, Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

HEARTS DIVIDED: Marion Davies, Dick Powell—Dick Powell is slipping here and this weak picture did not help him any. Better play it as a programmer and it will probably get by all right. Running time, 81 minutes. Played August 16-17.—C. R. Gregg, Liberty Theatre, Caney, Kan. General patronage.

HEARTS DIVIDED: Marion Davies, Dick Powell—Here is a swell picture from every standpoint. It did not make money, but the work of every member of the cast is excellent and Miss Davies does some wonderful work. Don't get the idea that Miss Davies is through, or that this picture will hurt Dick Powell. Regardless of what many exhibitors are saying about this picture it's a fine piece of merchandise, and swell entertainment.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

LOVE BEGINS AT TWENTY: Warren Hull, Patricia Ellis—A nice little comedy drama which registers a good many hearty laughs from the audience and seemed to give good satisfaction. Owing to the short running time, it should be played on a double bill. Running time, 58 minutes.—C. R. Gregg, Liberty Theatre, Caney, Kan. General patronage.

SINGING KID, THE: Al Jolson—Al Jolson all the way through. Too much Jolson. Poor attendance second night. Played August 23-24.—A. B. Jefferis, Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

WHITE ANGEL, THE: Kay Francis—Not a big drawing card nor the big special this company has allocated to it. Looks like they failed to make a picture this year in the allocation and moved this one up. It is fine entertainment for those who prefer good substantial fare but not for the rank and file. Can't see where there is much cost in production either. Running time, 91 minutes. Played August 30-31-September 1.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

WHITE ANGEL, THE: Kay Francis—A ladies' picture. The women folks came back the second night and had a good cry all over again. It must be good when they will come back and bring their friends to see it the second time.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

Gaumont-British

FIRST A GIRL: Jessie Matthews, Sonnie Hale—No business but a fine picture. This little lady is there with the goods. I bought this very reasonable and it's a good thing I did.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

ABSOLUTE QUIET: Irene Hervey, Lionel Atwill—Quite a picture for those who saw it but nothing in the title, the cast or anything else to get them in to see it. Why do producers have to make several of these each year? Running time, 71 minutes. Played August 26-27.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936: Jack Benny, Eleanor Powell—A swell show which did not draw for us. Can't see why, because the show is very, very good. Eleanor Powell is better dancer than Ginger Rogers, and that is saying a lot. Jack Benny just as good as Fred Astaire, so we are passing another good show up with poor business. It is O. K. You can step on the advertising and they will be thanking you for it.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

DAVID COPPERFIELD: All Star Cast—This picture drew a large crowd and pleased 100 per cent. A splendid picture that followed the original story very closely. Running time, 13 reels. Played August 14-15.—J. P. Johnson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

FURY: Sylvia Sidney, Spencer Tracy—The most dramatic picture of the year. It has the punch. Positively terrific. Running time, 94 minutes.—Rudolph J. Covi, Covi's Theatre, Herminie, Pa. Small town patronage.

HIS BROTHER'S WIFE: Robert Taylor, Barbara Stanwyck—Good business first night but flopped the second. Old story. Running time, 91 minutes. Played August 30-31.—Geo. F. Smith, Lyric Theatre, Lapeer, Mich. Small town and rural patronage.

NO MORE LADIES: Joan Crawford, Robert Montgomery—A very entertaining, smart-set picture with a lot of gags over our customers' heads. Fair business but prestige to your house.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

SAN FRANCISCO: Clark Gable, Jeanette MacDonald, Spencer Tracy—Sure fire hit that can't miss. Gable has the goods. Jeanette simply gorgeous. Not only does she have a voice, but she's beautiful and grand. If the Grand Canyon has anything on her, it certainly is America's beauty spot. Gene, you lucky dog. I'll have a cigar on you right now. Running time, 11 minutes.—Rudolph J. Covi, Covi's Theatre, Herminie, Pa. Small town patronage.

SAN FRANCISCO: Clark Gable, Jeanette Mac-

Donald—Biggest business this summer. Running time, 111 minutes. Played August 2-3.—Geo. F. Smith, Lyric Theatre, Lapeer, Mich. Small town and rural patronage.

SMALL TOWN GIRL: Janet Gaynor, Robert Taylor—Robert Taylor seems to be building here, and this picture may help Janet Gaynor regain some of her popularity. Played August 29-31.—A. B. Jefferis, Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

SMALL TOWN GIRL: Janet Gaynor, Robert Taylor—One of the best pictures of the year. Made to order for the small town. Very good story, excellent cast and well produced. Had been shown at all surrounding towns so the box office was nothing to write home about, but it pleased one hundred per cent. Running time, 106 minutes. Played September 5-6.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

SPEED: Wendy Barrie, James Stewart—Another nice program picture with a dandy cast and very interesting shots of the inside of an automobile manufacturing company. And this little Barrie girl isn't so bad, either. Running time, 72 minutes. Played September 4-5.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

THREE WISE GUYS: Robert Young, Betty Furness—A couple of weeks ago a salesman for a small distributing company pointed with scorn to this picture and one other MGM subject we were about to use. We can't see his argument. This was a swell program picture thoroughly enjoyed by all. Why don't they give that cute little Furness girl some more parts? Running time, 75 minutes. Played September 2-3.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

TROUBLE FOR TWO: Robert Montgomery, Rosalind Russell—This one is terrible. Montgomery slipping fast. A few pictures like this one and Russell will be through. Too bad, we predicted great things for her. They walked out on this one, not in pairs, but in bunches. I am still trying to explain to my patrons how it all happened. If you have this one booked either cancel or take a vacation. Running time, 75 minutes. Played August 31.—L. C. Denton, Rex Theatre, Caliente, Nev. Small town patronage.

Mitchell Leichter

TRAIL'S END: Conway Tearle—Might develop into a good bet for Westerns. At least, Tearle can act. A little improvement on direction and production would have put this close to the top in westerns. Running time, 54 minutes. Played September 4-5.—C. E. Fismer, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

Paramount

EARLY TO BED: Mary Boland, Charles Ruggles—Just a fair comedy drama. Rather interesting where Beatty, the bridegroom, goes strolling in his sleep and becomes involved in a jewel robbery. You will get some chuckles if you happen to get a fair sized crowd. Running time, 73 minutes. Played August 20.—C. R. Gregg, Liberty Theatre, Caney, Kan. General patronage.

GIRL OF THE OZARKS, THE: Virginia Weidler—This picture seemed to give very good satisfaction. The second day's business was almost as good as the first. This little Virginia Weidler is a grand little actress. Book it and boost it. Running time, 68 minutes. Played August 25-26.—C. R. Gregg, Liberty Theatre, Caney, Kan. General patronage.

HOPALONG CASSIDY: Bill Boyd—Almost as good as the Autrys but not for us. Very good for any town where good, clean action and not guns and murders are appreciated. Keep 'em coming. Played September 5.—A. J. Simmons, Plaza Theatre, Lamar, Mo. General patronage.

IT'S A GREAT LIFE: Joe Morrison, Rosalind Keith—C. C. C. propaganda. Only fair. Chic Sale's comedy helps. Running time, 65 minutes. Played August 16-18.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

POPPY: W. C. Fields, Rochelle Hudson—Best Fields yet for us. Pleased our Saturday folks and sent 'em home laughing. Good stills, use 'em. A boy by name of MacAlpin made them and they are good. Played September 5.—A. J. Simmons, Plaza Theatre, Lamar, Mo. General patronage.

PRINCESS COMES ACROSS, THE: Carole Lombard, Fred MacMurray—A very nice program picture allocated to us at too much money. These two make a dandy pair and they had excellent support. Running time, 76 minutes. Played September 6-7.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

RHYTHM ON THE RANGE: Bing Crosby—Here is one that will please everyone, big, little, old and young. It's a good show.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

ROSE OF THE RANCHO: Gladys Swarthout, John Boles—Good show of the Mexican western kind. Gladys Swarthout good actress and this show should please the ladies as well as the men. It is a musical western. Lots of singing and music. O. K. for any night. Running time, nine reels. Played August 28-29.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

Rudolph J. Covi, Covi's Theatre, Herminie, Pa.
Robert Schwall, Jr., State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D.
H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas.
Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark.

Read the reports of these showmen in "What the Picture Did for Me."

ROSE OF THE RANCHO: Gladys Swarthout, John Boles—This one fooled us. They stood in line for the box office to open and were we surprised and delighted. Held up second day nicely. Miss Swarthout is a sure enough singer and can also act. Thank you, Mister Paramount. Running time, 80 minutes. Played August 5-6.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

SKY PARADE, THE: Jimmy Allen, Katharine De Mille—Just a nice program picture with no drawing power whatsoever. How many of these did Paramount have this year? Running time, 70 minutes. Played August 28-29.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

TEXAS RANGERS, THE: Fred MacMurray, Jean Parker—A splendid show. Good entertainment and well received. A lot of favorable comment. Running time, 99 minutes. Played August 30-September 1.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Thaetre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

Republic

COMIN' ROUND THE MOUNTAIN: Gene Autry, Ann Rutherford, Smiley Burnette—My first Autry and the folks did not seem to care so much for it. Smiley Burnette fine.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

GENTLEMAN FROM LOUISIANA, THE: Eddie Quillan, Charlotte Henry—Eddie Quillan returns to the screen in this story of the race track in the golden days of sportsmanship, and scores strongly as an ambitious jockey with revolutionary racing ideas. The assigning of Quillan to this role entitles the casting department to a big bow, as this diminutive player was never more convincing. The story is entertaining, although it departs very little from the accepted race horse story formula. Both photography and sound are better than average. Our patrons welcomed the return of Quillan as a lead and seemed well pleased with the picture.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

GUNS AND GUITARS: Gene Autry, Dorothy Dix—It takes westerns to pull us out of the hole and Gene usually does a little better than some of the rest, and this picture is 'way above the average in entertainment. Running time, six reels. Played August 28-29.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town and rural patronage.

MELODY TRAIL: Gene Autry, Ann Rutherford—Enough music in this western to class it as tops entertainment and should appeal to any type audience. Action, love and romance combined to give it the necessary advantage over regular westerns. Running time, six reels. Played August 14-15.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town and rural patronage.

RETURN OF JIMMY VALENTINE, THE: Roger Pryor, Charlotte Henry—Good program picture. Lots of comedy and a little action. Running time, 62 minutes. Played September 2-3.—C. E. Fismer, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

SINGING COWBOY, THE: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette—Here is a series that is outstanding in gross and pleasing to the public. Anyone who thinks these boys are not the tops in westerns is "nerts." As far as our town is concerned play 'em and beg for more. Don't forget Frankie Marvin when you play them. Running time, 58 minutes. Played August 8.—A. J. Simmons, Plaza Theatre, Lamar, Mo. General patronage.

$1,000 A MINUTE: Roger Pryor, Leila Hyams—The audience kicked about it being too short. Now that's a new one for me, but I guess they enjoyed it. We ran it on Bank Night. However, it would stand up for two nights anywhere. Running time, 69 minutes. Played August 27.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town and rural patronage.

RKO Radio

ANOTHER FACE: Wallace Ford, Phyllis Brooks—This picture caused diversified opinions. Got by. Columbia has better ones.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

BECKY SHARP: Miriam Hopkins—Put off the punishment as long as possible. Technicolor, and that is all to be said except that this dud special pretty nearly ruined us. Costume pictures are poison for us, anyway, and after the first murderous blasts from the few departing patrons, we hurriedly left for parts unknown for the balance of the engagement. RKO may have meant well, but suffering cats! Running time, 90 minutes. Played August 28-29.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

BRIDE WALKS OUT, THE: Barbara Stanwyck, Gene Raymond—Don't be afraid to let your patrons know you have a swell show for them. They will all leave with a smile, which makes you glad you are a showman. That boy, Raymond, is sure up and coming, and Ned Sparks did not hurt the show a bit. Running time, 80 minutes. Played August 22-23.—H. M. Gerber, Roxy Theatre, Hazelton, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

CHATTERBOX: Anne Shirley, Phillips Holmes—Very ungood. They walked out in fours with a $60 Bank Night. Wasted talent. Lay off it. Even a transfusion will not improve its drawing ability.—C. F. Dean, Dunbar Theatre, Dunbar, W. Va. General patronage.

EX-MRS. BRADFORD, THE: William Powell, Jean Arthur—We had the stars in this one, but the story was not so hot; anyway, it did not do any business for us. Running time, 81 minutes. Played August 8-9.—H. M. Gerber, Roxy Theatre, Hazelton, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

I DREAM TOO MUCH: Lily Pons, Henry Fonda—Just a fair program. Lily Pons good talker, but her foreign dialect don't register very good. No business and glad of it. Won't have as many kicks coming. Running time, 11 reels. Played August 26.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

IN PERSON: Ginger Rogers, George Brent—Good picture. Brent better than usual in this.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

LAST OUTLAW, THE: Harry Carey, Hoot Gibson—This is one of the best westerns I have shown for some time. Story good, acting good, photography good, recording good and pleased my patrons 90 per cent. Give us some more of this type of western. Running time. 73 minutes. Played August 24.—L. C. Denton, Rex Theatre, Caliente, Nev. Small town patronage.

LET'S SING AGAIN: Bobby Breen, Henry Armetta—This lad is some singer and has a wonderful personality and Armetta is some comedian. This picture held up well for two nights and seemed to please the majority of my patrons. Running time, 68 minutes. Played August 25-26.—L. C. Denton, Rex Theatre, Caliente, Nev. Small town patronage.

LOVE ON A BET: Gene Raymond, Wendy Barrie —Good picture but not the special they sold it to be. Just worth program price.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

POWDER SMOKE RANGE: Hoot Gibson, Boots Mallory—Lots of western stars for our western fans, that played usual business. The star value is greater than some westerns.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Supreme

BRANDED A COWARD: Johnny Mack Brown—O. K. if you use the lower bracket westerns. Running time, 58 minutes. Played August 28-29.—C. E. Fismer, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

CAPTAIN JANUARY: Shirley Temple, Guy Kibbee—One of the best Temples to date. Kibbee and Summerville almost stole the show. They should use Summerville more than they do. To me he is one of the outstanding comedians, always was, even in silent days. Kibbee and Summerville would make a great pair to use in future productions. Shirley is always good and is getting better all the time. Running time, 77 minutes. Played August 27-28.—L. C. Denton, Rex Theatre, Caliente, Nev. Small town patronage.

CONNECTICUT YANKEE, A: Will Rogers, Myrna Loy, Maureen O'Sullivan—Ran this show on a repeat engagement as a reissue and did not do the business that we should. Sunday night fair but Monday nothing doing. Show is O. K. because of Rogers but we never can get any business on any second showing regardless of show. Running time, nine reels. Played August 23-24.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

CONNECTICUT YANKEE, A: Will Rogers, Myrna Loy—The beloved Will Rogers is still held in great esteem by the patrons of this theatre, as this drew above average. While this was made several years ago, the recording is good and the picture as a whole pleased very much.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

COUNTRY BEYOND, THE: Rochelle Hudson, Paul Kelly—An excellent production that failed at the box office through no fault of the picture. A county band concert the first night and a wind and rain the second night made this one take an undeserved nosedive. An interesting story, good acting and beautiful scenery. Will please any audience if you can get them in. And don't forget Buck, the dog, here. He takes up a very large part of the stage. Running time, 68 minutes. Played August 26-27.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

COUNTRY BEYOND, THE: Rochelle Hudson—Nice little picture of the outdoors. James Oliver Curwood story and find that advertising the outdoor helps this type of film. Ordinary westerns seem to have lost popularity with the lady patrons, especially, but good stories with good casts will always click. Running time, 68 minutes. Played August 23-25.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

COUNTRY BEYOND, THE: Rochelle Hudson—An exceptionally good outdoor North Wood picture that made a few of the so called "highbrows" admit that they could enjoy a Saturday show. Thoroughly enjoyed it here and should be anywhere if spotted right. Running time, seven reels. Played August 29.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

COUNTRY BEYOND, THE: Rochelle Hudson, Paul Kelly—A real good Northwest mounted police drama. Buck, the dog, proves a real hero. Fall weather helped business and the picture satisfied.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

COUNTRY DOCTOR, THE: Dionne Quintuplets, Jean Hersholt, Dorothy Peterson—Very fine show. No business to speak of, due to epidemic of paralysis.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

COUNTRY DOCTOR, THE: Dionne Quintuplets, Jean Hersholt, Dorothy Peterson—Not as big as exloitation, but different and good draw at box office. A women's picture. Slim Summerville and the quintuplets outstanding. Understand this picture got Papa Dionne sore. Thinks director made a joke out of him. "Papa" has it on them all in some respects, and is some kidder himself—five at a time. Played August 7-8.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

EVERYBODY'S OLD MAN: Irvin S. Cobb—Just so much film. Story old and the audience knew just what was going to happen next. Played September 2-3.—A. B. Jefferis, Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

FIRST BABY, THE: Shirley Deane, Johnny Downs —Ran this one on Bank Night and gave great satisfaction. If you get a crowd you will get the laughs. I would say that Johnny Downs had a pretty tough mother-in-law to deal with. Running time, 74 minutes. Played August 27.—C. R. Gregg, Liberty Theatre, Caney, Kan. General patronage.

GENTLE JULIA: Jane Withers—One of her best. Jane Withers is not a big drawing card, but her pictures please. Played August 28-29.—A. B. Jefferis, Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

GENTLE JULIA: Jane Withers—Delightful, laughful, perhaps the best this supposedly lesser of the Fox moppets, Jane Withers, has done. The kids will eat it up. The old folks will love it, and the middle ones, those born before 1900, will enjoy every minute of it. Good movie, we call it. It's great to see 'em all come out smiling, isn't it? Running time, eight reels. Played September 1-2.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

IN OLD KENTUCKY: Will Rogers, Dorothy Wilson—Will Rogers grows in popularity, as was evidenced by the crowds who jammed our theatre to witness an old picture of his. We haven't run any Rogers pictures in the last three years, but had so many calls that we decided to run them again and they're proving more than we anticipated. Running time, 84 minutes. Played August 20.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town and rural patronage.

IT HAD TO HAPPEN: George Raft, Rosalind Russell—Oh, boy, a real picture that satisfied even our projectionist. Play it, it will do your house good and make customers. A real action, small town picture by Zanuck.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

LITTLEST REBEL, THE: Shirley Temple, John Boles—A honey if there ever was one. We're late with it but that didn't make any difference as it built up as the run lasted. Some came to see it three times, so it must be good. Unfortunately, I was away during the run and didn't get to hear the favorable comments, but the boys in charge were tickled pink with the report they were able to make. Running time, 73 minutes. Played August 21-22.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town and rural patronage.

MESSAGE TO GARCIA, A: Wallace Beery, Barbara Stanwyck, John Boles—Beery is still the tops. Didn't draw well the second night; don't know why. First nighters seemed to like it, although they didn't rave about it. When I asked how they liked the picture they would say OK. Without Beery the picture wouldn't have been so hot. Running time, 85 minutes. Played September 3-4.—L. C. Denton, Rex Theatre, Caliente, Nev. Small town patronage.

MESSAGE TO GARCIA, A: Wallace Beery, John Boles, Barbara Stanwyck—Well produced and well acted picture that did not click. My patrons do not like this kind of picture and register their dislike by staying away. Too much torture and not enough comedy. Running time, 85 minutes. Played August 22-23.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

O'MALLEY OF THE MOUNTED: George O'Brien, Irene Ware—Good business. Not up to standard of this series.—A. B. Jefferis, Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

POOR LITTLE RICH GIRL, THE: Shirley Temple —Shirley is more popular than ever. This is an exceptionally good picture but not as good as "The Littlest Rebel," but it did a better business.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

PRISONER OF SHARK ISLAND, THE: Warner Baxter, Gloria Stuart—A good picture with a poor title. One of the best turned out in the last year. Get your patrons in and they will be pleased.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

PROFESSIONAL SOLDIER: Freddie Bartholomew, Victor McLaglen—Mythical kingdom stuff with small boy in impossible situations with his pal and rescuer. Vic McLaglen mowing down entire battalions with a machine gun. Vic does a good job as the big, soft-hearted leatherneck but Freddie seems too artificial with a flair for stilted English. However, the crowd ate it up and Freddie is a box office draw. Recent publicity helped a lot. Running time, 75 minutes. Played July 26-28.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

SINS OF MAN: Jean Hersholt, Don Ameche—This was a percentage picture. This was a swell show with swell acting on the part of Jean Hersholt and Don Ameche. The title was very misleading and I just failed to get very many in to see it. Running time, 79 minutes. Played August 28-29.—C. R. Gregg, Liberty Theatre, Caney, Kan. General patronage.

STAR FOR A NIGHT: Claire Trevor, Jane Darwell—Fair entertainment. Trevor too weak for role played, acting poor. Jane Darwell best of all. Did not click with my patrons. Played September 3-4.—C. J. Hubley, Jr., Cameo Theatre, Tallulah, La. Rural and small town patronage.

STATE FAIR: Will Rogers, Janet Gaynor—Made a mistake spotting this on a Sunday as most of real movie fans had seen it and passed it up. Even at that it did above normal business and brought in a lot of people I never saw before. Running time, ten reels.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

TO MARY—WITH LOVE: Myrna Loy, Warner Baxter—Very well liked, although some thought it too slow. Running time, 92 minutes. Played August 23-24.—Geo. F. Smith, Lyric Theatre, Lapeer, Mich. Small town and rural patronage.

UNDER TWO FLAGS: Ronald Colman, Claudette Colbert, Victor McLaglen, Rosalind Russell—This was an excellent picture. Pleased 90 per cent. Held up well both nights. You can't go wrong on this one. Running time, 110 minutes. Played August 29-30.—L. C. Denton, Rex Theatre, Caliente, Nev. Small town patronage.

UNDER TWO FLAGS: Ronald Colman, Claudette Colbert, Victor McLaglen—Soldiers plus sand, sand plus soldiers. The old stock favorite of 10, 20, 30 cents fame, resurrected, dusted off, and dished out as a Fox special. Too long for double billing, so everybody gets two hours of dramatic agony, whether they like it or not. Done before in the old silent days, but we used Keystone comedy to counteract the gloom. Some liked it. Running time, 110 minutes. Played August 30-August 31-September 1.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

United Artists

BARBARY COAST: Edward G. Robinson, Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea—For a bunch of action fans such as ours, this was o. k. Enough bang-bang and still way up on the list of really good pictures. Running time, 90 minutes. Played August 30-31.—C. E. Fismer, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

GHOST GOES WEST, THE: Robert Donat, Jean Parker—This is my idea of a poor picture.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

LITTLE LORD FAUNTLEROY: Freddie Bartholomew, Dolores Costello Barrymore—Boy, oh, boy, what a picture. Every exhibitor in the United States should feel proud to show a picture like this to their patrons. It's an excellent picture.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

MODERN TIMES: Charles Chaplin—The novelty in the picture did some business and made us a little money, but I would hesitate to take a chance on another when there are so many better pictures. It's much overrated, in our estimation.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

RED SALUTE: Robert Young, Barbara Stanwyck—A little singing, some comedy and lots of flag waving and a packed house. Who could ask for anything more, especially during midweek? Running time, 84 minutes. Played September 2-3.—C. E. Fismer, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

RED SALUTE: Barbara Stanwyck, Robert Young—I did not care for this one personally, but even an exhibitor can make mistakes, and think it pleased nearly all of the cash customers. Cliff Edwards nearly steals the show. Hope they give him more and better parts for he is very good. Running time, 78 minutes. Played August 29-30.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

THESE THREE: Miriam Hopkins, Merle Oberon, Joel McCrea, Bonita Granville, Marcia Mae Jones—Wonderful picture. Let's see more of the two little girls that played in this.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

THINGS TO COME: Raymond Massey—The English sure can make bum entertainment. Very few liked it. Running time, 96 minutes. Played September 2-3.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

THINGS TO COME: Raymond Massey—I was disappointed in this. It appeared to me that too much footage was devoted to the war of the world and too little to things to come. The one big sequence, the rocket trip to the moon, is gigantic. A lot of money was spent on this and great technical skill is shown. Drawing power just fair..—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Universal

CRASH DONOVAN: Jack Holt, Nan Gray, John King—Fine program fare. Holt always was popular here. I can't understand why some company doesn't give him an extra good picture now and then. John King looks like a comer to me. Here's a funny situation that appeared in this picture. John King is shot by gangsters and Holt jumps on King's motorcycle and chases them. Just a minute or two after he stops them and while he still has them covered, John King and other officers drive up. King's arm has been bandaged and fixed up and, mind you, all this took place in a few minutes. Probably, they took him to a hospital, had his arm dressed, jumped in the car and then reached the scene of action almost as soon as did Holt, and Holt was going ninety to nothing on a motorcycle! Wonder how the director let this slip by. Nevertheless, it is a very fine program picture, and don't be afraid of it. Is only six reels long and needs plenty of shorts to make a long enough show. Let's also see more of King.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

EAST OF JAVA: Chas. Bickford, Elizabeth Young—Some patrons thought the lion too easy on Bickford. He's no draw here. Played it on a double bill with Buck Jones, so all was forgotten.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

IVORY HANDLED GUN: Buck Jones, Charlotte Wynters—Good old Buck, nearly as popular as Shirley Temple. Our western fans seem to think he rides and shoots better than any. The box office says OK, Buck.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

MAGNIFICENT OBSESSION: Robert Taylor, Irene Dunne—Very good. Liked by everyone. Dramatic, yet relieved by some excellent comedy scenes. Charles Butterworth and Arthur Treacher did some very good work. The good work done by the two stars was equalled by that of the other actors. Altogether a marvelous production. Played August 28-29.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. General patronage.

NOBODY'S FOOL: Edward Everett Horton, Glenda Farrell—Good program comedy. But not as good as "His Night Out."—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

SHOW BOAT: Irene Dunne, Allan Jones, Charles Winninger, Paul Robeson, Sammy White, Donald Cook—Wonderful show. I hate to say this but I believe it would have been a better picture if they had used two other leading players and left out Dunne and Jones. That's my opinion. The first time that Miss Dunne sings in this seems seems to make a bad impression or at least it did on me. Charles Winninger, Paul Robeson and Sammy White very, very good. Donald Cook also played his role to perfection. Robeson singing "Old Man River" best part of show.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

SHOW BOAT: Irene Dunne—This new "Show Boat" did not break any box-office records, but I have never heard so many really appreciate outspoken boosts for a film as this one received. It is worthy of them. It's beautifully done—no pun intended, as Miss Dunne is great, but for those who love the old songs, who like to drop the present and spend an evening lost to all that's "modern," "Show Boat" is a truly great production. Paul Robeson, Allan Jones and Dunne, all fine. Running time, 12 reels. Played August 30-31.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

SUTTER'S GOLD: Edward Arnold, Lee Tracy, Binnie Barnes—This could have been made an outstanding picture if they had left out the last 17 years, but the old boy waited on the white house step just that many years too long and people got tired of waiting. Too much misery at the end. The old boy never did have any fun. Running time, 95 minutes. Played August 20-21.—L. C. Denton, Rex Theatre, Caliente, Nev. Small town patronage.

SUTTER'S GOLD: Edward Arnold, Binnie Barnes, Lee Tracy—Good picture. Wonderful acting by Arnold and Tracy. Business very bad. Lost money.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

SUTTER'S GOLD: Edward Arnold, Lee Tracy, Binnie Barnes—They attempted to make an epic drama of the story of the California gold discovery, but they were not successful in making it a box-office winner. The drama as a whole has several episodes of epic proportions, but it seems disconnected. But the chief fault as I see it is that it is filled with too much tragedy. The death of the wife, the death of the son, and his own death, a defeated man to the end. As a whole the story unfolds many interesting sequences and is well worth seeing. Business on this only a fair average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Warner Bros.

BOULDER DAM: Ross Alexander, Patricia Ellis—Pleased about 85 per cent. Story and filming good. This picture packed the house for us for two nights. Running time, 66½ minutes. Played August 7-8.—J. P. Johnson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

BOULDER DAM: Ross Alexander, Patricia Ellis—Fair. Why don't they give Ross Alexander a vacation? Running time, 70 minutes. Played August 12-13.—Geo. F. Smith, Lyric Theatre, Lapeer, Mich. Small town and rural patronage.

GREEN PASTURES, THE: Rex Ingram—Didn't do so good. About half the audience liked the picture. Some didn't know whether they liked it or not. Some didn't like it at all. It's a big show all rignt. A lot of people won't go for it on account of the all-colored cast of players. Running time, 93 minutes. Played August 30-31.—C. R. Gregg, Liberty Theatre, Caney, Kan. General patronage.

GREEN PASTURES, THE: Rex Ingram—Here is a picture that is sold to your audience by advance publicity before it reaches your screen. Being so entirely different from anything ever before screened, it is only natural that some people will not like it. On the other hand, quite a few patrons will come twice. Business was beyond expecations and the compliments of patrons were lavish. Saw many faces in our audiences that seldom are seen in a picture theatre. Running time, 93 minutes. Played August 30-31-September 1.—William Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

I MARRIED A DOCTOR: Pat O'Brien, Josephine Hutchinson—A good talking version of the once silent drama "Main Street." This drew better than average. You are safe in getting behind this, as this is considerably above the average run of pictures.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

PETRIFIED FOREST, THE: Leslie Howard, Bette Davis—Many of our patrons were disappointed in this picture on account of the title. They came with the expectation to see some actual scenes from the Petrified Forest. This picture did not draw at our box office and appeared to be just an ordinary program picture. Running time, 83 minutes. Played August 21-22.—J. P. Johnson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

PUBLIC ENEMY'S WIFE: Pat O'Brien, Margaret Lindsay—One of the best for this type. Business fair. Played Sunday and Monday. Perhaps a better draw during week. O'Brien and Lindsay both swell. Running time, 69 minutes. Played August 23-24.—C. J. Hubley, Jr., Cameo Theatre, Tallulah, La. Rural and small town patronage.

SATAN MET A LADY: Bette Davis, Warren William—This about "washes up" Davis for my particular patronage. William also. Picture in general a complete flop. Business fair first day. Poor on second. Mr. Exhibitor, watch out for this one. Running time, 78 minutes. Played August 16-17.—C. J. Hubley, Jr., Cameo Theatre, Tallulah, La. Rural and small town patronage.

SONS O' GUNS: Joe E. Brown, Joan Blondell—Just fair. Forced to play on Sunday on account of it being a percentage picture (and why it was is more than we know) and it surely was not a Sunday picture. Running time, 85 minutes. Played August 23-24.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

TREACHERY RIDES THE RANGE: Dick Foran, Paula Stone—A western thriller of the days when the buffalo roamed the plain and the Indian went on the warpath; when men were men and girls were apparently as averse to parental authority as they are now. Beautiful scenery and good acting. Pleased my my mid-week patrons. Dick Foran can sure sing. Running time, 56 minutes. Played September 2-3.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Denton, Rex Theatre, Caliente, Nev. Small town patronage.

J. C. JENKINS—HIS COLYUM

Neligh, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

No doubt you have all heard of "Hooppole Township, Mosey County, Indiana," but we wonder if you ever heard of "Bullfrog Holler, Antelope County, Nebraska." That's where we live, and it has been so dry for the last sixty days that the bullfrogs congregate on a dry sandbar in the Elkhorn River and sing, "How dry I am, how dry I am, oh gosh, gee whiz, how dry I am."

We just got a letter from a Hoosier but it didn't come from Hooppole Township, Posey county, it came from W. H. Brenner of the Cozy theatre at Winchester, Indiana, and, among other good things, he had this to say, "I know I have not written you, but I do read your colyum and I find it most interesting and hope you will continue the good work on and on." Say, boys, coming to one who is near heat prostration and is nursing a sore toe that is minus the nail, this kind of a letter makes one see a rainbow when he hasn't seen a cloud for six weeks.

We know W. H. and we know Mrs. W. H., too, and those of you who don't know 'em certainly have our sympathy.

W. H. had a father—like a lot of the rest of us—and his father had the best eye for watermelon patches of any boy in our neighborhood.

..After he thumped a melon we could always rely on his judgment as to whether it was ripe or not, but W. H. was a whole lot stronger for peach orchards. He didn't go in for melons like his father. His mother always made him wash his face before he came to breakfast. Perhaps that is why he wasn't strong for watermelons.

Well, anyhow, you ought to go to Winchester sometime and go to the Cozy and see a good show, and we'll betcha that Mrs. W. H. will thank you when you buy a ticket, too. Indiana is still in the Union, and so is Winchester.

It has become to be a common thing nowadays to read in the newspapers or magazines of the divorces out in Hollywood.

A star will say what an excellent man her divorced husband is and that "we still love each other dearly," and when she says that she disgusts a large portion of the American people, and she throws a wet blanket over her popularity at the box offices of the country with that kind of horseradish, and producers should see to it that that kind of bunk is not publicized.

Fred Largen of Creighton, Nebraska, who manufactures the Largen Sound Device and Cooling System for theatres, still adheres to his lifelong custom of having the best of everything. That's probably why he sent us a check and asked us to have his subscription to the Herald renewed. There is a moral to this.

Yesterday we had a nice little shower and John Piller sent a wind down from Valley City, North Dakota, and the mercury jumped down from 110 to 50, and by gosh, if this keeps up we are going to take off our B.V.D.'s and try something else. That's why we sing—

When the wind begins to blow
And the rain begins to fall
And the mercury starts climbing down the tube,
It is then we all will know
That we are coming into Fall
And you can hear the shouting of this Rube.

If your customers like action in their entertainment we believe they will like "The Last Outlaw" with Harry Carey, Hoot Gibson, Tom Tyler, Henry B. Walthall and Margaret Callahan.

This is not exclusively a Western. It is part western and part bank robbers, but if it is action they want they will find it in this one. Perhaps one of the reasons why we liked this picture was because our onetime friend and hunting partner, the late Henry B. Walthall, was in it.

The lark is up to meet the sun
The birds their songs commence,
And those—hoppers have begun
To eat our garden fence.

A friend of ours drove us out in the country to see a part of that "Shelterbelt" they had planted. This belt is ten rods wide by eighty rods long, and after a close inspection, it is our firm belief that at least one sprout out of fifty has lived, and these are mainly cottonwood and willow. It is quite evident that when this drouth set in, that community was short on dogs. We were told that at one end of the belt they cut down young black walnut trees fifteen feet high that a farmer had nursed, to keep them from shading the sprouts. We understand that it took thirty men only three weeks to plant this belt. Oh gosh, gee whiz, Gertie, please pass the mustard.

If there are any in your audience who are inclined to hysterics we would advise you not to play "Earthworm Tractors" with Joe E. Brown and Guy Kibbee or you are liable to have a damage suit. When these two Eskimos don't make 'em laugh and hold onto their seats they are entirely hopeless.

Joe is a super-salesman. He had been selling safety-razor blade sharpeners for two years and his knowledge of mechanics got him a job selling Earthworm Tractors. He got Guy in the tractor to give him a demonstration and from then on the two of 'em go places. If we know anything about pictures at all, this one will be the biggest laugh sensation of the year.

For fear that you might have a lapse of memory, we wish to call your attention again to the picture "San Francisco," which we mentioned in our last letter. If you haven't already played this picture we would suggest that you play it at the first opportunity and to give it extra billing, for our judgment is that it will create a lot of favorable comment for you and your theatre. This may not be worth anything to you but then it don't cost you anything.

We've been trying hard all day
To think of something we might say
That, to us, would seem to help a little bit,
But we are quitting right away
For we seem to hear you say
"Oh gosh, gee whiz, we wish that guy would quit."

American Tobis Will Distribute

Some 40 French, Italian and Dutch feature pictures have been selected as the basis of an effort on the part of the American Tobis Corporation to secure national distribution in this country. The move will be launched when this organization will present for the first time in America on September 22nd, "La Kermesse Heroique." The Filmarte Theatre, on West 58th Street, New York, has been engaged by W. E. Van Beveren, managing director of American Tobis, for the presentation. Mr. Van Beveren says "La Kermesse Heroique" cost $700,000, the cast including Francoise Rosay, M. Alerme, Jean Murat, Louise Jouvet, Micheline Cheiral and Bernard Lancret. Jaques Feyder, French director, at present engaged in making United Artists' "Rembrandt," directed.

Following the premiere of "La Kermesse Heroique," they will release a series of French, Italian and Dutch productions, among them a French production of "Port Arthur," dealing with an historic engagement during the Russo-Japanese war.

The initial performance of "La Kermesse Herioque" will be attended by Andre de Laboulage, French Ambassador to the United States; Charles Ferry de Fontnouelle, Consul General at New York, Maurice Domboste, Commercial Attache for France, and others. The entire proceeds of the opening will be donated to the French War Veterans Fund and members of this organization will attend the premiere.

"La Kermesse Heroique" was awarded the gold medal for the "best direction of the year" at the Venice International Exposition of Cinematography.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

PLAIN HORSE-SENSE

The biggest Labor Day in years, best prospects for picture business since 1929, the industry quite definitely in the "black," etc., etc. These are some of the most recent and highly gratifying reports that hit this desk and make very tasty food for thought especially as concerns the theatreman and his part in the Big Push.

Well, now, let's see. After digesting the above and seeing for himself that the boxoffice lines are growing longer and longer, the first thing that naturally comes to the manager's mind is where does he come off. If business is so much better and if he has anything at all to do with it, your theatreman "figgers" and rightly that he rates a bit of attention. After all the lean years, you can't shoot the lad because he hones for some of the increased rations.

Yes, we know that cuts have been restored and even raises in salary effected in a lot of spots. But there are regiments of good men still subsisting on coffee and doughnuts and they too deserve a break—a break that will allow them to get out from behind that oversize "eight-ball."

Let's look at it logically. Business is swell and everything points to it remaining healthy. But in order for picture grosses to stay in the pink of condition, the 100 percent-plus cooperation and enthusiasm of the theatre manager must be had. That's conceded. And it is also conceded that every exhibitor cannot look for this cooperation and enthusiasm unless the manager feels that he has some logical reason for doing hand springs over his job. A bigger weekly pay check will help of course, but there is still a surer method of not only keeping grosses up but keeping them up consistently.

That method, gentlemen, is the tried-and-true formula of giving the manager a percentage of every dollar in addition to his salary over a set figure that he brings in by his own efforts and talents. It cannot fail and never has wherever this form of remuneration has been put into effect.

Seasonal drives whereby only a few managers of many are rewarded won't do the trick 52 weeks in the year. It's a cinch that the boys who work their ears loose and still don't land in the money are not going to give three rousing cheers when the next contest rolls around. Chances are they will go through the motions just enough to get by but not enough to pile up the looked-for grosses.

To the exhibitor who still cannot see the value of paying managers on the same basis as a good salesman in other lines, it may be pointed out also that the percentage system is an excellent way of determining without question who are the strong men and who the weak sisters. And that in itself is almost enough reason for instituting the percentage method of payoff.

It isn't every exhibitor in the business who cannot look further than the tip of his nose. There are quite a few who can see the business logic of so encouraging managers. So men who feel they are worth more than they are getting might do themselves some good by utilizing the above "sales arguments" in financial discussions with their superiors.

Hard-headed exhibitors who won't go for salary raises can often be sold on the plain horse-sense of giving a slice of a brand-new dollar to the manager who by his talents is able to bring to bloom the extra buck where none grew before.

THOSE INDIANA SHOWMEN

To the nationally-operated circuits, deserved bows of course for turning in such high standings in the Quigley Awards Competitions. But while the spotlight is being turned on these headliners, let not the light escape those in the lesser operations who have clicked so strongly in taking down Quigley honors.

Therefore, an extra bow and more to Indiana-Illinois Theatres, Inc., to Alex Manta, president, and to the Indiana managers of the circuit who have piled up so impressive a record in winning the Quigley Award Plaques. To the score piled up by Sid Holland, with two Silver and one Bronze, by R. W. Waterson, with another Silver, now is to be added the August Silver won by F. D. Nessel, of the Jefferson Theatre, Goshen, Ind., to make a total of five.

Indiana is famed for tall crops and literary figures. The accomplishments of its sons in the field of exhibition should also make the State known for the showmanship within its borders.

And in case any of you folks missed the Big News announced in last week's issue, please know that the Quigley Grand Awards are again to be presented in Hollywood, the winners to be transported via the airlines, given the keys to the city.

Four months to go. Will you be there?

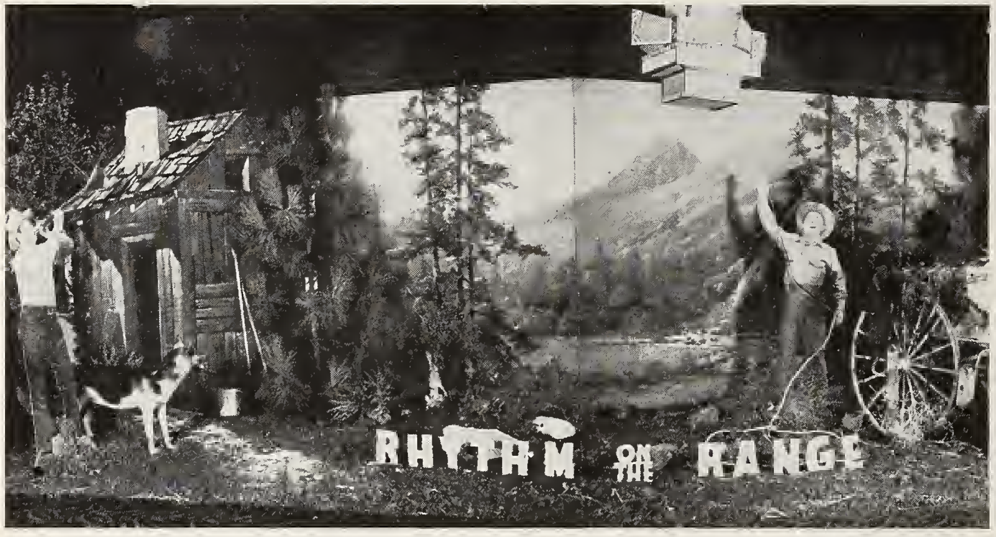
Ricord Designs Outstanding Lobby For "Rythm on the Range" Date



Noted for his realistic displays especially on outdoors pictures and having the lobby space to give full reign to his creations, Manager W. C. Ricord, Jr., of the Stadium Theatre, Los Angeles, has built up tremendous interest in these presentations. The above is the most recent example of his work built for "Rhythm On the Range" and constructed by the house personnel working from nine at night to the following morning to complete the flash. Total cost was reported to be one dollar for the shack and less than that for gas to haul the earth and trees. Everything else was promoted.

Fashion Show Held For "It's Love Again"

Week ahead of opening C. P. Knudsen, manager, and Lane Thomas,, publicist at the State in Watertown, S. D., for "It's Love Again," arranged a style show on the stage to sell the fashion angles of the picture. Nine of the leading merchants cooperated, supplying the clothes for the show.

Special screening was held for critics and their comments used for a lobby display. Co-op heralds were distributed by the Minneapolis Journal and Tribune and drug and grocery store wrapped these heralds with packages. Beauty parlor featured a Jessie Matthews coiffure, and through tieup with paper, ad was run on classified page advising that names would be scattered throughout the ads and to those finding their names listed, tickets were awarded.

Smash Campaign Opens New Criterion Theatre

The flowers contributed by the Floral Telegraph Delivery Association and distributed to all men at the opening of the New Criterion Theatre on Broadway was given a boutonniere with tag reading "I give you this flower. Give me your heart," tieing in with the title of the Warner Bros. Kay Francis picture that opened the house. Flower idea was carried further with a main floor counter in the Woolworth store adjoining the theatre where the "New Criterion Rose" was sold. Prominent store windows plugged the floral idea with giant American Beauties done in pastels and bordered with enlargements of Kay Francis and George Brent.

Fan magazine placed cards on newsstands plugging the publication and the new theatre opening and newspaper breaks included six-sheet snipes on delivery trucks to plug serialization in the Evening Journal. Ace windows were promoted on tieins for George Brent and Saks' made tieup on Francis styles in advertising and windows. Bonwit Teller, Fifth Avenue women's store, also tied in with newspaper displays advertising "March of Fashions" short subject which also appeared on the opening program.

Postal Telegraph distributed heralds with all outgoing messages and leading Times Square shops broke out with large "welcome" windows for the opening, which was attended by society, stage and screen folk.

Bows for the campaign go to Arthur Jeffrey, Criterion publicity director, and Phil Lauffer, his assistant.

Mayor Buys First Ticket to Opening Of 'Movie Season'

There was quite a to-do in Baltimore on the occasion of the "New Movie Season" opening as sponsored at Loew's Century by William K. Saxton, city manager, and executed by publicist Lou Brown, none other than Mayor Howard Jackson joining in to give the drive a civic sendoff. His Honor was prevailed upon to issue a proclamation signalizing the event which was planted in local daily as a tiein to the inaugural feature "Gorgeous Hussy." Mayor Jackson followed this up by appearing at the Century on the opening day of the new season to be photoed purchasing the first ticket.

In addition, the campaign was plugged further by extensive newspaper publicity on "Hussy" and the other big pictures dated in for early showing. In keeping with the spread of the campaign, one of the original gowns worn by Joan Crawford was obtained for window in downtown department store (see photo) and the costume used for further exploitation, at the annual Baltimore Fashion Congress.

Tied into local station is a Community Sing put on at the Century, with patrons via trailer and on the air invited on Monday evenings to stay for the singing. Theatre organist furnishes the music and during announcement plugs the current show. Slides are used to project the songs. The slant is building up big, says Brown, and doesn't cost the house anything for all the extra and valuable advertising.

"Earthworm Tractor" Author Makes Personal for Lloyd

A city committee was appointed by Lloyd Hellman, Burns Theatre, Newport, Vt., to act as host to Lt. Gov. Aiken and William Hazlett Upson, author of "Earthworm Tractors," at a personal appearance on the stage. Banners were placed across Main Street, formal reception held with all attending in evening clothes, an unusual stunt for his town declares Lloyd.

Newport being a trading center, the Caterpillar people sent gratis a brand new tractor identical to the one used by the star in the picture. Man who was also sent along to drive it covered the city and surrounding area emitting the Brown yell.

Governor Davey of Ohio Presents Quigley August Award to Nelson

The success of Manager Glenn H. Nelson (right) of Warner Bros. Harris Theatre, Findlay, Ohio, in winning the Quigley August Bronze Plaque was duly signalized recently by the presentation of the theatreman's Award by Governor Martin L. Davey (center) who did the honors in the State Building, in Columbus. Present also at the ceremony and also pictured above, was Ray C. Brown, District Manager, Warner Bros. Ohio zone. Nelson was voted his Plaque on Paramount's "And Sudden Death," and is the second Ohioan to win a Plaque since the inception of the Quigley Competitions, the first being Wally Caldwell, of Loew's Valentine, Toledo.

Waits on Marquee For "American Wife"

Stan Kriner, Golden Gate Theatre, Riverside, Cal., worked out a swell stunt for "My American Wife" by erecting a five by sixteen foot platform atop his marquee and sat one of his ushers there amid modern furnishings consisting of lamp, rug, striped sun umbrella and easy chair. Over all hung a banner reading "I'm waiting for My American Wife." Lad went aloft on Tuesday and stayed there until Saturday night. Stunt was ballied by loudspeaker from theatre.

Dodgers were distributed to patrons, who marked their guess as to how long the usher would remain there, tickets went to winners. Furnishings were promoted and local restaurateur provided meals. Local grocer paid for printing of bags with copy "My American Wife deserves the best in groceries."

Nolan's Word Contest

Frank Nolan, State Theatre, Hamilton, N. Y., planted a misspelled word contest in local daily offering prizes to those reading cooperating merchants' ads and picking out all incorrectly spelled words. Smaller ad was run in middle of page selling theatre attraction with no cost to Nolan except a few ducats. The tiein used every now and then by this Round Tabler is reported effective enough to secure stores cooperation without any difficulty.

Tractors Welcome Brown Disembarking at Southampton

Frederick J. Allen, director of publicity for First National in England, arranged a big reception for Joe E. Brown when the star arrived at Southampton recently.

Allen got the local Caterpillar Tractor dealers to meet Brown at the boat with a tractor and service trucks carrying copy plugging "Tractors."

PAPER PUBLICISES "WRECK" CAR BALLY

Grove Obtains Support of Local Organizations for City-Wide Campaign on 'Sudden Death'

It was indeed a realistic smash-up bally that Manager H. D. Grove engineered for "And Sudden Death" at the Fort Theatre, Rock Island, Ill., so much so that the local Argus, receiving so many phone calls about the wreck, sent a reporter to investigate and then ran a story on opening day that the supposed wreck was an ad for the picture.

Obtaining the car was no small task but due to the cooperation Grove received from the police department on the campaign he was able to promote a car that had been hit twice. Completely demolished, it was placed against a telephone pole (see photo) and parked in the residential district. After it had been on view long enough to arouse plenty of curiosity and excitement, the bally was adequately bannered and displayed during the entire engagement.

Passes Given Careful Drivers

The stunt was only one of a number of high-power promotions put across by the theatreman, opening shot of the drive being a meeting of the local Insurance Board when the picture was recommended and a campaign set, all of which was reported fully by the papers. This was followed by further recommendation from the city's Safety Council and a plan for wide cooperation also publicised, leading off with a proclamation from the Mayor calling attention to the picture, His Honor also aiding in various exploitation stunts arranged with the police department.

Grove supplied the department with passes to be given careful drivers and for further encouragement, members of the police force with the fire department were guests at the showing. During the date, all traffic violators were sentenced to see the picture. As the Police Court proceedings are broadcast daily, the picture thus got a lot of extra valuable publicity.

Though there are ordinances against the distribution of advertising material, in this case Grove was able to obtain permission to tie to all cars specially printed tags, one side carrying rules for traffic safety and the other side, the title and play dates. Further permission was obtained to decorate light poles with window cards and to place a banner across the street leading to the bridge between Rock Island and Davenport, a very traveled area.

At the Central fire station, local "Safety Lane" where cars and brakes are tested, the Round Tabler placed a large banner, special safety cards at prominent filling stations and an unusual bally that commanded plenty of attention was the promotion of a street car (see photo) specially lettered with theatre and safety copy.

Announcement of the date was made in the Rotary Club Weekly, and other newspaper publicity was topped by a strong editorial, the same paper running the safety contest game suggested in the press book. Opticians, auto and tire dealers, insurance companies and others came in on co-op ads and three department stores ran underlines in their regular ads. Radio was employed and special front made up, out of town papers used freely were further angles that Grove utilized to put on his bang-up campaign that well deserved his Quigley August Bronze Plaque.

Lupien Sells "First Baby" Through Cooperating Dairy

Free Street Dance Held On Hardwick's "Show Boat"

A 30-foot show boat with lower and upper deck was constructed as street bally for that picture by Russ Hardwick, Lyceum Theatre, Clovis, New Mexico, top deck built to support eleven entertainers and show given as boat toured streets. After ballyhoo was completed, the Show Boat was stationed at foot of Main Street, where it was used as an orchestra platform for a free street dance.

Special invitations were extended to selected list of clubs, etc., each guest attending screening given comment cards as they left theatre, best of which were used in newspaper publicity. Through tieup with local automobile agency, arrangements were made to transport guests without charge to theatre, and announced in their newspaper ads that they would call for anyone who phoned requesting the service.

Streets were stencilled, auto tires painted white with title and playdates painted on compoboard inserted in centers were planted about town, and 16-foot arrow road signs with title were placed at all highways leading into Clovis.

HARVEST EQUIPMENT USED ON "HARVESTER"

Quigley August Silver Plaque Winner Displays Old and New Models To Build Up Date

There are ordinances in Goshen, Ind., forbidding the flying of street net banners but as the author of "The Harvester" was an Indianan, this was considered enough of an excuse by the city fathers to grant permission to Manager F. D. Nessel to suspend a banner on his date for the picture at the Jefferson Theatre in that spot. Further reason was found in the tiein made with local merchants to put on a "Harvest Sale" which the banner also advertised (see photo).

Much was made of the title for the different tieups to attract the surrounding ruralities and farmers. For instance, "We Sell Everything for the Harvester," "Every Harvester Needs Good Hardware," "Get A Harvester's Meal Here" were examples of how various merchandise and services were geared to the picture. This slant was followed to obtain special window space by placing clip cards with the tiein copy atop the regular window cards. Stores expanded the cooperation by ads and other media.

Further aid was obtained by Nessel in selling the title with a window containing old fashioned harvesting implements, and the advantages of the more modern equipment were pointed out in street and lobby displays of harvester machinery furnished (see photo) by the McCormick-Deering people, bally carrying banners for the date. Same outfit also supplied model of early harvester and cradle for lobby display. This all was hooked into a street parade with girls in costume of the picture added for atmosphere.

Newspapers were generous about publicizing the local author slant, one of the sheets emphasizing the date in a lead editorial. This was in addition to other helpful publicity on the picture and the merchants' co-op ads to plug the "Harvester Sale." Out-of-town papers in the drawing area also plugged the local author angle. Cards were mailed to all residents on outgoing rural routes and these were included in a contest planted in Nessel's weekly program wherein readers were asked to write the title as many times as possible in a box on front page. Special announcements on the date were made at all county farm meetings by the manager and farm editor of local paper, places including the Grange, 4-H Clubs, Farmers' Union, etc.

Other contest slants had waitresses in leading sandwich shop competing to sell the most "Harvester" sandwiches for prizes of guest tickets and the same opportunity was given vendors in selling a special "Harvester" ice cream.

. Stencil used on streets and sides of buildings, a "Harvester" amateur contest with entrants from the drawing area, one-sheets hung from ceiling of barber shops, letters to ministers, doctors, lawyers, ladies' clubs, etc., Jumbo Postal telegrams in windows were among the other effective slants. Nessel also reports an interesting lobby attractor in the form of a wheel which patrons were invited to spin with tickets given when spinner rested in a specially marked location.

Catch a Chicken And It's Yours

Leave it to Ed Hart, city manager, Reade's Theatres, Plainfield, N. J., to give his townfolk a little excitement, as he did for "It's Love Again," at the Paramount, when he advertised in advance for amateurs to report at his theatre. Ed picked a few of the best bets and announced in the papers that on opening night a flock of chickens would be let loose from the marquee and those catching them could keep 'em. The amateurs gave an impersonation on stage of Jessie Matthews in her chicken dance. Incidentally for credit line, Hart promoted the fowls from cooperating market.

Directory was checked for those bearing the name Jessie and these were invited to attend opening matinee as guests of the house; on his off night, Ed staged a "Jessie Matthews beautiful legs contest," giving prizes of promoted bathing suits and hosiery. Contest was staged by showing the legs from the knees down and not disclosing identity of the owners. Winners were judged by audience applause.

EVERY SATURDAY

Newspaper displays on this page from key cities and small towns offer various selling treatments. The ads from the Majestic, Dallas, credited by Paul Short to William Elliott, emphasize the stressing of the entire program and much has also been made of the world premiere of "Texas Rangers."

The two ads from the RKO Orpheum, Denver, illustrate the technique employed by publicist Sweeten to sell different attractions and the one-column ads above and below are contributed by Tom Edwards, of the Ozark, Eldon, Mo., in giving an unusual attractor-twist to "Green Pastures." The Branford, Newark flash is Bob Paskow's and that of the State is offered by Harry Botwik, of Portland, Me.

After the Bolshevic revolution Goldin left Russia and went to Peking, where he secured a job at the Cheng Kwang Theatre, at which post he remained for two years before leaving for Shanghai to manage the Embassy Theatre. Harry started by putting on amateur shows in clubs, special shows for high schools, Salvation Army and churches. With all the active members we have up in Toronto, a little lively competition would be appreciated, so how about forwarding us accounts of your theatre activities?

JAMES N. SAUNDERS

CHICAGO ALLIED VOTES PROTEST TO WASHINGTON ON B&K CLEARANCE

Halting of Buying by Members Makes Distributors Anxious for Settlement; Club Women Attack Double Bill Policies

by WILLIAM F. CROUCH
in Chicago

An emergency meeting of Allied Theatres' board of directors was called this week to complete plans for starting legal proceedings against Balaban & Katz over the clearance situation.

Several weeks ago it was thought that the gradual raising of prices in B. & K.'s "C" week theatres would automatically halt the clearance fight. However, the fact that the policy of increased admission prices might later be changed and thus leave the independent theatremen unprotected has brought the thought that it is best to call for a definite agreement.

The exchanges have given B. & K. a seven-day clearance between "C" week and the first week-of-release on all new season product. Allied several weeks ago claimed this was unfair and halted all buying of new product among its membership. Since this buying "boycott" immediately halted local deals, distributors are much concerned.

In bringing the matter to a head the Allied group will send a protest to the U. S. Attorney General and refer to the consent decree handed down against B. & K. and its affiliates several years ago. The decree is reported to state that circuits and exchanges cannot change the clearance schedules as they wish without definite agreement by the independent group.

It is understood that at the meeting held Monday the Allied men gave instructions for their attorneys to go ahead and file their protest in Washington. Settlement of the matter then will depend upon federal investigation of the situation. In the meantime deals running into hundreds of thousands of dollars are being delayed while the clearance situation is being threshed out.

B. & K. has made deals for the product of all major companies this year, it is understood, but the actual signing of the contracts, which give B. & K. the seven-day clearance, has been delayed, according to reports, until it is learned just what is the status regarding the clearance issue. Among the deals pending is one with United Artists. After a dispute last year this company refused to sell to B. & K. and sold independently.

The Better Films Council of Chicagoland at a meeting last week started a drive among its membership to halt, if possible, the return of double features to this territory. In letters addressed to Balaban & Katz theatres the club women earnestly beseeched the executives of that circuit to reconsider their plans for the use of dual bills. They pointed out the twin features in the past had met with rebuke by their group as well as other organizations.

If the letters sent out by the clubwomen fail to have the proper effect they will resort to other means to stop what they consider is something undesirable for the theatre public.

The aid of newspapers and other such media will be sought by the women in their effort to ban double features. They hold that poorer pictures are the result of double bills and that it is impossible to balance a film bill with the use of two pictures.

That it also tends to keep children out late at night, due to the long shows, is another complaint of many of the members.

At the next meeting of the group further details of this campaign will be announced.

Postponement of Monday's meeting of the operators and the exhibitors delayed negotiations on the projectionists' contract and the matter will be taken up later in the week. The groups are deadlocked on the matter of salaries and the amount that should be paid for overtime caused by the running of double features.

The district chairmen and the club chairmen of the Better Films Council of Chicagoland will meet this week to outline plans for the coming year. The new state chairman, Miss Elsie Clanahan, will reveal her plans.

The first program of this year will follow the executive meeting, according to Mrs. Richard M. McClure, president.

Circuit Executives Gleeful Over Increased Business; Labor Day Grosses Cited as Examples of Box Office Improvement

A Willing Public

They're still talking about the business theatres in this territory piled up on Labor Day week. That is, they talk about it when they have a chance, which isn't often these days as theatre men are a busy lot.

One of the biggest circuit executives—he wouldn't let us quote him—said that in all the twenty-five years of his experience in film exhibition he had never seen a time when it was as easy to get people into the theatres as it is today. He must be right. Business here is nothing short of terrific.

Last week three house records fell. The dancing feet of Astaire and Rogers were accompanied by the merry tinkle at the box office. And $35,600 was the approximate figure to beat Eddie Cantor's house record and the runner-up, which was "Top Hat." At the Apollo the crowds paid close to $12,000 to see 20th Century-Fox's Simone Simon in "Girls' Dormitory." A revival picture, "The Iron Man," starring Jean Harlow and Lew Ayres, proved the sensation of the loop to annex over $20,000 at the State-Lake. This breaks the house record by a wide margin.

Currently "Anthony Adverse" is drawing well at the Chicago, not as big as expected but still a big money attraction. The weather hasn't been the best.

This week at the 900 seat Garrick "My Man Godfrey" is doing a record-breaking business. At the Chicago the picture grossed $45,500.

Theatre in Watseca Burns

The Little theatre in Watseca, owned by the A. B. McCullom circuit, was severely damaged by fire last week. The fire started in a hotel next door to the theatre during the matinee performance. Through the efficient work of the theatre personnel about 100 patrons were removed safely and in orderly fashion. According to present plans the theatre will be rebuilt.

The Illinois-Indiana Theatre circuit has a record of which it is very proud. Out of eight Quigley Award winners so far this year managers of this circuit have annexed four of the top places. Sid Holland of Elkhart, Indiana, has won twice this year and R. W. Waterson of Whiting, Indiana, and F. D. Nessel of Goshen, Indiana have each won once. Jack Rose is head of the circuit.

Filmack Trailer Company announces that negotiations have been completed with Sam Fox Publishing Company for the use here of the Fox library of music. This new musical source will augment the services offered by this trailer concern.

Mr. E. W. Hammons,
President, Educational Pictures,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Hammons:

As manager of the Fulton Theatre here, I was searching for an outstanding comedy to play with the Fox feature "Sing Baby Sing" and was rewarded on the day before we opened by the arrival of a print of Bert Lahr in "Boy, Oh Boy!"

We are now on the third day of our run, playing to marvelous business despite the extremely hot weather, and I want you to know that the audience reaction to your Bert Lahr picture is the finest I have seen any two reel comedy get in the past several years.

Besides laughing throughout the eighteen minutes, the story of "Boy, Oh Boy!" is full of action and has as much suspense as some mystery or action features that have been produced.

Two reel comedies like this will do more to discourage double feature programs than all the meetings and discussions that are going on.

Sincerely yours,

John P. Goring

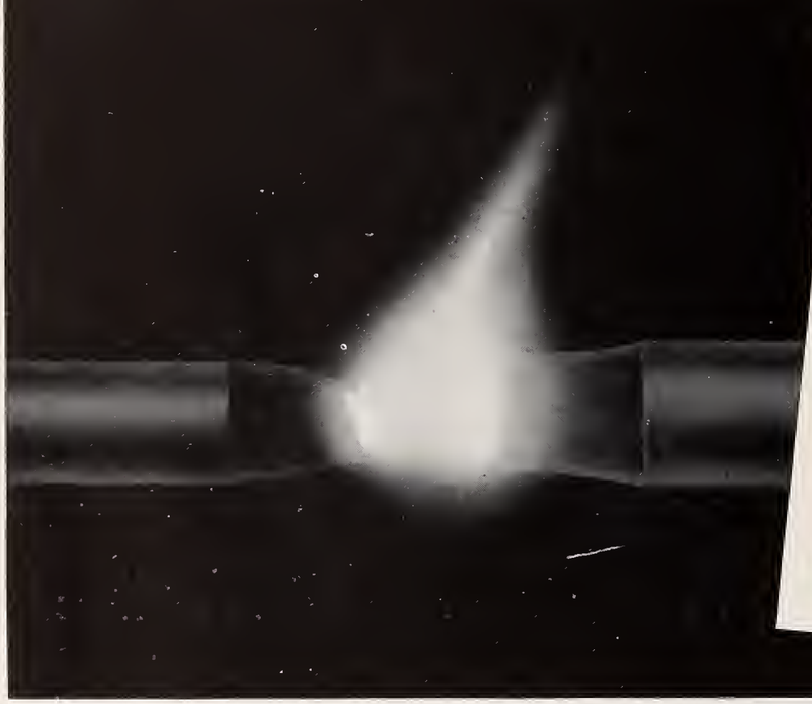
NATIONAL SUPREX CARBONS

ARE RAPIDLY REPLACING LOW INTENSITY ARCS IN THEATRES OF SMALL AND INTERMEDIATE SIZE



HERE ARE THE REASONS

- Whiter projection light.
- 150 to 200 percent more screen illumination.
- Higher permissible level of general illumination.
- Greater clarity and depth in the projection of black and white productions.
- More accurate color values in the projection of color features and sequences.
- No increase in cost per unit of screen illumination.

The SUPREX ARC is a high intensity arc, using a new type of carbon developed by the National Carbon Company Research Laboratories. New lamps, of high efficiency and simplified design, have been produced by projection lamp manufacturers for use with this new carbon.

In comparison with the low intensity arc, the SUPREX ARC has the inherent advantages of higher intrinsic brilliancy, whiter light, and greater efficiency in light production. The improved quality of screen illumination it provides and the higher level of general illumination, from supplementary sources, which it permits are advantages which strongly appeal to the theatre-going public. The SUPREX ARC has been acclaimed as the "outstanding achievement of years" in the field of motion picture projection.

IN MEMORY OF WILL ROGERS

■ A general view and a detail of the exterior of the Will Rogers theatre in Chicago, an addition to the Balaban & Katz group in that city which was opened to the public this month. Constructed of monolithic concrete, its architecture, while resourcefully remembering the theatrical functions of the building, adheres closely to modern monumental forms in dedicating those functions to the late comedian. The walls are of reinforced concrete with the concrete itself, rubbed down and painted, forming the exterior surface. All decoration and ornament on the exterior is moulded in place except for certain trim, which is of Macotta (enameled steel anchored to concrete blocks). The view at left shows some of the ornamental medallions which reproduce the head of Will Rogers in relief representations of the actor in various impersonations. This theatre is further identified with him through other medallions and murals on the interior. The Will Rogers theatre, which was designed by Rapp & Rapp, will be fully described in plan and equipment in the October 17th issue.

FHA Loans $2,500,000 To Amusement Field

THE FEDERAL HOUSING act has given the theatre and amusement business a source of $2,500,000 for remodeling. Throughout the entire amusement field, a total of 13,000 properties have been benefited, but how many of these have been motion picture theatres cannot be determined from figures available at the Federal Housing Administration.

In the amusement field, in contradistinction to other fields, 56.4% of the money realized from the loans has been expended for equipment, the rest going for structural changes. The reason for the greater amount for equipment and fittings is, of course, that such appurtenances make up a large share of the theatre physical properties. The reverse is true in office buildings, warehouses and other types of commercial establishments.

Takeup and Regulations Hamper New Reel Advent

WITH ELEVEN releases in the new standard lengths during the first week, the 2000-foot reel went into effect this month accompanied by varying amounts of confusion. In Boston the new reel remains outlawed by regulations of the safety commission. In Chicago magazine clearance and takeup requirements have operated to negate the approval in prinicple issued by the municipal authorities.

Elsewhere the new reel encountered no local bans, but in many theatres failure to make proper takeup provisions forced some problems of "editing" for 1000-foot change overs upon the projectionist, or extra rewinding. Installation of new takeup pulleys are being rapidly made, however, and use of the new lengths as received from the exchanges will have been established in most theatres by the end of the month.

In both Chicago and Boston, the projectionists' union opposes the new reel, but in Boston the local has voted to abide by the ruling of the commissioner of safety, Paul G. Kirk, who has before him a revision of previous regulations which still prohibits film lengths greater than 1000 feet. He is scheduled to meet with representatives of the major distributors toward the end of this month.

In Chicago projectionists, acting in response to an emphatic union ban, have refused to place any lengths greater than 1000 feet in their projectors, cutting the longer reels at what appears to them suitable changeovers and adding leader and run-out footages, following this procedure even for private previews and screenings before the censor board.

Chicago city authorities, while permitting the longer lengths, have ordered that this cannot be done without installation of a takeup expressly approved following tests conducted by the city electrical department, and that in addition, there must be a clearance of fully one inch between the reel and the inside surface of the rim of the magazines. This latter edict, from which the city refuses to budge, would prevent use of the regulation 14½-inch reel in Chicago, but would permit projection in the new regulation lengths after rewinding on 14-inch reels. Two takeups submitted have already been approved by the city.

Equipment Sales Up 33% Despite Drought

A SURVEY reveals that in one of the supposedly worst years in the history of the Kansas City area, with drought and heat unprecedented, theatre supply companies have done one of the best business in several years.

After the depression years, exhibitors badly need to brighten up their theatres, to replace outworn equipment, points out Walter Shreve, manager for National Theatre Supply Company branch in Kansas City. They needed the work done and the equipment replaced last year, and didn't do it—they didn't have the money to spend.

New sound equipment, carpets, marquees, projection lamps and accessories, seats, screens, refrigeration, ventilating equipment, acoustical material—these account for approximately $66,500 worth of new equipment being currently installed by exhibitors in the Kansas City area. Approximately $158,500 is being invested in new theatres at the present time. The previous summer and spring months, of course, there has been considerable building and remodeling and replacement, now completed and out of the way, making a total of $220,000 covering the spring and summer months.

Sketch of the auditorium of the Cine Metro, new Loew theatre in Rio de Janeiro just completed. Seating is on the stadium plan with 1,500 capacity. The Cine Metro, one of a group of new Loew theatres recently opened or being constructed in various parts of the world, is completely and automatically air-conditioned by a Carrier system. Sound is by a Western Electric system employing the so-called "two-way" horns. The auditorium is of a modern ornamental style, but the other sections of the theatre are of Colonial Brazilian. Robert Prentice of Rio de Janeiro was the architect, with the erection and equipment installation under supervision of the Loew Construction Department.

The most ambitious job at present under way is the construction of the Civic theatre by O. F. Sullivan in Wichita, Kan. Mr. Sullivan, who operates the West at Wichita, is spending around $75,000 on the new 975-seat theatre. Opening is scheduled for October 1. The American Seating Company furnished the seats, York the refrigeration, and National Theatre Supply Company the projection equipment, carpets, screen, and automatic drinking fountains.

Mr. Shreve reports business up a third over a year ago. July showed a 20% increase, and August an increase of more than 30%.

New Sound Models Speed Replacement

REPLACEMENT OF old models of sound equipment with late types has continued throughout the summer at a high rate, according to reports covering the last several months. Monthly reports from two manufacturers who regularly release such figures have consistently showed from twelve to twenty replacement installations, while Electrical Research Products, Inc., distributors of Western Electric systems, states that current sales are at the highest rate since 1929.

As a result of immediate response to the marketing of its new "Mirrophonic" system in September, Western Electric plant production has been placed on a 24-hour basis. Theatres named in a company statement on immediate sales for this new system are the Mayfair, New Renel, Erlen, Terminal and Grand in Philadelphia; Arcadie in Salisbury, Md.; Broadway in Pitman, N. J.; Roxy in Lockhaven, Pa.; Park in Reading, Pa.; Strand in Scranton; Strand in Shenandoah, Pa.; and Rialto in Phoenixville, Pa. The new Will Rogers theatre in Chicago also has the late model of WE apparatus.

The latest report of RCA Photophone names eleven theatres of the Redwood circuit on the Pacific Coast, among theatres in which the rotary-stabilizer equipment introduced a few months ago. Installation of this type of system has also been completed in the Ambassador and Metropolitan in Washington, D. C., and the Capitol in Sidney, Ohio, all Warner houses; and in four Sparks Florida houses. Older equipment has been replaced with the RCA rotary-stabilizer system in 70 theatres.

New Criterion in Times Square Opened

THE SECOND motion picture theatre to be opened in the Times Square district of New York within the past year—the Criterion—began operation September 14th with the premiere of the Warner production, "Give Me Your Heart," starring Kay Francis, before an audience of invited guests. Both the Criterion and the Rialto, the other new Times Square house, represent the continuation of long-established Broadway theatre names on new structures.

The Criterion is owned by B. S. Moss, prominent in New York theatre operation in a somewhat earlier day, and Harry L. Charnas, formerly operating head of Warner metropolitan theatres.

Another special performance for invited guests was presented the evening of September 15th, the theatre being opened to the public with the first performance at 8 o'clock the following morning. The house is being operated on a policy of extended runs with performances continuous from 8 a. m. to 2 a. m., with the exception that the Saturday grind continues until 5 o'clock Sunday morning. Prices are 25 cents to 1 o'clock, 55 cents to 6 o'clock, 75 cents to 10 o'clock, 55 cents to closing.

RKO to Build Two Large New York Theatres

WITH THE erection of only two new theatres, RKO Theatres will add 7000 seats to the number it already has in the New York metropolitan area. One will be on 23d Street, replacing the present Grand Opera House, and will seat 4000. The other, seating 3000, will be constructed at 96th Street and Broadway.

The 23d Street house will represent, with stores, an investment of about a million dollars. The other, exclusive of site, will cost $600,000.

L. R. Abbott Sales Head of Motiograph

LESLIE R. ABBOTT has been appointed sales manager of Motiograph, Inc. He succeeds Walter H. Hirschfeld, who resigned after being with the company 13 years.

Mr. Abbott has been identified with Guercio & Barthel, projection equipment company, for the past few years and will continue to keep his interest in that concern. He has been connected with the projection installation and sales end of the business for many years and will devote the major portion of his time to contacting Motiograph distributors throughout the country.

Mr. Hirschfeld will take a vacation before announcing his business connections, it is learned.

New Code Provides 20-inch Seat Minimum

A REVISED building code for Wilmington, Del., including important changes governing theatres, has been adopted. It retains a number of provisions which had incited the organized opposition of theatre operators.

Section 8 of the code pertaining to seats requires that "the width of seats allotted for each persons shall be not less than 20 inches measured center to center." Except in boxes and loges not exceeding 60 square feet in area, seats must be arranged in rows set not less than 32 inches apart from back to back. There shall not be more than 14 seats in any row extending from one aisle to another, nor more than 7 seats in any row extending from one aisle to the wall.

Every aisle must lead to an exit door, or to a cross-aisle. All aisles having seats on both sides shall not be less than 3 feet wide where they begin and shall be increased in width towards the exits in the ratio of 1½ inches to 5 running feet.

How Conditions in Your Theatre Affect Your Insurance Rates

● A discussion by a specialist in theatre insurance problems. This, the first of two articles on the subject, deals with rate factors in fire indemnity

By FINTON H. JONES

EXHIBITORS, economizing during the late and unlamented depression, learned that to save, say $250, meant just that much less strain on the bank balance, if any. They know now, perhaps as never before, that there is more to net profit than box office intake. Considerably more respect has been granted Ol' David Overhead.

Unfortunately, too many of the economies introduced have been in maintenance, replacement, advertising and so on, eliminating things formerly regarded as essential and for the most part now proved to be essential. At the same time, I have found, the opportunity for savings without sacrifice have been commonly overlooked, and this article is prompted by the observation that such oversight has been frequent with respect to insurance.

Through negligence, or through lack of knowledge of practices in insurance, a large number of theatre operators are paying from $50 to $500 a year too much for insurance on their properties.

Many exhibitors are too prone to regard insurance protection as a necessary evil which they buy and forget. As a matter of fact, the exhibitor writes his own insurance ticket. Although the insurance company assumes the risk, before the exhibitor is through, he pays for it. When an exhibitor's losses become too great, the insurance company won't assume the risk—the exhibitor has to take it: burglary, for instance, or public liability.

BASIS OF FIXED RATES

Fire rates, as an illustration, are determined by an analytical measurement of the fire hazard in a man's place of business. This involves the structural features of the building, the hazards incidental to occupancy, exposure of adjoining risks, the protection afforded by the fire department and water supply, and the damageability and combustibility of contents.

If an exhibitor has a building below standard in any respect, he pays a penalty in the rate; if he has a better than standard, he gets a reduction below the basic rate. The Underwriters Laboratories provide standards for construction, wiring methods of installing fixtures, equipment, etc.

A survey of an actual and a typical theatre illustrates how comparatively simple it is for the exhibitor to achieve substantial economies with respect to fire coverage.

A combination theatre and mercantile building (that is, one containing shops) carried a rate of $2.91 per $100 of valuation; its contents carried a rate of $3.21. The exhibitor had $50,000 fire coverage on the building, and approximately $20,000 on contents.

The exhibitor thought this rate too high. Yet there were many following small things wrong, and for them he was responsible. They are cited below with the amount by which the exhibitor's rate was increased per $100 because of them:

FACTORS RAISING RATE

The projection room was not standard; there were several small openings not covered with automatically closing shutters; and the door to the room wouldn't close. Debit, 30¢.

There was no waste can for film clippings Debit, 5¢.

The cooking stove in the sandwich shop was set on a wooden floor without proper fireproofing underneath. Debit, 6¢.

The boiler in a small pressing shop was installed in a non-standard manner. Debit, 27¢.

The cover on the theatre's fuel oil tank had been removed or lost, and had not been replaced. Debit, 5¢.

A gas stove in one of the shops was connected with a rubber hose instead of standard iron pipe. Debit, 5¢.

Extension cords in one of the tenant occupancies were defective. Debit, 5¢.

A stovepipe in one of the shops ran too close to combustible material. Debit, 10¢.

There was an insufficient number of chemical fire extinguishers throughout the building. Debit, 7¢.

There was broken plastering in one of the rooms. Such defects create drafts and help spread fire. Debit, 5¢.

Debits totaled $1.05. When the survey was completed and repairs made, the rate was reduced by that much, and the exhibitor, on the amount of protection he carried in this case, had a net saving of $367.50 per year. (This is on a basis of the 90 per cent co-insurance clause.)

The cost of changes and repairs to remedy each of these small matters, all of which the exhibitor-owner of the building did not have to assume, was under $35 with the exception of the extinguishers. These cost $90, but they form a permanent investment and should have been made long before. While $125 was spent only once, the saving per year goes on indefinitely.

As is indicated above, the building rate is lower than the contents rate. Without realizing it, many exhibitors are paying contents rate on seats and fixtures when they do not need to. Have them written at the building rate.

Rubbish in an unused prop or dressing room would have increased the fire rate all the way from 5 to 20 cents per hundred.

SOURCES OF SAVINGS

A certain theatre once spent $40 to save $100 a year in premiums. The theatre was a stable in the old days, and had several openings on each side for horses' heads. These had been simply boarded over. In case of fire in either adjoining building the wood would shortly burn and the fire be sucked into the theatre.

In another instance, an exhibitor was making a little extra money, $10 a month, by renting out the second floor above the theatre to a tradesman. But by closing up the second floor completely he saved $20 a month in premiums on his theatre below!

Few exhibitors know that if they have dressing rooms in their theatres, they pay an extra rate. Few theatres use such rooms anymore, and the exhibitor can eliminate the penalty charge which they cause by dismantling them.

Occasionally there is a rate change by insurance companies in a given area, and when this occurs the exhibitor should confer with his agent. Often he can save money by having the agent cancel his existing policies and rewrite them at the new tariff. The saving may only be $20 or $30, but is important enough to watch.

Many insurance companies are offering substantial reductions to the assured who buys fire, windstorm, hail and tornado coverage for three or, more particularly, for five years. If the exhibitor's insurance runs $1,000 a year on such basic coverages, he can get five years of protection for the price of four years, or $4,000—a saving of 20% big profits in these days of diminishing interest rates. For those who cannot advance that much money, there are financing arrangements, the cost of which is reasonable

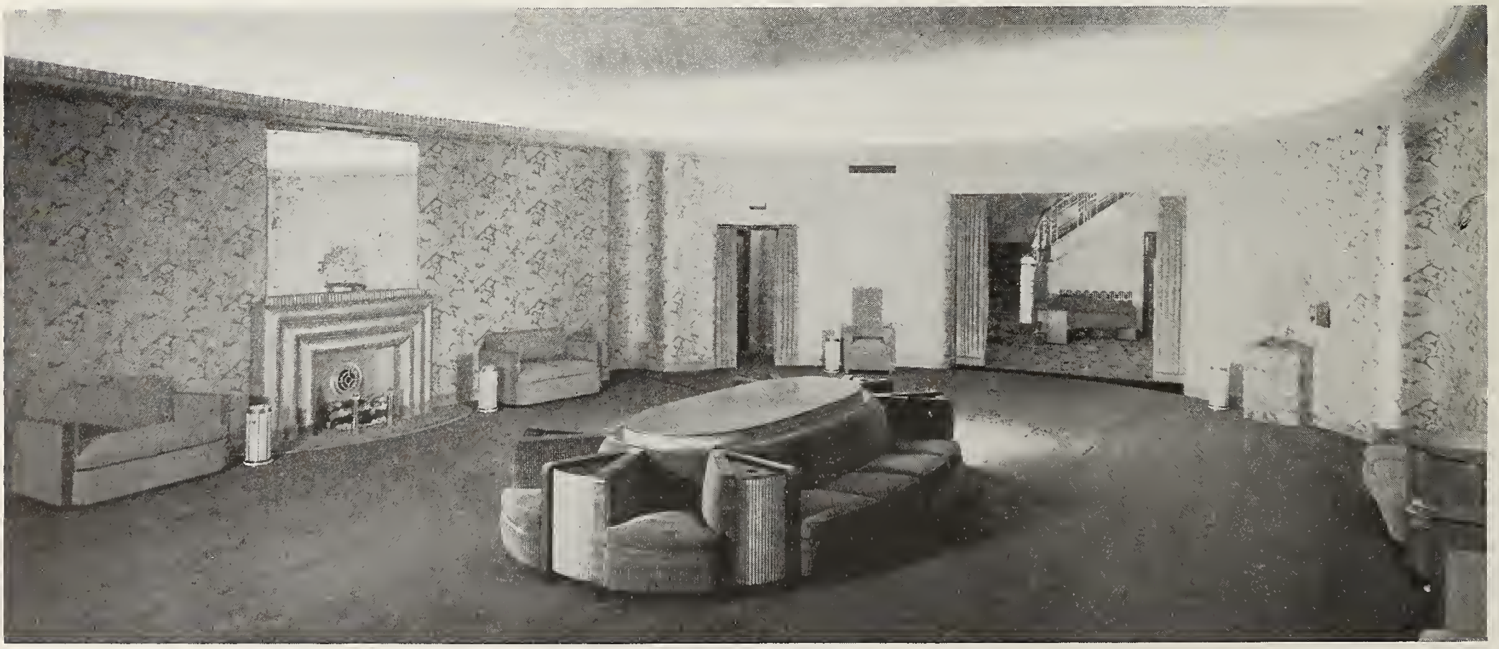
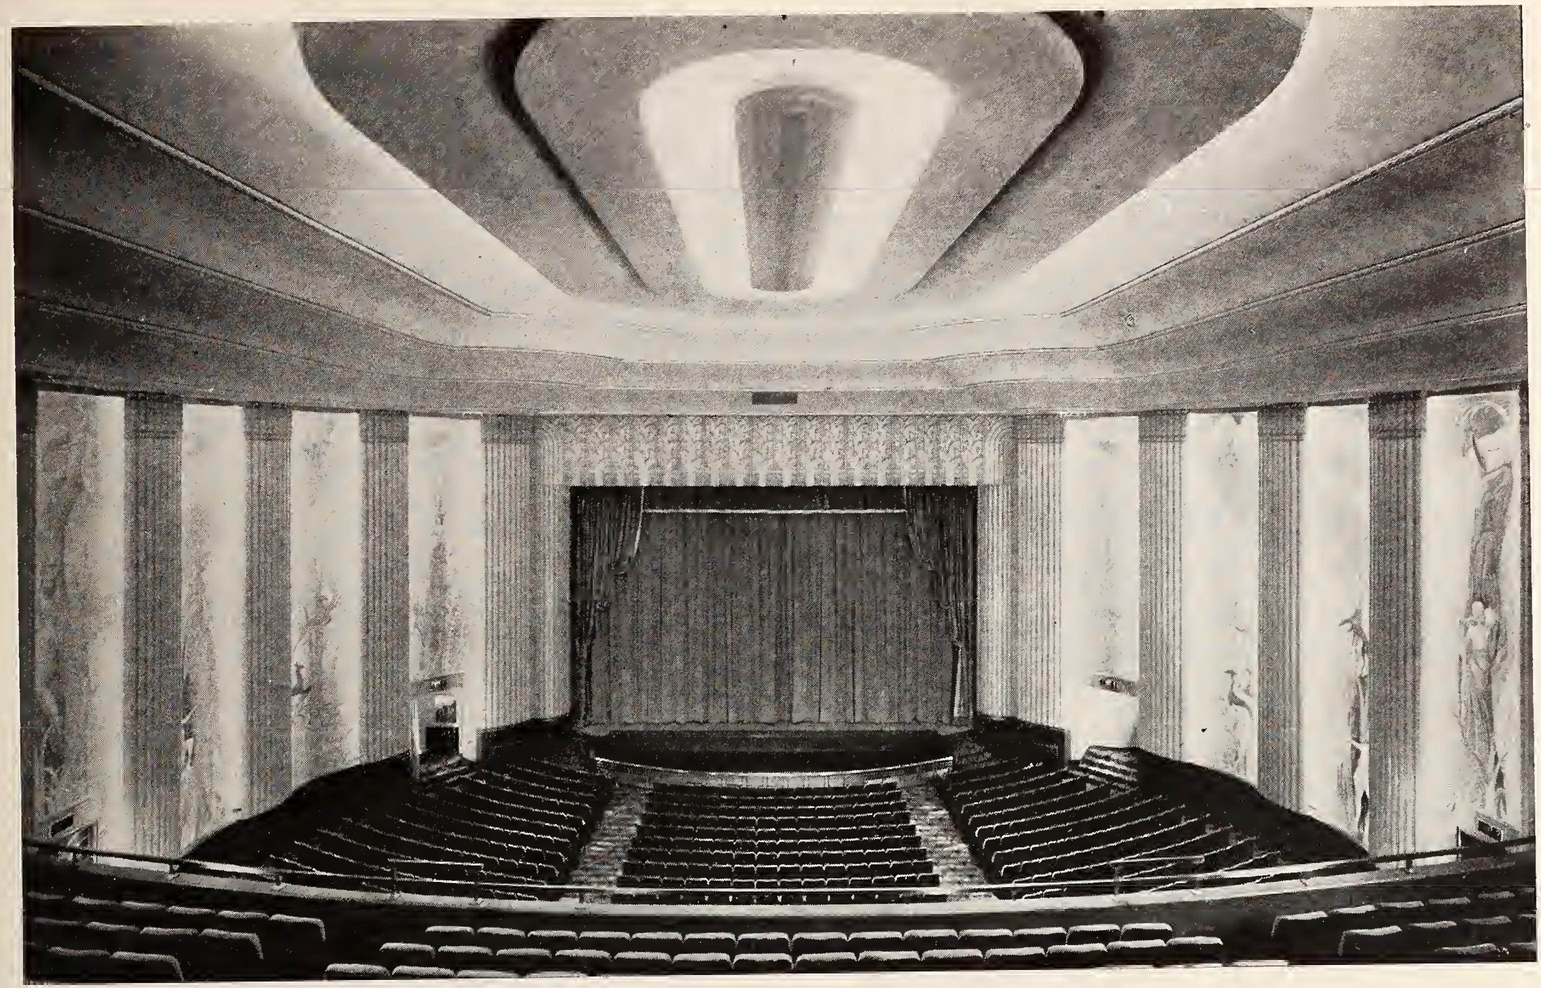
Three views of the foyer area. Above is the lobby, looking forward the foyer located immediately behind the auditorium and showing one of the pair of staircases leading to the lounge area below and to the balcony. General wall and ceiling treatment is in plaster, which is painted in shades blending buff and ivory. At the cornice is a light trough, and in wall niches lighted by a Lumiline fixtrue are small statues. The carpet here is the same throughout most of the theatre, a spray and arc pattern. At right is shown a corner of the women's lounge, and below is the main lounge.





Three views of the Criterion auditorium. The general color scheme is buff and ivory. The side walls are done in a series of murals in modern-classic abstractions of outdoor subjects. These are enclosed in vertically fluted pilasters. The ceiling is finished in furred concentric steps around a central piece, which combines the air diffuser of the downward ventilating system, and a light trough. Further illumination is by concealed sources above the murals. The standee rail is partly glazed. The rear wall at this point is treated with fabric.

DESIGN, MATERIALS AND EQUIPMENT

Owners and Operators: B. S. Moss and Harry Charnas. Architect, Eugene De Rosa.

General Plan. The Criterion is a two-floor house with the auditorium running in line with the entrance area. Entrance is through a vestibule, lobby and small foyer, all in direct line at the right side of the building. The building is of brick and steel construction, two stories high, and with store space on each side of the theatre entrance area, fronting on Broadway. The plan includes, besides the main and balcony levels, a sublevel, where the lounges and offices are located.

Front. The theatre front consists entirely in the marquee over an open vestibule, the upper portion being continuous with the commercial sections of the building. This upper portion is in brick. The marquee is of cantilever suspension on beams extending anchored above the ceiling of the Entrance Area. The vestibule has a terrazzo floor. The walls are almost entirely covered with display cases. The ceiling is treated at the sides with metal lamp boxes arranged in stepped curving pattern which extends into the soffit of the marquee. The lobby floor is terrazzon in a pink and brown pattern pointed in black. In the walls are set vertical light panels alternating with mirror panels into which are set display cases. The ceiling is plain except for central lighting trough. The foyer walls are of plaster painted, in tones of buff and ivory, while on each side is a large mirror, adjoining corner niches flanked by vertical plaster flutings. Illumination is by a lighting trough at the cornices, and by Lumiline fixtures in the ceilings of the niches. The carpeting here is continuous with that of the promenade Auditorium. Seating is in three banks with four aisles. Chairs are red velour with black standards (by the Ideal Seating Company). Wall and ceiling treatment is almost entirely in plaster, the principle exception being four large murals on each side, framed by vertically fluted pilasters.

Projection. The projection gallery is located above the balcony. Projectors are Super-Simplex, sound system is RCA Photophone. Lamps are Hall & Connolly, rectification is by Hertner Transverters. Rheostats by Hoffmann & Soons.

Air-Conditioning. The entire theatre is supplied with conditioned air by a plenum system. The auditorium inlets are in the ceiling above a diffuser, and exhaust is through mushrooms in the forward and rear seating area, and by exhaust grilles at the rear. Cooling is by mechanical refrigeration.

Why Not "Sell" Your Public on Your Modern Theatre Equipment?

● Why not, indeed? Lots of theatre equipment is interesting in itself, and it figures mightily in making the success of a motion picture theatre

By A-MIKE VOGEL

Chairman of the Herald Round Table Club

IT WAS IN Pittsburgh some years back and a group of showmen had gathered in a favorite speakeasy (remember?) to take on a few beers while talking shop. The manager of the newest theatre in town told about a patron who gave the house a laugh by snoring loudly through a particularly warm sequence of the picture. When awakened gently by a solicitous usher and informed of his "social error," he exclaimed a bit sheepishly, "Well, if you expect folks to stay awake in your dern movie, why do you make your seats so comfortable?"

The yarn was getting the hoped-for appreciation when up popped a circuit publicity man. "Boy, that's a natural," he barked. "Why don't you put it in one of your ads?"

The story-teller gazed at him in wonderment. "Gosh, I never thought of that!"

And it's true, isn't it? that smart showmen who can be depended upon to exploit the pants off any kind of picture, do box office hand springs in putting over stars, join the much too large "never-thought-of-that division" when it comes to theatre equipment, for which enormous sums have been spent to insure safety, comfort, convenience and full enjoyment of the show for every patron.

Why not tell 'em about it?

As an instance, let's take a projection improvement—say, the suprex arc. Many theatres have been installing lamps designed for this development. But, I am informed by George Schutz, editor of BETTER THEATERS, that the general practice in such cases is "to make the installation and let the improved screen image subtly indicate to patrons what the management has done to give them a more enjoyable show." The method is too subtle. Why not tell your patrons?

Your equipment dealer should certainly be eager to co-operate in such instances on a lobby display by loaning you a lamp for the demonstration. Set it up artistically, with one of the projectionists or some one from the dealer's force to demonstrate, perhaps occasionally striking the arc, explaining the improvement in light and giving other pertinent details. The same idea might be carried out in one of the windows or on the floor of your lighting company's downtown offices as a further buildup for the usages of electricity.

A CAMPAIGN ON SOUND

The sound companies are ever ready to work with you on the installation of new-equipment. A recent instance is the campaign put over in Chicago to introduce Erpi's new "Mirrophonic" sound system installed in the new Balaban & Katz Will Rogers Theatre. Invitations were extended to Governor Horner and Mayor Kelly by Stanley Hand, Erpi central division chief; window cards, door knob hangers and heralds were distributed, a "Miss Mirrophonic of Chicago" was selected, and airplane squadrons were promoted to drop flowers upon the new theatre. This campaign, put on by Bill Hollander of B & K, with Gar O'Neill of Erpi, indicates definitely what can be done in publicizing important and interesting equipment, which, in these days of tremendous interest in science and gadgets, is interesting in itself, aside from its significance as a means to finer motion picture entertainment.

Most people would be interested in the more amazing intricacies of projection, both picture and sound. There is plenty of interesting publicity available for newspaper, programs and lobbies, and theatre men can do a fancy job of telling the folks about it, including in their schemes trips back stage and to the projection room, so far as is practical. Billings Booth, in Jamestown, N. Y., worked out a good slant on this by inviting a local lunch club to hold a regular meeting in the theatre mezzanine, featured by a demonstration of the sound equipment and projection, all of which landed some neat newspaper publicity.

HEALTH AND COMFORT

Air-conditioning brought to its present prominence by extensive use in theatres is much in the news, and is another profitable slant to publicize. The advantages of summer-cooling, for a long time monopolized

Exploiting new equipment—how Nat Wolf, division manager for Warner Theatres in the Ohio territory, let patrons of the Hippodrome in Cleveland know what he was doing for their comfort. The chairs, by the Ideal Seating Company, were installed in the balcony following redecoration of that area. The standards, of a modern pattern, are finished in silver and rose; backs are covered with rose mohair, and the seats are red leather. Sid Dannenberg is manager of the Hippodrome.

by the theatre, are now shared by other establishments. There is competition from other quarters. But air-conditioning is now sold as year-round equipment, and the smart showman will get aboard this idea.

It's being done already at the new Eglinton theatre, swank Toronto Famous Players-Canadian neighborhood house, where Manager Bob Eves has an attractive poster featuring an article from a prominent engineering trade journal on the theatre's air-conditioning. For tie-in, copy calls attention to the virtues of the plant for the autumn and winter seasons as well, and Eves reports plenty of patron interest in the display.

There are ways and yet ways to publicize air-conditioning. Not so long ago, for instance, Charley Zinn at the Uptown in Minneapolis, discovered that his "weather" gave relief to people afflicted with various ills. Zinn disclosed his finding to prominent local doctors with the result that the physicians recommended frequent visits to the theatre, to the profit of the Uptown's grosses. And now conditioned air has been found to alleviate hayfever, which is another point for wide-eyed theatre men to seize upon.

These instances suggest plenty of snappy copy slants and also, perhaps, more of a sock display to show the fancy job in air-cleaning and washing done by the conditioning plant. How about an attractively painted box for instance, set up in the lobby, with copy along these lines:

"A container this size would be needed to hold the amount of dirt removed each day by the filtering methods of our conditioning system, from the air you breathe in this theatre, before it enters." The idea could be extended by an interesting short supplied by the manufacturer of the machinery in action. Are there such shorts? There should be.

Besides running comfortable-chair copy, a manager might also display one of the chairs in the lobby and describe its modern engineering to interested patrons. Round Tabler Jack Lykes on the occasion of the installation of new chairs at Loew's Stillman in Cleveland, did so and made a fine impression with this unusual exploitation.

Manager desiring to go further into the blessings of modern seating might run ribbons from various parts of the construction, attached at the other end to discs upon which are inscribed the reason for such construction, such as comfort, sanitation, protection of clothing, correct posture, etc. To quote Mr. Schutz again, "Chair engineering today really represents a profound technical effort in the interests of patron comfort."

A more ambitious display might combine the high points of projection, air-conditioning, seating, etc., under the heading "How Our Modern Equipment Has Eliminated Theatre Headache." Copy slant:

"Gone are the days when a visit to the movies meant risking annoying headaches brought on by flickering projection, stale air and uncomfortable seats. The Blank Theatre is pleased to present some interesting information on our new and most modern equipment, recently installed to insure you the highest enjoyment of our programs."

Advertising co-op ads are also in line, and especially so when the new equipment is still news. In addition to the congratulatory copy from the various merchants, the following are examples that suggest themselves. Optometrists, for instance:

"The improvements made in motion picture projection now installed at the Blank Theatre parallel the advances made in optometry to guard your eyesight, etc., etc.," Or women's shops:

"The new seats at the Blank Theatre insure you against stocking runs, just as Blank's care and experience insure you correct styling in hosiery. etc."

A newspaper series called "Touring Through the Blank Theatre" should be interesting, and the idea has been used more than once to good advantage. Program stories, spotting of interesting equipment items in ads are other slants to be employed.

All the wonders of the motion picture are not in far-off Hollywood. There are plenty of things—mechanisms and methods—to interest and frequently amaze motion picture patrons right in their own community—in the theatre. They don't want the engineer's knowledge of these things, but they are (always have been) responsive to the marvelous, and there is much in the paraphernalia of the motion picture theatre that is marvelous. And when some improvement is made in this paraphernalia, it is especially worthy of publicity, for it represents something that you have done to make attendance at your theatre more pleasant and recreationally effective. By all means, tell 'em.

. . . . Theatre Set for Mirrophonic Sound Debut

Preparations for the introduction of Mirrophonic Sound at the . . . . Theatre next . . . . with the presentation of "(name of feature or features)" starring . . . . and . . . . have turned the routine order at that entertainment citadel into a veritable bee-hive of expectancy and activity.

The change over from the old-type sound equipment, to Mirrophonic, at the conclusion of the present engagement, is itself a matter of pride to the . . . . management, because the change over was effected without loss of a single performance hour. Technicians of Electrical Research Products, Inc., cooperating with the theatre staff, made this rapid change-over a matter of a few hours' intensive "behind-the-scenes" activity.

The tenseness that usually accompanies out-standing changes or innovations is entirely absent at the . . . . theatre. Instead, a holiday spirit prevails, particularly after the regular performances are over, when Manager . . . . conducts demonstrations of the new Western Electric Mirrophonic Sound System for his friends among local . . . . the newspaper men and . . . invited so far have phonic sound reproduction will also be on hand, as well as members of the motion picture exhibitors' fraternity.

One of the most interesting claims made for Mirrophonic Sound by its designers, and fully tested by sound experts during installation in the . . . . theatre, is that the new sound system banishes the traditional ideas of "good seats" and "bad seats". Because of the advanced design of the new system, a uniform "sound wave" is directed to all parts of the auditorium, as a result of which the same naturalness, the same tonal volume, are projected to every seat in the house. Every element of sound distortion has been completely eliminated.

Performances for the opening day of the Mirrophonic Dedication Program will start at . . . . and will, as usual, continue throughout the day, with the final showing of the main program starting at . . . . P.M.

As announced previously, there is no advance in admission prices, ... audiences being the complete beneficiaries of the new enjoyment value of the new sound equipment.

Mirrophonic Sound Pictures Opening At . . . Theatre

A new era in the enjoyment of motion pictures is promised to movie-goers in this community when the . . . . Theatre presents Mirrophonic Sound, the most discussed topic in motion picture circles in the last ten years.

The debut of Western Electric Mirrophonic Sound, set for next . . . . at the . . . . will be marked by an elaborate program of film fare. Patrons will be given an opportunity, for the first time, of hearing sound effects so life-like, so true to the original, that they will believe that voices, sounds are actually being delivered in the theatre itself, instead of being reproductions of voices and sounds on the film sound track.

Country-wide tests, recently made by Electrical Research Products whose technical experts will supervise the installation work, show that theatre audiences receive emotional thrills from sound reproduced by Mirrophonic sound equipment far in excess of any heretofore experienced. Theatre patrons of the . . . . , on . . . . when Mirrophonic Sound is first heard . . . . reality, are expected to reflect . . . . especially since the . . . .

Inspecting Radiators and Piping In Theatre Heating Systems

●Following instruction for the boiler in the August 22d issue with procedure for determining operating condition of the remainder of the heating plant

IN THE LAST article was outlined a method and a manner of inspecting the boiler of any theatre. It was carefully pointed out, step by step, so that a manager with no particular training could intelligently follow the program. It would be of some interest to know just how many managers have at this time inspected the boiler.

All heating plants or systems are comprised of three principal elements: First, the heat generator or the boiler; second, the connecting pipe lines between the boiler and the radiators; and third, the heat distributers or radiators.

Having inspected the boiler, it remains to inspect carefully the other two elements of the heating system, the piping and the radiators. Of course, included as part of the piping and radiators are various accessories, the proper functioning of which are of great importance to the efficiency of the operation of the heating plant as a whole. These accessories are: the valves, traps, air vents, etc.

PIPING LAYOUTS

Before going into a detailed procedure for the inspection of piping and radiators, it might be well to review the five important piping layouts and systems for heating plants. (All of these methods were discussed and schematically illustrated in the issues of December 14, 1935, and January 11, 1936.)

(1) One-pipe, Gravity, Up-Feed.—This is the simplest system, requiring less material and the cheapest to install, therefore, the most inexpensive so far as initial cost. It may be either low-pressure or a partial vacuum system. In a partial vacuum system the piping must be very tight and a pressure-vacuum type air valve must be used on each radiator. This system has only one connecting pipe-line from the boiler to any radiator. Pipe sizes must be large, because the pipe-line not only carries the live steam from the boiler to the radiator but also the water of condensation from the radiator (by gravity) back to the boiler. Most naturally, if the water of condensation must return to the boiler by gravity, the pipes returning such water to the boiler must be definitely pitched toward the boiler.

(2) One-Pipe Radiator, Down-Feed, Wet-Return.—This is definitely an improvement over the one-pipe, up-feed system, and naturally more expensive to install, but more efficient from an operating point of view. In this system there is only one connection from any radiator to any boiler supply riser. The terminal end of the down-feed riser must be properly connected to the wet-return to the boiler.

In many instances it is comparatively an easy matter to change this system to a two-pipe system by connecting a second set of drop-risers to the far ends of the radiators and connecting the drop-risers to the wet-return. This improves the circulation of both the steam and water, inasmuch as there are no lengths of pipe where the flow of water is counter to the flow of steam. This results in marked improvement in efficiency.

(3) Two-pipe, Gravity, Up-Feed.—This plan calls for separate supply and return lines between the boiler and the radiators. Both supply and return mains should be pitched toward the boiler. To get the most out of this system the return lines should be reversed—that is, the radiator nearest the boiler on the supply line should be connected the farthest from the boiler on the return line. Return mains may be either kept above the water line in the boiler, in which case they are referred to as dry-returns, or they may be connected to the boiler below the water line, in which case they are wet-returns. All returns connected to a dry-return should be connected in such a way as to form a wet seal. This is accomplished by installing a "U" fitting or water-pocket fitting which extends below the level of the dry-return.

(4) Vapor Gravity System.—This is the regulation two-pipe arrangement with the steam supplied through a hand-regulated valve at the top of the radiator. The return is connected at the bottom of the radiator at the opposite end from the steam supply. Instead of a straight connection to the return, or a water seal, a thermostatic trap is installed. No air valves are used on this type of installation. The essential advantage of this system is that when properly installed the steam pressure need be but slightly above or below that of the atmosphere.

(5) Vacuum-Return System.—This is a two-pipe system similar to that described under No. 3 or No. 4. The vacuum in the return line is created by an especially designed pump. The vacuum, or suction, is kept sufficiently strong (high) to return to the boiler all water and to draw from the system all air and release this air from the system; this must be done without undue noise.

This system usually has installed in the supply lines additional diaphragm and pressure-control valves. With this plan of operation radiators can be located below the water line of the boiler or the vacuum pump level; the distance below depends upon the efficiency of the vacuum pump. It is not recommended to install radiators below the line if it can possibly be avoided. The pressure in the radiators will vary between 5 pounds absolute and 5 pounds gauge pressure, which means (by reference to steam tables) that the temperature of the steam in the system will vary from 162° F. to 227° F. So the higher the vacuum carried in the system the lower the temperature of the steam in the system. This system is the finest, most efficient, and most expensive in initial cost of any heating system. Its advantages are that it insures the full heating capacity of all the radiators, it insures a positive circulation in the return-mains, and a continuous discharge from the system of all air. Due to the rapid return to the boiler of the water of condensation, this system permits the installation of smaller return-mains.

WHAT TO LOOK FOR IN INSPECTION

WITH THE ABOVE descriptions in mind, and reference to the diagrams referred to, the first step in the inspection is to identify the type of piping system in the theatre. This means that every run of pipe should be traced to determine its origin and to what it connects.

PIPE RUNS

While tracing each pipe run, take careful note of the condition of the pipe. See if there is any indication of splits, cracks or other leaks. Note carefully all fittings to see if any of them are defective. It is good practice to carry with you a small level and place this on all horizontal pipe runs so that you may know definitely the direction of the pitch of the pipe and the amount of the pitch. Where you can, sight along long horizontal runs of pipes to see whether they are sagging at any point, thereby forming a point where the water of condensation might collect and form a seal.

After assuring yourself that all pipes are in good condition, that there are no leaks either in the pipes or at the fittings, that there are no sags in the pipes, that all pipes are properly secured by pipe hangers, then note what runs of pipe go through spaces that are normally unheated. All uncovered pipes passing through unheated spaces represent a direct loss for the heating plant. Such pipe runs should be covered without delay.

RADIATOR TYPES

The radiators are the next part of the plant that must be inspected. The radiator is designed to give up its heat to the surrounding air. It is for this reason that it has many sections and each section has anywhere from two to seven columns. The design is directed toward creating as much surface as possible that will have hot steam or water on one side and the free air of the room on the other.

In brief, radiators are designed to give as much area as possible of heat transfer surface. There should be free circulation of air in the vicinity of a radiator. If you will examine some of the older types and compare them with the newer types you will see that the new types are more efficient because their walls have been made thinner and the heat transfer areas increased.

RADIATOR LOCATION

Frequently a great deal of discomfort results from just the faulty location of radiators. During the inspection and from your knowledge of winter conditions in the theatre, this point should be carefully studied. Many times there is not sufficient radiation in any one spot. This condition can best be corrected by removing the older type and installing a newer one.

BOILER HORSEPOWER is a term used in rating the capacity of a boiler. It is equivalent to the evaporation of 34.5 pounds of water from water at 212 degrees F. to steam at 212 degrees F. per hour. It requires 970.4 B.T.U.'s to evaporate one pound of water at 212 degrees F. to steam at 212 degrees F. Therefore 34.5 times 970.4 equals 33,479 B.T.U.'s per hour, or one boiler horsepower.

One square foot of steam radiation will transmit 240 B.T.U.'s per hour to the surrounding air. Therefore 33,479 B.T.U. divided by 240 equals 139.5 square feet of steam radiation, the equivalent of one boiler horsepower.

One square foot of hot water radiation will transmit 145 B.T.U.'s per hour to the surrounding air. Hence 33,479 B.T.U.'s divided by 145 equals 230.5 square feet of hot water radiation, the equivalent of one boiler horsepower.

Standard practice is to allow 100 square feet of direct steam radiation, or 160 square feet of direct hot water radiation installed per boiler horsepower. This does not include mains, branches and risers.

BOILER GRATES: A selection of the size of coal for a given grate depends upon the width of air space in the grate. For instance: No. 1 Buckwheat coal can be successfully burned on a grate having 5/16-inch air spaces in the grate; No. 2 Buckwheat requires ¼-inch air spaces in the grate, while No. 3 Buckwheat must be burned on grate bars having only 3/16-inch air spaces.

Many theatres burn soft (bituminous) coal. Run-of-the-mine soft coal should be burned on a grate with air openings not larger than ½-inch, and many times ⅜-inch is better. Slack (bituminous) coal should never be burned on a grate with air spaces wider than ⅜-inch, and ¼-inch space is better.

Check the width of air spaces in the grates of the boiler in your theatre and compare with the grade of coal that you burn, conforming to above.

All radiators should be tipped or tilted slightly toward the end where the return line is connected. Use your level again and check this. Frequently this can be corrected without disconnecting the radiator by raising the legs on the supply end and inserting under them a couple of washers. Of course look over all radiators for any evidence that would indicate a leak.

RADIATOR VALVES

Next examine the valve on the supply connection of the radiator. Take a wrench and unscrew the value stem plate, remove the valve, valve stem and valve plunger. See that the bonnet of the valve is clean. Run your finger over the valve plunger seat in the bonnet, it should be smooth and free from scoring. Now look at the valve plunger, by careful examination you can determine whether it has been seating properly and tightly. There are tools available for reseating most any type of globe valve. Look at the valve stem and see whether it fits the packing tightly so that no steam leak occurs there.

Now go to the other end of the radiator, remove the cover from the air release valve if the system is equipped with them, or remove the cover from the trap should they be installed.

The air valve is a simple mechanism designed to permit the release of air that might be entrapped in the radiator. They are installed on the last section high up, usually from two-thirds to four-fifths of the way up from the bottom. These air valves generally fail because of corrosion or scale or rust or dirt. They should be cleaned each season, and as many times during the season as their operation indicates as necessary. If by any chance the radiators in your theatre are equipped with the pet-cock type of air valve operated either by key or wring valve stem, they should be replaced with the more up-to-date air-release valve.

AUTOMATIC TRAPS

If the radiators are part of a two-pipe system they should be equipped with an automatic trap. After removing the cover of the trap the thermal (heat) expansion element can be removed. From examination of this part of the trap the operation of the trap will become clear to you. This heat element is connected to a needle valve, as the heat element expands it closes the valve, as it contracts the valve opens. When steam at 212° F. starts to pass through the trap the heat of the steam expands the thermal bellows or element and the needle valve closes, stopping the escape of the steam into the return pipe. As the steam cools off it condenses to water and at a temperature less than 212° F., the thermal element contracts, opening the valve and permitting the water to enter the return line and flow back to the boiler. But just as soon as live steam begins to pass the trap into the return, the element expands because of the higher temperature and closes the value.

The thermal element in most traps used today is formed of two copper-concaved circular pieces fitted together and the cavescaped. The bellows can always be purchased without buying an entirely new trap—all defective ones should be replaced. The mercury type of bellows is not the only type used, sometimes the bellows is only filled with air, sometimes it is only a diaphragm, but the principle of operation is about the same in all cases.

The needle valve attached to the bellows must be examined to determine whether it fits its seat tightly so that no steam can pass into the return piping.

The large valves on the steam risers should be thoroughly checked and valve stems repacked to prevent leaking. Gate type valves should always be used on horizontal pipe runs.

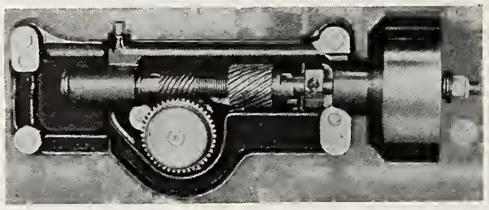
New Filter and Amplifier in Unit Sound-Projection System

SOUND reproduction elements of the Simplex-Acme projector have undergone some refinements in design which include an ingenious filtering device, while a new model amplifier has been developed for use with this equipment. The complete sound unit is shown in the accompanying picture. Beginning from right to left are seen mounted on the supporting casting (1) a flywheel, (2) a clutch, (3) a resiliently driven sliding spira l gear, and (4) another driven spiral gear, which in turn drives the gear on the sound sprocket shaft. With this design, filtering is effectively attained at extremely high speed. It has been realized that it is practically impossible to filter out satisfactorily at 360 r.p.m. (sound sprocket speed), regardless of the size and weight of flywheels used or the method followed to couple them to the sound sprocket, all the inequalities which can reach the sound sprocket. The principle of gyroscopic control has to some extent been applied in the case of this new unit, the entire shaft assembly operating, as it does, at close to 2000 r.p.m. Operation of the unit is as follows:



The flywheel is mounted through a slip clutch in order that the starting load is only gradually applied when the projector motor is started, thus eliminating the possibility of extreme motor loads and sudden shocks at this instant. The resiliently mounted gear is driven by a gear on the vertical driving shaft of the projector, and the thrust is to the right; thus when power is applied, the gear slides into contact with the clutch to the right solidly mounted on the drive shaft. The shaft then revolves immediately at high speed, gradually bringing the flywheel up to the same speed as the shaft. When the flywheel attains its correct speed the gear is then under no driving strain other than that required to drive the sound sprocket shaft. The gear is drawn by the spring to the left and the whole driving unit then becomes a free-floating and is driven completely through the spiral spring. Thus absolutely uniform motion is obtained in the sound sprocket shaft, inasmuch as when any speed variation occurs either in the projector drive or in the motor operation, the large floating gear, due to these inequalities, will move slightly to the right or left, thus maintaining absolutely constant speed of the entire shaft assembly and permitting no variation whatsoever in the speed of the sound sprocket driving gear.

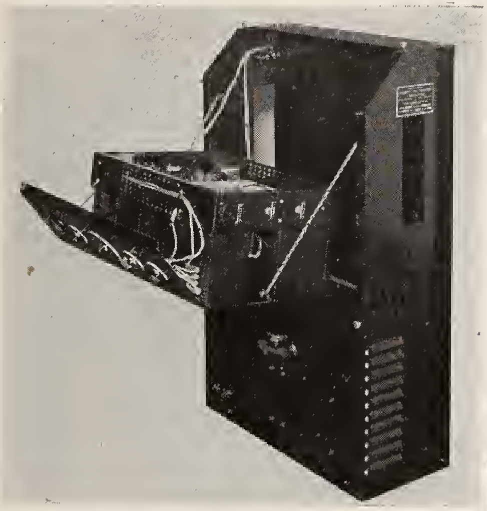
The amplifier is a new development using all metal tubes. Into the cabinet are built, in the upper section, the voltage and power amplifiers as a combined unit, and into the lower section, the exciter lamp supply and field excitation direct current supply, the latter accommodating a maximum of six speakers of combined types. Thus all of the rectifying and amplifying equipment is contained in one complete unit, making it unnecessary to install any auxiliary equipment other than a speaker filter network behind the screen. This design and construction also makes possible the operation of the complete equipment through one line switch.

Both the amplifying and rectifying units are supported on substantial hinges and are held in position by knurled thumbscrews; it is possible, therefore, to drop either down into a position exposing all electrical connections without disconnecting any circuit except the removal of the photoelectric cell plugs. The amplifier is entirely a.c. operated.

The control panel is mounted at an angle of approximately 45°, and from left to right are mounted the exciter lamp ammeter with its current control rheostat, gain control, low frequency control and high frequency control. Through adjustment of the frequency controls, the frequency response of the amplifier may be varied to a great extent to suit the acoustical condition of the auditorium in which the system is installed. The high-frequency response may be controlled between 5000 and 9000 cycles, and the low-frequency response may be attenuated to permit corrections of "boominess" should it be present due to acoustical defects.

Only one switch is mounted on the front of the amplifier cabinet. It transmits current to the amplifier and rectifier circuits simultaneously, thus supplying d.c. to the fields of the speakers and d.c. to the exciter lamps of each projector. A pilot light is provided to indicate when the system is on or off.

No changeover unit is mounted in the amplifier circuits, changeover of sound from one projector to the other being accomplished by means of mercury switches in series with the exciter lamps mounted on the dowsers of the projectors.



Amplifier for Simplex-Acme, shown open

A separate input tube is supplied in the amplifier for each photoelectric cell input, projector No. 2 being coupled to the first tube on the right-hand side of the amplifier, and projector No. 1 to the second tube facing the front of the unit. This design permits the use of either projector without changing the frequency response of the system should either photoelectric cell input be disconnected for any reason.

The photocell polarization voltage of No. 2 cell input may be adjusted to balance the output of the photoelectric cells. The adjustable control for this purpose is located on the right-hand side of the amplifier cabinet beneath No. 2 photocell input, and the adjustment is accomplished by means of a screw driver. A fixed polarization voltage is applied to the photocell in projector No. 1, and the voltage on the second may be varied as above to balance the output from both projectors.

The rectified power supply for the complete amplifier is provided by two rectifier tubes type 83V, and two of the same type tubes are employed to furnish the field supply for the speakers, thus permitting a maximum load of 500 milliamperes at approximately 300 volts. The exciter lamp current supply employs two dry disc rectifiers delivering 10 volts, 5 amperes d.c.

Portable Sprayer for Painting and Fireproofing

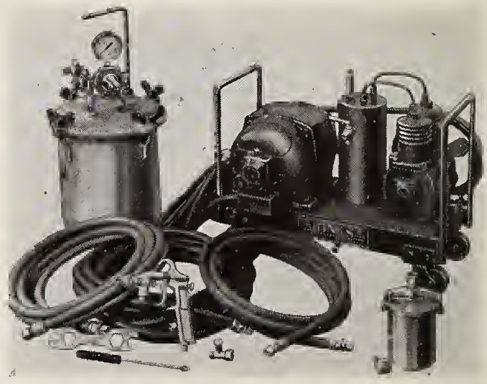
A NEW rubber-tired portable paint spraying unit adaptable for both interior and exterior painting and for light duty touch-up and refinishing work has been developed by the Binks Manufacturing Company of Chicago. The unit was designed for a medium size painting outfit for maintenance work in factories, theatres, hotels and similar buildings.

This spraying outfit is also adapted to fireproofing with liquid material. It can also be applied to the painting of signs or stage sets, an adjustable nozzle being used for such fine finish work.

Mounted on a wheeled base, the unit consists of a $\frac{1}{2}$-h.p. electric motor, an air compressor unit, a 2-gallon pressure tank, a bleeder type spray gun with adjustable nozzle, and various lengths of rubber hose. The outfit weighs 180 pounds.

The compressor unit is of two-cylinder, air-cooled type, with a bore of $2\frac{1}{4}$ inches and a stroke of $1\frac{3}{4}$ inches. It has a working pressure of 45 pounds and is driven by a V-belt from the electric motor. The air chamber is equipped with a drain cock and safety valve set at 60 pounds pressure. The chamber is an oil and water extractor, too.

The pressure tank is equipped with one air pressure regulator and gauge, and a safety valve set for 60 pounds pressure.

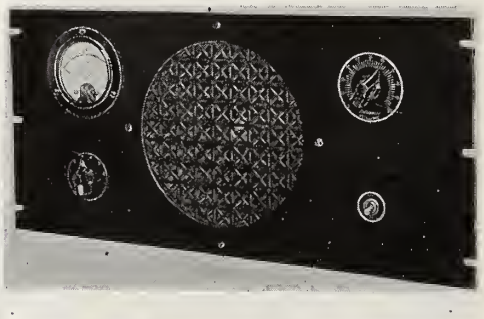


Three lengths and types of hose are provided, including a 25-foot length of air hose from the compressor to the tank, a 12-foot length of $\frac{1}{2}$-inch air hose from the tank to the gun and a similar length of $\frac{3}{8}$-inch material hose and connections to go from the tank to the gun.

Three New Panels for Sound System Modernization

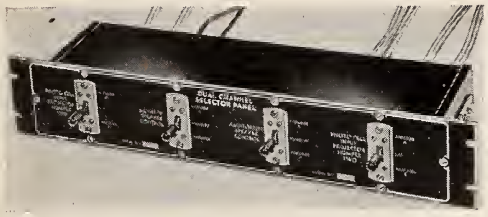
THREE sound system panels for theatres added to the line of the Wholesale Radio Service Company of New York, have been designed to fit any standard amplifier rack for the modernization of systems of any make previously installed in the theatre and in need of revision.

The monitor panel illustrated includes an 8-inch permanent magnet dynamic speaker, for service as projection room monitor, with switch and volume control, and a six-range level indicator calibrated in decibels, capable of reading from minus 10 decibels to plus 42. In association with a suitable test film, this meter permits daily check of sound response, and daily adjustment of variable factors (exciter lamp focus, etc.) to a degree of accuracy impossible to obtain, of course, where adjustment in the sound system is made by ear alone.



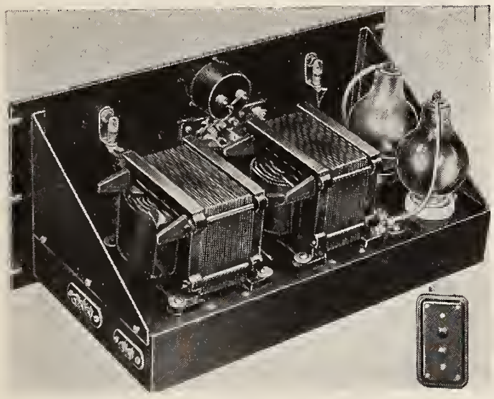
In any dual amplifier system, use of the dual channel selector unit illustrated makes possible operation of the output meter of the monitor panel described above, independently of the performance, and that meter and its associated monitor may be used to check up one projector and amplifier while the other projector and amplifier continue to supply the screen speakers. This panel consists of four anti-capacity type switch assemblies, each of which in turn consists of four s.p.d.t. switches, making a total of 16 poles, 32 contacts of low-capacity switches, suitably wired through low capacity cable. These switches control the functions of the photocell input from both projectors, and amplifier output both to monitor speaker panel and to screen speakers. All four of these circuits can be connected in any way desired to any of the two amplifiers of a dual amplifier system.

The same panel will also control the plate power of both amplifiers, prolonging tube life by applying plate potential only to amplifier tubes in actual use. Thus the emergency amplifier can be left with heaters operative, ready for instant operation, but without plate potential applied until the switches of the panel latterly described function so as to bring it into action.



EXCITER LAMP PANEL

The d.c. exciter supply panel illustrated, with remote control changeover stations, is shown in rear view with a remote station changeover switch placed just below it. Two 6-ampere tungar bulbs serve as rectifiers, operating through a condenser input, brute force filter, providing either 10 volts or 8.5 volts of exciting current to two projectors. Any number of remote stations may be wired to this panel and located at any distance for control of sound changeover between the two projectors.



INDICATORS

Exciter supply voltmeter is included, and three signal lamps, one of which indicates that the panel is operative, while a red and green pair show at a glance which of the two projectors is receiving exciter current. Sufficient reserve power is provided to light both exciters when necessary to make tests or adjustments (by means of the switching panel previously described) on one projector simultaneously with operation of the screen speakers through the other.

These panels may be used singly or in any combination. They may be mounted on an existing amplifier rack of standard width, or singly or in combination on a metal rack cabinet which has been designed for them.

Cone-Type Takeup Designed for Use With Larger Reel

A FILM TAKEUP designed directly as a result of the introduction of the 2000-foot reel and which is one of those accepted by the City of Chicago electrical inspection department, which made its approval of a takeup installation necessary to use of the larger reel in that city, is a cushioned-cone takeup developed by the Golde Manufacturing Company of Chicago. It uses a friction device of a cone type with a non-metallic cone-shaped disc.

The tension is adjustable by means of a knurled locking screw, through a conical-helical coil spring, which is square-faced to fit into machined cups at the driving pulley and lock-screw.

New 16-mm. Color Method Permitting A Standard Track

A NEW METHOD of 16-mm. printing and projection permitting the print to carry a sound track of exactly the same width as that of standard 35-mm. sound track, and also incorporating a two-color additive color process, has been announced by the Cinaudagraph Laboratories in Stamford, Conn. The method is the invention of George Lane, a New York inventor formerly associated with Audio Productions, Inc.

Standard width for sound track is gained by placing the image frames longitudinally. Arrangement of the images in this direction, however, is more particularly involved in the color process. The projected image represents a pair of frames on the film (Figure 1). Each one of the pair of frames has the proportions of the standard 35-mm. frame or the 16-mm. frame, but extending horizontally, the two together extend a distance equal to the height of a standard 35-mm. frame. The linear sound track and image relationship is, therefore, the same as for 35-mm., and projection is not at the 16-mm. rate of 36 feet per minute, but at the 35-mm. rate of 90.

In the red-green additive color process employed, one of the frames is associated with the reds, the other with the greens. Each frame has its own lens, each lens a color filter corresponding to the color elements in the corresponding frame, the light passing through the filters just beyond the

In printing, the track is reproduced by the contact method. For either printing directly from 16-mm. negative or reducing from 35-mm., there is photographic reduction in size. The same developer is used for both black-and-white and color prints.

Projection is by a portable machine necessarily designed expressly for this method, since the film, because of the arrangement of the frames, must pass the aperture horizontally (Figure 2). It passes to the soundhead through a system of loops changing this direction.

Inspecting for Proper Care of Mechanical Equipment

• Reviewing what the manager and his electrician should look for as a new season begins to be sure of efficient operation of theatre machinery.

PART OF ANY renovation program for the beginning of the new season should include thorough inspection of all mechanical equipment used during the fall and winter. The subject of maintenance of mechanical equipment has been discussed in several of its aspects before in these columns a couple of years ago. Here, in returning to it, emphasis will be laid on cleanliness and adjustments.

Dust is a common enemy of machinery durability and efficiency. Dust may be removed from motor, generators and fans best by the use of an electric blower, which has a long rubber nozzle for getting air pressure into places that are difficult to reach in any other way. Every theatre should have such a blower.

OIL SUPPLY

For the removal of thick and hardened oil and grease, kerosene or gasoline is efficacious. At more or less regular intervals metal bearings of bronze or babbitt should be cleaned. These have oil grooves which should be thoroughly cleaned so that they will not be clogged in time with sediment or dust which has become infused with the oil. These oil grooves are for the purpose of permitting free passage for the oil when accelerated by the rotary motion of the axle, and the oil from these grooves feeds in between the bearing surfaces. Such grooves also assist in retaining the oil in the bearing and retards the loss of oil through leakage. On some machines there are definite rings or packing provided to protect against the loss of oil through leakage. Other types of machines have bearings that are fed oil by oil rings. The latter obtain their oil from an oil bath or oil well through which the ring passes.

In this type of bearing it is necessary that the lubricating oil in the well be kept at the proper height, otherwise the bearing will not receive the necessary amount of oil. Glass oil cups and grease cups are provided on many types of machines. These should be kept filled and properly adjusted at all times for protection against dry bearings. Most bearing boxes and bearing oil wells are provided with dust caps or covers for the purpose of keeping dust from getting into the wells or bearing boxes. It has often been noted that such covers have been removed or lost, and replacement of these covers is necessary—sometimes some substitute can be made right in the theatre.

ADJUSTMENTS

Inspection of the mechanical equipment should be thorough with respect to adjustments. An improper adjustment of parts has a direct effect upon the rate of wear and performance of the machine. Loose bolts and nuts, belts that are too long or too short, should be taken care of just as soon as discovered. Delays in all matters of adjustment always indicate excessive wear and strain, which means expenditures for maintenance and later repairs greater than should have been necessary.

OVER-FUSING EVILS

The theatre manager should be careful to see for himself that electrical circuits and equipment are not over-fused. Fuses are protection against overload, which can be dangerous and costly. Over-fusing may result in damage to the equipment before the excessively large fuse link melts. The cheapest and most usual circuit-breaking device is the simple fuse. All fuses consist in a link or wire of fusible metal encased in a plug. The link is generally of lead-zinc or tin alloy. All fuses are installed to function protectively in series.

They are marked with their safe carrying load. When a blown fuse is removed, replace it with a fuse of the same rated capacity. When more than the rated load passes through the fuse, enough heat is generated at the link to melt it, thereby breaking the circuit and saving the equipment.

Except in some instances, the general practice of fuse manufacturers is to design fuses to take a 10% overload for an indefinite period. All fuses should blow when overloaded 25%.

CIRCUIT BREAKERS

Other devices for protecting electrical equipment are known as circuit breakers. Most kinds of circuit breakers may be set for any pre-decided load within certain limits. When so set, a circuit breaker will open the moment that the determined load is exceeded. Some electrical hookups require circuit breakers, some require fuses, some both. The blowing of a fuse is a danger signal indicating that there is something wrong in the corresponding circuit. All equipment in that circuit should be immediately and carefully checked before putting in a new fuse. Some of the common conditions to look for when a fuse blows are:

WANTED: CHEAPER AIR-CONDITIONING

"Hear ye, hear ye, manufacturers, jobbers and inventors," cries R. H. Oulette, beginning an open letter to the air-conditioning industry which well indicates the heart of a major equipment problem. Mr. Oulette's theatre is the Dixie in Brooksville, Fla. In the following expressions he speaks for many another theatre man:

> The crying need right now is air-conditioning equipment for theatres—I don't mean only the big deluxe theatres in the large cities, but thousands upon thousands of small town theatres like mine. Air-conditioning equipment will eventually be taken for granted as much as comfortable seats and good sound, but the present high, out-of-the-question prices for air-conditioning equipment leaves thousands of us small timers right where we were. Somebody should immediately put air-conditioning equipment on the market for us small fellows for no more than $2,500. If I could get my hands on equipment for this price I'd buy it tomorrow morning, and so would several thousand others.
> We small theatres are crying our eyes out for something like this, and it means big money for somebody.
> I certainly would like to have an open letter in answer to this from some air-conditioning engineer—an open letter because I am certain both letters will be of definite interest to thousands of theatre owners all over the world.
> What do you say, fellow exhibitors? Let's have some discussion and letters about this matter, for I am sure you will agree with me when I say that it is a very, very important issue that modern times force us to give thought to, regardless of personal feelings. Nothing is holding up the deal except an unreasonable price.

(1) Circuit ground. (2) Loose connections. (3) Overload conditions. (4) Dampness (occasionally inside a conduit). (5) Short circuits. All of these represent real dangers to certain pieces of equipment. In addition to that, they point to the existence of conditions which are a fire hazard.

In the plug fuses up to 30 amperes, the "one-time" fuse is entirely satisfactory. Fuses of over 30 amperes of the cartridge type are most economical if they have renewable links. They are not to be recommended in most cases, however, since they occasionally lead to over-fusing by putting two or more fuse links in one cartridge, thus raising the capacity above the safety point. Some types of renewable fuse cartridges are made so that no more than one link can be inserted without a great deal of difficulty.

REGULAR OILING

There should be a regular schedule for oiling, greasing and washing out the bearings of all fans, compressors, pumps, motor-generators, signs, flashers, etc. This point has been variously touched on in this department, and it has been suggested that a card giving the times for such service should be tacked up near the piece of equipment to which it refers.

GENERATOR CARE

With respect to motor-generators, most of the troubles encountered are due to failure to give bearings, brushes, brush holders and commutator the expert attention that they require. If no competent electrician is employed by the theatre, one should be called in for inspection. The manager should not allow an amateur to pass on the condition of these elements.

The commutator must be absolutely free from oil, carbon or copper dust. An unclean condition will usually be indicated by excessive arcing, and generator set can be quickly damaged when the brushes and commutator are arcing. The condition is commonly the result of the presence of carbon or copper dust, mixed with a certain amount of oil, on the commutator bars. As the armature revolves, the oily paste is carried into the grooves between the commutator bars by the brushes, establishing a short circuit.

The commutator bars are separated from each other by thin sheets of mica, and these mica separations must be kept below the top surface of the bars, forming shallow grooves between them. The grooves must be kept absolutely clean. The commutator should of course be cleaned every other day.

LUBRICATION

Lubrication is, of course, the most important element in the maintenance of mechanical equipment. Neglect of lubrication will result in expensive operation. The purpose of oil as a lubricant is to keep sliding or rotating surfaces apart. The oil forms a film between the two metal parts, which minimizes wear and reduces friction, thereby eliminating the excessive heating of the metal parts. Under the microscope the smoothest bearing surfaces of a well-built machine is made up ridges, hills and valleys. A cross-section of this same surface will appear as a saw-tooth edge.

When two such surfaces are rubbed together, or one rotated upon the other, the high spots tend to wear down. Continuing this action at even moderate speeds will soon develop excessive heat. In the incident of axles, the heat expands the metals, causing the axle and the bearing to stick, or "freeze." Water, grease, oil, graphite or soapstone may be used to lubricate these two surfaces.

The action of a lubricant is to fill up the valleys and form a film between two surfaces. Until such lubricants break down or are lost by leakage to the extent that the high spots of the metal come in contact again, the lubrication is being maintained. In cases of heavy moving parts, the pressure tends to increase the rate of breakdown.

A good lubricant should not run out from between the bearing surfaces. This depends a great deal upon the viscosity of the oil or grease, and the effect that heat has upon the viscosity.—J. T. K.

READ WHAT OWNERS SAY ABOUT G-E COPPER OXIDE RECTIFIERS

G-E Copper Oxide RECTIFIERS For Motion Picture Projection have been installed in hundreds of theaters throughout the country. In every case, improved projection, reduced current-costs and increased profits have resulted. The following statements are typical:

"In our theater, these Rectifiers are pulling 45 amperes, an increase of 15 amperes over the old type .... Rectifiers, thereby giving us a finer, brighter and more defined picture. At the same time we increased our screen 25 per cent. This, however, has not increased our power bill, in fact it has shown a slight decrease."

"Referring to the G-E Copper Oxide Rectifiers we installed in our three theaters, I am happy to advise you that they are more dependable and much more economical than ...., and as far as durability is concerned, I believe that they will outlast any ...."

You can get similar results. G-E Copper Oxide Rectifiers are available in two standard sizes: 40-50 amperes for 6-7 mm trim; 50-65 amperes for 6.5-8 mm trim. Other ratings may be built to order. For operating a spotlight, two units can be connected in series.

Improve projection . . . increase attendance and profits of your theaters . . . reduce current-costs. A G-E Copper Oxide Rectifying Unit saves from 5 to 10 cents per hour in cost of current alone. Get full information. Mail the coupon NOW.

The Soundhead of the New Western Electric Sound System

● Examining the operating principles and design of the pickup mechanism of equipment just introduced for theatres, in the first of two articles

THE NEW Western Electric standard reproducer set ("Mirrophonic") contains but two moving assemblies. Chains and couplings have been completely eliminated. There are no sprockets. There is no gear noise because there are no gears. The film glides over two simple rollers. The film speed control mechanism is equipped with an inertia or flywheel, controlled scanning drum, called a kinetic scanner. It is mounted on precision ball bearings to reduce friction to a minimum and is housed in a single compartment frame casting (See Figure 1).

Extra precautions have been taken to seal the ball bearings effectively against the entrance of dust, since this would interfere with the smooth rotation of the scanning drum and would introduce disturbances in the reproduced sound. The construction is such that the lubrication is entirely automatic. The kinetic scanner and its associated parts are accurately balanced to insure uniform travel of the film past the scanning point and to prevent the film from weaving in and out of its proper focal plane.

Constant speed of the scanning drum is maintained by means of the specially designed double flywheel of the kinetic scanner. One flywheel and the scanning drum are solidly locked together by a common shaft, preventing high frequency oscillations or extremely rapid changes in film speed. The other flywheel is free-floating and is coupled to the first one by means of a mechanical filter which suppresses slow oscillations.

The kinetic scanner is so stabilized or steadied that a sudden change in the film speed or a disturbance in the film loop, such as the passage of a film splice, has no appreciable effect on its unformity of rotation. During the acceleration period of the scanning drum, the two flywheels are coupled together by means of a centrifugal clutch. This development was made through the application of special test equipment by means of which minute variations in film speed may be accurately determined, as a percentage, based on the entire absence of velocity irregularities. The new test equipment is known as a flutter bridge.

The film is threaded into the projector mechanism (See Figure 2) in the usual manner up to the intermittent sprocket, from which it passes directly through a highly polished and hardened film chute into the sound reproducer, which fits between the projector mechanism and the lower magazine. Here it is accurately guided by a pivoted guide roller onto the scanning drum of the kinetic scanner, around which the film is wrapped. From this point it passes up to the lower feed sprocket in the projector mechanism and thence down to the lower film magazine. The extremely low friction of the kinetic scanner allows the film to rotate it without being subjected to appreciable tension. This results in the formation of an elastic film loop between the scanning drum and the feed sprocket. This flexible film coupling between the feed sprocket and the scanning drum prevents the sprocket tooth impulses from being transmitted to the scanning point. The guide roller is provided with chromium-plated flanges to resist wear, and it positions the center of the sound track at the center of the optical system. Its adjustment is accomplished by means of a slotted knob.

The location of the lower film magazine is such that the usual projection angles are readily attained.

Alignment of the film guiding parts of the reproducer set and those of the projector mechanism is simple, and no shimming is required. Projector mechanisms may be easily interchanged in less than twenty minutes.

The exciter lamp is mounted in a separate holder external to the sound reproducer. To eliminate adjustments and to facilitate replacements in case of a lamp failure, a new type of lamp, provided with a pre-focus skirt on its base, is employed. Rigid mounting of the socket eliminates vibration and prevents noise. A special power unit supplies filtered direct current to the exciter lamp, thus further assuring steady, noiseless operation.

The lens tube assembly is hermetically sealed and is exceptionally efficient in terms of light output, differing from earlier designs in that it images the incandescent filament of the high-intensity exciter lamp as a concentrated line of light directly on the sound track of the film by means of cylindrical lenses, without the use of a mechanical slit. The lens assembly is supported by an accurately machined casting, the motion of which is controlled by means of adjusting screws.

A total reflecting prism with one convex surface (Figure 1) is located within the scanning drum to deflect and focus the light rays, which have passed through the photographic recordings on the sound track of the film, out at right angles into the photoelectric cell. Here the modulated light beam is transformed into electrical vibrations, which are then amplified and finally converted into audible sound by the stage loudspeakers. The prism is mounted in a holder which can be removed readily for inspection and cleaning without disturbing its adjustment. The prism holder includes an aperture which is located directly behind the point where the film is scanned, to mask the length of the scanning line and to prevent stray light from entering and affecting the sound reproduction.

PHOTOELECTRIC CELL

The photoelectric cell (Figure 1) is a new type which has a higher sensitivity than was formerly obtainable. This cell, together with its associated transformer (cushion suspended to reduce noise to a minimum) and a condenser, is mounted on the door of the film compartment. The entire assembly is protected by a sheet metal cover, which also acts as a shield against external electrical disturbances. When the door is opened, a clear path is presented for threading the film.

A flexible armoured cable is employed to bring the photoelectric cell circuit from the door to the terminal compartment at the front end of the sound producer. The motor bracket is provided with means for maintaining proper belt tension.

Transmission between the reproducer set and main amplifier is provided by the electronic regulator, which combines the functions of both film-amplifier and fader. Among other advantages, this device prevents the introduction of noise through amplifying the sound currents at their source, controls theatre volume through nineteen steps, prevents interaction between reproducer sets by means of a special "off" position, and (most important) materially aids in making smooth changeovers because the volume level of each machine is pre-set before the changeover interval. It consists of a single-unit constant gain stage and a variable power limiting potentiometer housed in a cabinet which is designed for mounting on the booth front wall adjacent to its reproducer set.

The output of each electronic regulator is wired through shielded cable to a changeover cabinet, by which instantaneous change overs may be made from either projector position. Positive action is assured by a spring-operated cam switch.

[Amplification and the speaker system of the new Western Electric equipment will be described in the October 17th issue.—THE EDITOR.]

WHAT REALLY CONSTITUTES EXCELLENCE IN PROJECTION

PERFECTION IN projection, as I understand the meaning of the term, includes all those many factors that go toward the placing of both visual and sound elements before theatre audiences in the most effective manner possible. For example, regardless of how perfect the work of the projectionist or projection staff may be, if there are faults in things outside of the projectionist's control, results are not and cannot be what they should be, because the general conditions are not favorable to such results. The screen may be unclean or have a surface unsuited to the auditorium, or it may be wrongly located or of unsuitable dimensions; then the efforts of the projectionists are impeded and the whole projection system is accordingly defective.

Projection, in its results, has directly to do with what theatre patrons see and hear, and how they see and hear it. If the great majority of an audience is able to see all details of the screen image with comfort and without unnecessary eye strain, and is able to hear all sound without conscious effort and in pleasing naturalness, then projection may be said to be perfect. When most of the patrons are unable to do either or both of these things, then, regardless of what the fault may be, projection cannot be said to be of proper standard.

Let us examine this matter in some detail, first ascending to the theatre projection room where motion is "created" from a series of still pictures, and sound is re-created from photographic shadows. Going first to the very source, let us place a reel of film on the hand rewinder and glance through its length. Is it free from oil? If it is not, real excellence in either visual or sound effects will be impossible. Is it free from deposits of dirt? If not, perfection in either image or sound will be impossible of attainment. Is it in at least reasonably good mechanical condition? If not, perfection in projection will be problematical, to say nothing of fire hazard. Excellence in projection demands clean film that is in good mechanical condition. These two items are basic.

Next let us glance at the equipments. First, are they good equipments in the sense that they can produce good results? If not, then regardless of price, they are not good and will in the end cause box office loss larger than the savings which the price seemed to promise.

If it is good equipment in the sense above indicated, is it in a first-class state of repair? Is it in the best possible condition? If it is not, then regardless of basic excellence, it will not produce the results it is capable of. Even the tyro should be able to realize that any falling off in projection results must have a deleterious effect on the box office over a period of time. One poor show may do small damage. Several poor ones may effect no permanent injury, but just as continued excellence boosts box office receipts, so does continued lack of excellence operate to decrease them by causing patrons to be less eager for frequent attendance. The theatre does not sell merely a certain show; it is continually endeavoring to sell the motion picture as a regular form of stimulation and entertainment.

Next on our list comes the handling of equipments. If the equipments are excellent throughout, in a good state of repair, servied with films that are clean and in good mechanical condition, and the equipments are well handled, we may expect good results so far as the projection room is concerned, remembering, of course, that well-handled includes expert knowledge on the part of the projectionists, maximum cleanliness, proper repairs, informed selection of lubricants, as well as constant alertness and faithful application of the knowledge possessed by the men every moment they are on duty.

Unfortunately, many managers permit equipment to fall into a serious state of disrepair, for the reason that no one thing that is wrong seems of sufficient importance to justify the expenditure necessary for its remedying. There is a little lost motion in the projector gear train, but not very much. The bearings are a bit worn, but not very badly. The intermittent sprocket teeth are a bit worn, but not much—and so on through a considerable list. Each fault in itself is trivial. Considered alone, it would work no serious harm to results, but when several such faults are added together, a different situation is presented. It then becomes a serious matter for the reason that this trivial injury to results, and that equally trivial one, plus perhaps several others, add up to distinct injury to the image or sound or both. And just enough "snap" is taken out of the show as a whole to make patrons not quite so eager to come again as they might otherwise be.

All the various things thus far mentioned are essential to excellence in results, but still perfection will not be attained if there are other faults—if, for instance, the screen is not of proper dimensions to serve the whole auditorium in the best possible way. As a matter of fact, it very often is impossible to have a screen of such size and so located that it will serve all of the seating area equally well. If of a size to serve the front seats well, it will, in many instances, serve the rear seats but poorly, or vice versa. It therefore seems the part of wisdom to select a screen of such dimensions as will best serve the central area, front to rear. It is of course understood that the front seats must not be close enough to the screen to cause the screen image, as viewed from them, to lose its sharpness appreciably. Other related factors are screen brightness and distortion due to extreme viewing angles.

Screen illumination is a matter that must be dealt with according to the conditions present in each individual case. It involves many highly important items, the first of which is brilliancy of illumination, or "screen brightness." If the maximum viewing distance does not exceed, say, 75 feet, the matter then is comparatively simple. If it is long, however, very real problems arise. The gaze of theatre patrons remains fixed upon the screen for a long period of time, more or less without an intermission. In the very nature of things, this is under the best possible conditions trying to the eyes, which strain may be greatly increased if screen brightness is either too high or too low.

If the maximum viewing distance is long —say, 100 to 150 feet—and the screen brightness is such as will best serve the rear seats, then it is too bright for the comfort of those occupying seats near the front. To them the whites of the picture will cause glare spots uncomfortable to sensitive eyes (and many eyes are hyper-sensitive to light). As in the case of screen dimensions, it seems good practice to select, after careful experiment conducted with the aid of several people of normal eyesight seated in the central portion of the seating space, a level of screen brightness that will best serve that section, and this can, for practical purposes, be accepted as a good average for the whole. It is a matter that calls for much patience, study and careful experiment by exhibitors and managers.

As to the setting up of a standard of screen illumination in foot-candles or footlamberts, I hold it to be impracticable, although the Society of Motion Picture Engineers has expended much time and effort in an attempt to do so. Too many practical things interfere with the application of the theoretical rule, and they vary widely in different theatres. There is, for example, brightness of auditorium illumination, very often more or less tinted with color, to contend with. That item very naturally affects results. Another factor is the effectiveness (or lack of it) with which extraneous light is shaded from the screen. That, too, has a very considerable effect upon the light level of the screen. There is the tone or color of light reflected to the screen by widely varying auditorium decorations, as well as the effect of immediate screen surroundings. Then, too, there is the quality or tone of the light coming from the lens. All these various items, and yet others, directly affect the problem of screen brightness level and each calls for specific adjustment.

There must be absolutely no travel ghost. There should be none visible when the screen is examined from a distance of only 25 feet, using a good opera glass. Otherwise, in one and a half to two hours, it will cause discomfort to many eyes. Travel ghost blurs all horizontal lines in the picture in proportion to its amount. The effect of slight ghost is small, but the viewing time is long, the effect cumulative.

I shall not here discuss the damaging effects of distortion due to an excessive projection angle, since its remedy apparently must await future theatre planning, in which it will, let us hope, be eliminated.

What has been said about equipment applies equally to visual and sound. Sound is excellent only when it may be heard and clearly understood by theatre patrons without conscious effort, and so heard that it imparts to auditors a sense of naturalness. To accomplish this requires careful control of volume to suit varying atmospheric conditions, variations in absorption by audience clothing, etc. It demands freedom from reverberation and echo. In addition, there must be an absolute minimum of noise from loudspeakers other than the original sound recorded upon the film. This of course demands perfect cleanliness of all parts of the equipment and of the film sound track, and also requires proper electrical connections, switches and sliding contacts. Briefly, it demands good equipment maintained in a perfect state of repair and adjustment, and kept perfectly clean.

From the foregoing it will be seen that effective projection and reproduction of motion pictures represents no small task. They may be fully accomplished, however, by theatre managers and projectionists working in perfect co-operation. Note that last very carefully. It is of high importance. Lack of such co-operation may and probably will result in mediocre results—possibly very poor results.

To summarize the matter, excellence in projection calls for (a) a screen image of such dimensions as will best serve the auditorium, viewed as a whole; (b) screen brightness level that will best serve the auditorium, viewed as a whole; (c) a screen image that is rock-steady; (d) a screen image free from rain and disfiguring specks caused by deposits of dust and dirt, and from a mottled appearance caused by oil deposits on the film; (e) a screen image wholly free from travel ghost and visible flicker; (f) a screen image that is knife-sharp in focus; (g) freedom from visible distortion caused by projection angle, (h) sound in which conversation is at all times clearly understandable without conscious effort, and musical tones of effective naturalness, (i) sound at a proper volume of level at all times. And these are possible of attainment with good equipment maintained in a perfect state of repair and well and intelligently handled by a projectionist who thoroughly understands his business and has the co-operation of the theatre management.

REACTIONS

The article, "What Really Constitutes Excellence in Projection," was read before publication by several supervisors of projection departments of five large circuits. Their remarks upon the article, contained in letters, are given below.—F. H. R.

Lester Isaac, Loew's:
I must say I liked it very much. If printed intact, it will create a favorable impression upon the industry. As a matter of fact, it is one of the best articles I have had the pleasure of reading in quite some while.

Harry Rubin, Paramount:
I have read the article and cannot see wherein there could be any serious disagreement with the material therein contained, the manner of its presentation or the conclusions arrived at.

Frank E. Cahill, Jr., Warner:
Despite the fact that I personally believe the subject to be a controversial one, I do congratulate you on your forwardness in approaching such an important subject single-handedly. . . . Certainly over a period of years you have endeavored very forcefully to bring to the attention of the industry the importance of projection and I sincerely hope that this contribution will awaken in the minds of all theatre people the necessity of further collaborating.

Charles F. Horstman, RKO:
My reactions to the article are very favorable. It certainly will make theatre people stop, look, listen and check up on the wares they are selling to their own patrons. To those outside the theatre who may read it, it should bring some enlightenment as to what constitutes excellence in the presentation of the goods they buy. Just one small piece of inferior or poorly conditioned equipment or part can create the difference between a perfect and an imperfect show. . . . It is of high importance to stress the fact that presentation of a perfect show to theatre audiences calls for 100% co-operation between the entire personnel of the theatre. It is not a one-man responsibility.

C. A. Dentelbeck
Famous Players-Canadian:
Your article, "What Constitutes Excellence in Projection," is so well written, with every important point emphasized, that it portrays a clear picture of a perfect theatre. I know that I would travel many, many miles to see a theatre which embodies all the features set forth in your paper.

Mr. Richardson, you are to be highly commended for giving the motion picture industry this guide, by following which it can attain the best possible sound and projection.

EFFECT OF NEW REEL ON PROJECTION ROUTINE

APPARENTLY there still is some confusion with regard to precedure in connection with the new 2000-foot reels. It therefore seems advisable to set forth certain facts in order to clear up doubtful points.

First, there is the matter of necessary projector adjustments. If your projectors are equipped to handle the old 1000-foot small hub reels, the takeup pulley must be changed for one of proper diameter for the new 4-inch hub reels. Your supply dealer should be able to supply you with one of correct diameter without delay.

If your projectors have takeup assemblies suitable for handling the 5-inch hub reels, then also the take-up pulleys must be changed, since in that event they would not rotate the 4-inch hub reels rapidly enough to take up the first hundred feet of film or so, and film would pile up in the soundhead.

If, however, your projectors are equipped to handle the new 4-inch hub reels and you have a supply of 5-inch hub projection room reels, you may use them; there will be no effect except a small amount of added take-up clutch slippage that will do no harm. Just use a projection room reel below at first projection, and an exchange reel at the last. No extra rewinding is required. In short, your first act is to have your projectors equipped to handle the 4-inch hub reels, pulleys for which are available at the supply houses.

The takeup tension must of course be readjusted, but the same old rule applies; namely, just enough tension to insure rewinding of all the film. More is not only unnecessary, but is injurious to the film. Excess tension also involves increased wear upon the lower sprocket teeth. Take-up tension adjustment is a matter for careful experiment until just the right amount is applied. A small excess above the amount for actual rewinding of all film is of course necessary as a safety factor, but don't overdo the matter of safety.

As to rewinders, they must of course be able to handle the large diameter reels, but I think probably that change has already been made in all theatres. If not, the supply dealer can supply you with exactly what is needed.

The only real difficulty is encountered in those relatively very few localities where an attempt is being made to force the retention of the old out-moded 1000-foot reel. In such places exhibitors should, if it be a matter of local laws or regulations, demand of exchanges that 1000-foot reels be delivered to theatres, each equipped with proper standard release print leaders and proper tail pieces. Of course, though, the S.R.P. changeover markers will be absent on the first half of 2000-foot reels thus divided. The exchange cannot supply that item and projectionists must make note of the action at changeover time, or follow some plan such as will be noted.

Exchanges most certainly must comply with local laws and regulations, hence exhibitors have every right to make such request and make it in the form of a demand. If necessary, the demand may be made to the local authorities who are attempting to impose their mistaken views upon the whole country, at least nine-tenths of which is in accord with the 2000-foot reel standardization.

If this be not done, then of course the projectionist will be compelled to defy them or to "undouble," which latter is not so easy because of the lack of proper leader for the second 1000-foot reel thus produced. The most feasible way, it seems to me, would be to have the management supply, say, 200 feet of developed film upon which the frames would show faintly. It then would be an easy matter to measure off the correct distance for the aperture frame and affix a white, gummed marker on the aperture frame, with one on each of several frames thereafter, since one frame of the leader will be destroyed.

But all this "undoubling" represents waste, unnecessary labor and damage to film, as well as multiplicity of chances for a balk at changeover. The 2000-foot reel is here. It represents progress. Its introduction will, in my opinion, have very slight effect (if any) upon the labor situation. The introduction of the 2000-foot reel will not have one-tenth the effect in bringing about one-man rooms that failure to remain beside the working projector did, so why not bow to progress?

THE DESIGN OF LENS PORTS

A. L. COOPER, projectionist of Toronto, Kan., writes, "I regard the lens port construction described in the Bluebook of Projection as not only adaptable to all theatres, but also to all types of projectors. I am myself in favor of the large wall opening, reduced as per the Bluebook to an effective opening a trifle larger than the light beam.

"I find, however, that in the construction of some projection rooms the height of the lens port has been predetermined; also, the angle of the light beam has been laid out and they have merely left a round opening, properly sloped and of size to just clear the light beam.

"While there are points in favor of this plan, still I favor the Bluebook way. True, the small opening does away with necessity for reduction, and is so small that with a thick wall little sound can pass, thus making a glass cover unnecessary. Moreover, the opening is not unsightly from the auditorium side, and affords convenient means for anchoring almost any type of lens port changeover device."

All of which is quite true, but I nevertheless regard the large wall opening stepped down as just as efficient and more practical. If a beam-size port be left in a thick wall, and either projection distance or screen image is altered, it will be no small job to change the opening to conform, whereas with the large opening stepped down, it is a small task to change it in any way desired.

If properly done, the step-down plan is just as efficient as is the small opening, in so far as has to do with transmission of sound. As to "unsightliness," I regard it as trivial—so much so that I would not give it a serious thought.

The projectionist and not the architect should determine the details of operation, but the small part not only makes changes difficult; it precludes easy and inexpensive experiment aimed at determining whether some change may be desirable.

THE SPIRIT THAT PROMISES SUCCESS

FROM Glen Atkins of Dallastown, Pa., comes a letter, certain parts of which are illustrative of the type of men we may feel proud to have in the ranks of projection, if only for a time. Such men will succeed, no matter what they undertake. Moreover, this correspondent is the kind our unions should be very proud to have in their ranks. He says, in part:

"I have studied your writings and books ever since I first became interested in motion picture work. Carefully worded, flattering phrases are unnecessary—just a simple statement of appreciation. You have left a mark in the field of projection which neither time or progress will erase.

"I am a member of Local No. 283, York, Pa. At present I am employed as sound technician at the Valencia ballroom in York. I also project for Warner Brothers' local theatres, this week at the Warner Strand. Also at present I am servicing five local independent theatres. I have quite an array of servicing equipment, including an analyzer, vacuum tube voltmeter, beat frequency oscillator and a cathode ray oscillograph, the latter used in conjunction with a 9000-cycle test loop of film, which outfit results in a very accurate focusing of the sound optical system.

"My work, my hobby and, in fact, my whole existence centers around the recording and subsequent reproduction of sound. My goal in life is to finally become a recording engineer. I am constantly studying the best available technical books and journals and am going to fight my way to the top—difficult, but possible."

Surely, that last statement points the way to success. The best plums do not just drop into one's lap. One must climb up and pick them.

WHAT TO DO IN CASE OF CUT-OUTS

AUBREY E. SWEARENGEN, projectionist of Woodville, Texas, sends in a cut-out 5.5 inches long. It not only has ripped sprocket holes, but also the film edge is bent over sharply. The cut-out was perfectly well justified. However, it brought to mind the fact that, so far as I know, no proper procedure to follow in such cases has ever been set forth. I therefore will take the liberty of discussing cut-outs briefly.

When films are received from any exchange, regardless of the class of service, there should never be necessity for cut-outs. The removal of faults that make the film unsafe for projection, or that will show on the screen, is the duty of film exchange inspectors. But we still have exchanges that apparently have no such idea, for they send out prints that contain ripped sprocket holes, oil smears, loose splices, etc., apparently with the notion that the projectionist will save the exchange money by acting as their hired-man-without-pay, and make all necessary repairs.

Where cut-outs must be made, the matter should be reported to the theatre management, with a request that a bill be sent the exchange for payment for the work—that is, unless the management is itself willing to shoulder the expense. In any event, the cut-out should be reported to the exchange, and each one made marked in some manner—a V-clipped sprocket hole, for example—so that it may be readily located and the cut-out replaced. This is very important if several inches of film be removed, since otherwise even a good inspection may fail to note the missing film and the theatre receiving it later will have a break.

VISIBILITY OF SCREEN TO THE PROJECTIONIST

TESTS CONDUCTED by Dr. Lorrin A. Riggs of Clark University, tend to show that the human eye is ten thousand times more sensitive to light in darkness than in daylight. The conclusion was arrived at by measuring the tiny electric currents generated by light action in the nerves of the eye. I present this as proof of the correctness of my position, oft set forth in print, that too much light in theatre projection rooms reduces visibility of the distant screen image.

Yet in theatre after theatre I find brightly lighted projection rooms. True, the light makes the room somewhat more pleasant, but after all the projection room is a workshop, not a pleasure salon. It should be made as comfortable and pleasant as is consistent with good results—no less and no more.

DATA NECESSARY ON SCREEN IMAGE SIZE

MANY LETTERS are received in which advice is requested as to proper screen image dimensions for individual theatres. They come from exhibitors, theatre managers and projectionists. But very few contain all the data required for intelligent reply, which lack causes both trouble and delay, since I must communicate with the inquirer and obtain the necessary data before answering.

When seeking advice as to proper screen image dimensions for any individual theatre, always supply the following measurements: (1) Width of seating area at both last and front rows. (2) Distance of both front and rear rows of seats from proscenium (if no stage, then from front wall). (3) If there is a stage, the width and height or proscenium and distance from it to rear wall. (4) Reasons, if any, why screen cannot be located at rear wall. (5) Distance required in back of screen for loudspeaker.

With this information in hand, it is always possible to lay out the seating space, etc., to scale, and thus ascertain precisely what the condition will be with any width of picture. Without these data, attempting to offer advice is more or less a guessing job.

Many ask what various things are affected by screen image dimensions. First, there is of course the matter of viewing, the effect upon which varies widely at different sections of many auditoriums. Second, there is the matter of brightness obtainable with a given expenditure of electric power, which also varies widely. Third, there is, under certain conditions, the heavy distortion set up by side viewing angles. Fourth, there is the added visibility of defects, which amounts to considerable, especially in theatres not using first-run films. Fifth, there is, particularly if anything but the very best lenses are used, a less sharp definition if the projection distance is not long and the picture size is increased. This latter has little effect if high grade lenses are used, except possibly in extreme cases.

The matter of screen image dimensions is one over which much discussion is expended, very often by those who apparently have little if any conception of the points involved. As a matter of fact, some exhibitors go to rather absurd extremes, using a screen image size that just about totally ruins the value of much of the forward half of their seating space; a condition that authorities should not permit because of the eye strain involved.

It would seem right and perfectly proper that the Society of Motion Picture Engineers establish some minimum standard for screen image dimension with relation to distance from front seats, which standard be given heed to by city and State officials.

If you doubt the need for drastic action, go to one of the many theatres using a huge screen image located from 15 to 20 feet from the front seats—some even reduce this distance to 12. Sit in the front row through

Irvin Scholsberg, projectionist of the Edgewood theatre in Baltimore, has sent in these examples of his kodakery, showing the Edgewood projection room, which is so wide—50 feet—that he had to take it in two doses. The depth is 15 feet. Equipment consists in Simplex projectors, DeForest soundheads, Peerless Magnarc lamps drawing 60 amperes with motor-generator rectification. The generator room is adjoining, and measures 20x20 feet.

THE REASONS FOR APPRENTICESHIPS

JOHN C. MANDRAKE of Chicago makes this inquiry: "Can you advise me as to whether or not the IATSE & MPMO locals are permitted by the laws of their governing body to establish an apprenticeship system? I have made this inquiry of three members of the Chicago local union. One answered with an emphatic no! Another said yes, but apparently his knowledge was vague; he was not at all certain. The third said he did not know, but thought not. May I ask for an expression of your own views upon the rightness or wrongness of the apprenticeship system? It seems to me by every rule of reason, right and common sense, to say nothing of fair dealing to producers, projectionists should be obliged to serve a fixed period of apprenticeship, which means training in practical work plus some mapped-out course of study, before being admitted to any local union."

With which I thoroughly agree, Friend Mandrake. Your mention of the producer in this connection is unique. It is a truly amazing thing that producers who expend every possible effort to impress the best possible results upon their films, manifest not even the slightest interest in how greatly its quality is reduced by incompetence in theatre projection rooms. It would seem they would long ago have entered vigorous protest against the employment of men having only a smattering of practical experience and possessed of just exactly no technical knowledge at all.

Today almost all responsible labor unions, except those of the IATSE & MPMO, require a fixed, definite period of training in apprenticeship before admission to the union. Why is it the IATSE & MPMO international body does not take this forward step, which now is practiced by only a very few local unions? Into the hands of projectionists is placed costly machinery, optical systems, large motors and generators, powerful light sources, etc., with which they must reproduce and project productions often costing huge sums of money, the entertainment value of which to audiences will vary widely with the care and competence of the man or men in the projection room. Yet these men are, save in the case of a very few unions, admitted into membership, and thus stamped with the seal of approval of the IATSE & MPMO, without the formality of any apprenticeship training whatever.

The IATSE & MPMO international law authorizes any of its local unions to establish an apprenticeship system, provided the number of apprentices be not in excess of one to each five regular members, which limitation seems reasonable; and further provided that no union, regardless of size, may have in excess of 20 apprentices, which is perhaps not quite so reasonable for a few locals. However, the law (IA constitu-above all things is the prime requisite of a projection lamp. This essential characteristic is dependent on correct design — highest engineering skill — careful manufacture. Strong spares no expense to attain trustworthiness — the ability to render faithful, trouble-free service and to withstand long, continuous use at high amperages.

CONCERNING METERS IN SOUND TESTS

JERRY D. GAGE, projectionist of the Globe theatre in Bertram, Tex., writes, "I have been shooting pictures at screens for ten years and have read your Comments for a long while. May I congratulate you upon your new Bluebook of Projection. I have certainly learned a lot from it. Just now I seek information and know that supplied by you will be reliable. Our equipment consists of Simplex projectors equipped with Strong low-intensity lamps and rectifiers. The sound is Western Electric, G64C.

"Now here is my question: I plan purchasing a multi-range volt-ohm-milliameter of the rectifier type. The one I have in mind will read a. c.-d. c. voltage from zero to 1,250; d. c. milliameters from zero to 125; ohms, zero to 2,000,000; and output voltage, zero to 1,250.

"I desire to use this output meter in conjunction with a 9,000-cycle test film in order to adjust my exciter lamps. Can this be used for reading decibels as well as the output meter employed by W. E. service engineers? If so, would you adjust the lamp for maximum output reading, and where should the meter be connected, primary or second of output transformer or output tube plates?"

The Weston Electrical Instrument Corporation has supplied as much of an answer as Friend Gage's information has permitted, as follows:

"The standard output meter, reading in decibels, is nothing more than a copper oxide rectifier type a. c. voltmeter. It therefore makes little difference whether you employ an instrument reading in decibels, except in the interpretation of the results. There is, however, an added complication, namely, the load placed on the circuit by the indicating instrument.

"The above named voltmeter seldom has a sensitivity exceeding 1,000 ohms per volt, whereas output meters are frequently more sensitive. The Weston model 695 Type 3A, for example, has a sensitivity of 2,667 ohms per volt, while Type 3B of the same make has a sensitivity of 1,333 ohms per volt. In general, however, output meters in the lower price brackets have a sensitivity of 1,000 ohms per volt, which in most cases works out with satisfaction.

"As we understand the question, its meaning is: Will an a. c. voltmeter of the copper oxide type be as satisfactory as an output meter that reads in decibels for use on the output stage of your equipment? Our answer to such a question is that, other factors being equal, it makes no difference whether the scale is calibrated in decibels or volts, provided one type of reading be as satisfactory as the other for your purpose. Any copper oxide type a. c. voltmeter may be used as an output meter, provided sufficient energy be available to operate the mechanism.

"We are not familiar with all the peculiarities of the equipment. However, if adjustments are being made for maximum output from the amplifier, we believe the lamp should be adjusted for maximum reading on the indicating instrument.

"Preferably the meter should be connected to the secondary side of the output transformer, which will tend to eliminate difficulties due to presence of d. c. voltage on the primary side. This instrument can only be used across the transformer primary, or from plate to plate of two tubes where a push-pull amplifier is used, but in either case a blocking condenser must be connected in series with the meter to prevent d. c. from flowing through it, though this leads to a frequency error, which in general is not important.

"As regards the use of a 9000-cycle test film, please note that the frequency error of the copper oxide rectifier type of instrument at 9000 cycles is approximately 4%. For use as an output meter this error should have no importance, since the readings will be comparative only."

I have given space to this for the reason that the information therein contained with regard to the copper oxide type rectifier type instruments should be interesting to most projectionists, even though not one theatre in ten, if that many, is equipped with a competent set of meters, chiefly for the reason that their value is overlooked.

SCREEN, LENSES AND GOOD VISION

THE MANAGEMENT of the Nottawa theatre in Blackstone, Va., writes, "We are building a new theatre. Many have offered advice regarding size of screen we should use and other things. Will you please tell us what size screen and picture will best serve, also what lenses we should use? The width of the new house will be 52 feet, projection distance 95 feet, average height 25 feet.

"We contemplate using Peerless low-intensity lamps, 30 amperes, with 12- and 8-millimeter carbons and silver perforated screen. It will be a great favor if you will advise us as to these things and offer any other suggestions as may seem to you right and proper."

The number of such inquiries indicates need for frequent discussion of these matters. Assuming the rear seats to be no farther from the screen than the projection distance, I would recommend nothing larger than an 18-foot-wide picture. Were the theatre my own I might even use a 16-footer. A picture large enough to afford a view of all details of the screen image from the rear seats when the picture is well illuminated is large enough for every purpose, and an 18-footer in this case fills the bill perfectly. The larger the picture, the less well it serves the front half of the auditorium. If too large, it will serve the front rows of seats very poorly, indeed. The larger the screen, the more light is required to illuminate it to any degree of brightness, and electric power costs money!

Presumably, by "silver screen" you mean a "specular" one, and such surfaces reflect light in more or less narrow angles. Your front rows of seats may not be less than 45, and may be 52 feet wide, which means a pretty large viewing angle from a goodly portion of the front seats. In this case you need a diffusive screen.

As to size and immediate surroundings of the screen as a whole, they should be large enough to permit increase in size of the picture if desired at some future time.

As to lenses, take my advice and don't spare money. The best is none too good. Tell the manufacturer the projection distance and picture width. Ask his advice as to what lens will best serve you, then take my advice to follow his. He may recommend a lens of higher cost than you are used to paying; if he does, don't balk!

If you give your dealer the exact projection distance and picture width, stating type of projector aperture, or the micrometric measurement of its width, and order matched lenses, you should receive exactly what is needed. Remember this: With proper care lenses last indefinitely, and a good lens is in the nature of an investment.

WARMING UP THE PROJECTORS

D. T. BONDALE of Denver writes, "I have been told it is advisable to warm up the projectors by permitting them to run—without film, of course—for a few moments before threading for the show. Will you tell me if this is good practice, and if so, why?"

That depends. In warm country it is unnecessary. In the north, in winter, if the projection room gets very cold during the idle hours, it is well to run the projectors with the light turned on (dowser down if any part of audience is present) for a few moments in order to warm up.

Much depends upon the character of lubricant used. Thick oil may become sufficiently stiff to affect the operation of certain parts appreciably. In certain types of sound equipment it may cause "wows" until the grease loosens up under the effect of warmth.

If the light beam is on, the temperature should rise sufficiently in two or three minutes. If not, then a considerably longer time may be necessary. It depends upon how cold it is.

CAUSES OF POOR SOUND QUALITY

L. J. COLBERT of St. Joseph, Mo., asks, "Will you be kind enough to tell me the various causes of poor sound quality? One of my projectors requires a one-point higher fader setting than the other. Why is this?"

Poor sound quality may be due to a host of things, including dust, dirt or lint interfering with the sound track scanning beam—in other words, to an unclean sound gate; to dirt or oil on sound track; to a defective or weak photocell; to worn sound gate film tracks; to dirt on face of constant speed sprocket or the element used to maintain constant speed; to sound gate not being closed tightly, to defective exciter lamp or one not focused critically; oil or dirt on exciter lamp optical system, etc., etc., etc.

As to the difference in volume, it may be due to unmatched photocells, or to the fact that one of them is weak. A faulty exciter lamp or its contacts may be responsible. A dirty sound gate also may be responsible—or even fault in one of the faders. It is, of course, understsood that these are the ordinary places in which to seek the causes of such fault. As a matter of fact, it is possible for so many things to lower the quality of sound that a list of them would run to more space than is available here.

VALUE OF SEATS BESIDE PROJECTORS

REVERTING to a subject I have laid before our readers from time to time during my years of activity in the projection field, I again most emphatically say it is not only a mistake, but a serious one, not to locate a suitable stool or other seat beside each projector. Such seat should be of adjustable height and fixed in such position that when occupying it the projectionist will have a clear view of the screen and at the same time be able to reach all switches, buttons and controls, except possibly some of those at the rear of the lamphouse. Those latter seldom require manipulation except at time of striking the arc.

Many exhibitors and managers have the mistaken idea that no seats should be permitted beside the projectors. Such seats they seem to imagine tend to breed laziness. Men will feel more inclined to attend to their duties when standing up, they argue.

I do not agree. While projection is in progress the place (save in emergency) of the projectionist is at the working projector. If there is a seat there he can attend to those duties exactly as well as, if not better than, when standing. Not only that, but if he is seated and there is no other seat permitted within the room, he is very likely to remain seated unless something happens that obliges him to arise. Seated, he has the the screen constantly within view. He is within immediate contact with all controls. Should a film fire start, he is right there beside it and can act instantly.

If, on the other hand, he is obliged to remain standing—well, he just won't do it, but instead will wander around, leaving the screen image to take care of itself and the motor to run the show. It is done and done more or less constantly in thousands of theatres.

Just who introduced the idea that better work would be done with men compelled to stand, I don't know, but the idea is wrong and operates harmfully.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE DEPARTMENT DEALING WITH ARCHITECTURAL DESIGN AND MATERIALS, DECORATION AND FURNISHINGS

ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES: One of the principal functions of this department is to answer inquiries pertaining to preliminary considerations in the planning of a new theatre or the remodeling of an existing one. All questions receive the personal attention of Peter M. Hulsken, A.I.A., contributing editor of this department and a practicing architect who long has specialized in theatre design. He will be glad to offer advice, suggestions and criticism. Working plans, however, cannot be supplied. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to Better Theatres, Rockefeller Center, New York. In publishing replies, only initials are used for identification.

THE QUESTION:

I HAVE TAKEN up the matter of remodeling and enlarging a theatre here, and the owner of the building is interested in my plan. At present the theatre is very small, the building is 24x80 feet. There is a vacant store space the same size adjoining. This is all in the same building with a partition wall dividing the two spaces. There is also an additional 40 feet lot at the rear.

My idea is to extend the building back the entire length of the lot, building in a stage of some 10 or 12 feet in depth. There are to be store spaces approximately 15 feet wide by 20 feet long on each side of the lobby. The present ceiling is 18 feet high.

The building is of rock construction with walls plastered. I would like to get as many seats as possible in the balcony on account of the class of patronage in this territory. Both men's and women's rest rooms are to be built in.—H. P.

THE ANSWER:

IF YOU ARE going to add the vacant store space to your present theatre and also add 40 feet to the rear, it will be necessary to remove the dividing wall between theatre and store room, also the rear wall, so you only would save the present side walls, which will have to be extended for an additional 40 feet. Under these conditions, you are practically building a new theatre.

The ceiling height of 18 feet is not sufficient for the installation of a balcony, and since the present roof construction will have to be torn down and a new roof be installed, you can make the new ceiling height as much as will be required.

You may be able to install a balcony of about 240 capacity. The seating arrangement on the first floor should have a center bank of 13 seats across with an aisle on each side and two wall banks of four seats each across.

It would be well to reduce the width of the store rooms on each side of the lobby to 14 feet, as the lobby should be at least 16 feet wide. I also am afraid, if the stores are to be 20 feet long, that the men's and women's rooms will have to be placed either in the basement or on a mezzanine floor under the balcony, since if planned on the first floor, too much space will have to be taken from the auditorium floor area, which of course would greatly reduce the seating capacity.

If there is plenty of rock available, there is no objection to using it for wall construction. The roof should be constructed either with steel trusses or clear span roof joist trusses.

The ceiling should be plastered with acoustical plaster—or sound absorbing tiles or boards may be used, the latter being less expensive. The side walls may be plastered or furred for wall boards.

As it is impossible for this department to supply you with sketches, I suggest that you consult an experienced theatre architect, as your project is a great deal more complicated than you may suspect.

THE QUESTION:

I HAVE BOUGHT a lot in a town of 1200 population and hope to build a moving picture theatre on it real soon. The lot is 33 by 132—brick buildings on either side—and I am planning to use cinder blocks. Have you any suggestions or advice you can give me regarding building?

I am new in the game and would appreciate your valuable help regarding structure, sound, etc. I want a new, modern, up-to-date building not too elaborate for a town of that size.—J. W. D.

THE ANSWER:

THERE IS NO objection in using cinder blocks for the construction of your theatre. In many instances it has proved quite economical.

For a theatre 33 feet wide the best seating arrangement would be a center bank of 14 seats across with a wall aisle on each side.

If the cinder blocks are laid up carefully, you can eliminate the plastering of the walls and decorate directly on the blocks. This is quite a saving. These blocks also have some acoustical qualities and are supposed to be waterproof.

The ceiling should either be plastered with acoustical plaster, or for a less expensive method, sound absorbing tiles or boards may be used. These tiles can be laid up in different patterns which make a pleasant effect.

As there are buildings on each side of your theatre, and as the area to be covered is rather small, I suggest the use of structural glass for the front. This will enable you to obtain a very modern front at a rather low cost.

Place the ticket office in the center of the entrance, at the sidewalk. Set the doors back flush with back of ticket booth.

The lobby should be at least 12 feet deep. Place men's and women's rooms on each side of lobby, entered from foyer or cross-aisle, which should not be less than 6 feet wide.

The proper location for the projection room in your case is over the lobby. There also will be ample space for the manager's office and store room.

WALL TREATMENT AT MINIMUM COST

QUITE frequently, I receive inquiries for suggestions on how to treat unsightly side walls and also how to improve acoustical conditions by such a treatment. In the majority of cases the inquiries stress the point that this should be done at the lowest cost possible. To do this, it is necessary to use the least expensive materials obtainable which will yet give acceptable results.

One effective way of doing this is to divide the entire wall length in sections. The width of each section should be about one-third the height of the wall above the wainscoting cap or dado line. Run one course of 24 x 24-inch beveled edge tongued and grooved sound-absorbing tiles along the ceiling and along the wainscoting cap, and form the intermediate stiles in the same way. This material should be cemented to the plaster wall. To make this more effective, place another 12 x 12-inch beveled edge tile in the center and on top of the lower tile.

Since these tiles come in various shades, it will be well to use the lightest shade for the center tile. These tiles do not have to be decorated, and the cost of them, applied, run between 8c to 10c per square foot. The only area which needs to be decorated is the existing plaster wall panel.

Should acoustical qualities have to be improved, a draped panel can be installed in the space between the tiles, and it would be well to form a border of the old wall about 12 inches wide, then use a 5-inch or 6-inch wood casing to form the frame for the drapes.

This casing should be so designed so as to project at least 3 inches beyond the old wall surface, so if it should prove necessary, felt could be tacked to the wall surface behind the draped panel. By painting the wood casing and the old plaster wall border in different colors, a very good decorative scheme may be obtained at a very low cost.

Reducing Insurance Rates

enough still to effect a substantial saving.

Several companies finance premium accounts of this kind, charging 10% to 12% net. However, with increasingly low interest rates, other companies are getting into the field and offering a lower rate. For instance, one of Kansas City's largest banks is financing five-year premiums for a rate averaging between 5% and 7% net. On this basis, the exhibitor can finance five years of insurance and pay between $200 and $300 for the money, still saving well over $700 if he pays $1,000 a year for protection. He then pays for the insurance in installments.

The exhibitor who feels he is paying too much for fire insurance protection should get his agent or insurance company to send out an engineer for a detailed survey. It costs nothing to have this done, and it may mean all the way up to $500 more in the annual net profits of a theatre.

With a little attention, or the expenditure of a very small sum of money, a theatre operator often can bring the property up to standard condition and thus reduce the rates.

[The author of the above article has been writing insurance on theatres and other film business properties for eighteen years. Because of his friendships among theatre folk, he has analyzed many policies written by others, which has broadened yet further his knowledge of theatre insurance problems. Mr. Jones, who resides in Kansas City, Mo., will continue his discussion of theatre insurance in the October 17th issue, dealing with burglary, holdup and liability coverage.—THE EDITOR.]

MAGIC BRAIN · MAGIC EYE · MAGIC VOICE · METAL TUBES

● One of two show-coaches which have been sent on tour to bring the story of RCA Victor and its services to all parts of the country. Each cost over $25,000, according to Thomas F. Joyce, RCA Victor advertising manager. John B. Sanger, architect and industrial designer, planned them. They have an overall length of 37½ feet, with 7 feet of head room in the interior and as in the width, making ample space for the display and demonstration of the many devices carried. Provision has been made for visitors to enter at one door and leave through another at the extreme end.

The coaches, including the coupes which draw them, are decorated on the outside in bright yellow, black and white. Concealed in the back and sides are eight loudspeakers, with two additional 7-foot horns of high-fidelity theatre type built into the roof and directed toward the front. The public address system is said to be comparable both in power and quality to the system in use at Radio City Music Hall theatre, and is capable of an audience of 25,000 persons on open ground.

Built into the rear of the trailer coach is an electrically shielded compartment for the motor-generator, which provides current for apparatus on display.

ASKING FOR TROUBLE

SOME of the same astigmatisms and publicity blunderings which permitted Hollywood, not so long ago, to ride headlong into expensive conflict with American mores now again let a group of production spokesmen be presented to the public as advertising for trouble.

The advertisements are articles running in series, appearing under the general text of "Glamorous—or Moral, Which Shall Stars Be?" published in New York in the Daily News under the authorship of Florabel Muir, and copyrighted by the News Syndicate, Inc., indicating wider distribution.

For each of her articles, Miss Muir, long noted for her extreme competence in dredging the journalistic pay dirt of Hollywood, has selected an important production "name" to interview and about which to weave a chapter of Daily News editorial merchandise.

The provocations of the journalistic enterprise concerned are obvious. The passion-painted Astor case offers pretext to produce and sell some copy on the perennial subject of illicit romance, some call it sex. That is a newspaper matter.

THE welfare and status of the motion picture industry is not very much of a newspaper concern.

The motion picture business from production to exhibition, including most especially the man at the box office selling entertainment into, with, or against a public state of mind, is very considerably concerned.

At vast labour and long complicated effort the motion picture was delivered from its woes under moral attack by various steps, including most notably and conspicuously the establishment of the Production Code Administration and the real adoption of the Production Code to which Hollywood had previously given only a faint lip service.

In sequel came not only a decided moral regeneration of the art, but a not entirely expected attainment of new high levels in amusement values. One of the consequences of having to take thought about decency was more taking thought about all elements of production.

The public response both in terms of appreciation and of box office dollars was remarkable and remarkably immediate.

In an astonishingly brief period of time the repute of the screen was made over. Scoffers at the decency movement remained to marvel and to praise. A press long hostile and looking to Hollywood only for scandal copy became militantly the friend of the screen. Enemies were disarmed, converted.

SUPREME test of the new status of the screen came with the impact of the Astor case. In every prior experience in this category the motion picture stood unanimously convicted at the bar of public opinion along with the unlucky individual charged with social or moral transgression.

But this time is was to be discovered that it was Miss Mary Astor who was on trial before the public, not the industry of the motion picture.

It was all highly tentative for a while. Mr. Samuel Goldwyn, with Miss Astor midway of her role in "Dodsworth," was sore beset with doubts. There were times when a costly remake with a substitute actress in the part was imminent.

A few sharp words from any important quarter of public expression would have cast the decision.

The shadow of a rumor that the Legion of Decency, or any of the other several critical organizations viewing the screen, was to give voice was enough to set Hollywood a-tremble and send out calls for midnight conferences on "how to fix it."

Nothing much was fixed. What little suppression may have been achieved was more than outweighed by the innuendo that fumed up in consequence.

BUT a miracle—at least a miracle from where Hollywood sat—was about to be had.

With the newly cemented and affirmed public friendship for the motion picture to help her cause, Miss Astor came off without professional and public involvement of her screen status by the affairs of what used to be her slightly private life.

"Dodsworth" was previewed and Miss Astor was kindly received by the audience, a very Hollywood audience to be sure, and more importantly by a friendly press reaction across the land.

The Astor case was substantially closed.

Now the adroit Miss Muir, in the first of her "Morals—or Glamour" articles, Daily News, September 17, writes:

> Don't be surprised if the Astor case is reopened one of these days. It's in the air. . . .

Miss Muir of course refers to the legal controversy. To the best of her ability the Astor case of the motion picture screen before the public, if not really reopened, at least has been entered on the docket, ready to be called for trial any time militant critics of the industry may choose.

In the course of recording her version of Mr. Goldwyn's reactions at the current status, Miss Muir sets him down as saying, "A new Mary Astor came out [Continued on following page] of that trial. . . . Now she has a new depth, a new range of emotional expression, a new personality. Perhaps she had reached the stage in her career when she was ready for just such an upheaval to round her out. . . ."

Installment number three of the series finds Miss Muir quoting Mr. Darryl Zanuck in what she calls "dry" comment:

"Two or three years ago we were all scared. Today the scare seems to be over and we can be ourselves again."

Hastening on along the trail of glamour, in installment four, Miss Muir presents a dissertation on morals and fame by the brave lancer, Mr. Richard Boleslawski, who is said to have decided of Miss Astor on the screen: "She will be more famous than ever. She will not be famous for her excellent acting, perhaps, for her devoted material qualities, for her gallantry—but because she was the central figure in a drama of passion."

Miss Muir elected Mr. Cecil B. DeMille for the oracle of her fifth installment and the headline writer achieved a compromise under "DeMille Co-Stars Glamour and Morals." "It is," she finds Mr. DeMille declaring, "an edifying thing to use such a great medium as the motion picture for the spreading of good moral doctrine."

But before the fourth installment got to that ringing pronouncement, it quoted Mr. DeMille in his familiar assertion: "Just as soon as sex can be eliminated from life, it can be eliminated from motion pctures." Parenthetically, it may be observed that so far no one identified with any of the movements impinging on the screen has ever ventured to seek the elimination of sex. Alarum in this direction is hardly necessary.

AS will be observed, installment number two, on "Morals—or Glamour?" is yet to be discussed. Something happened about there. For number two Miss Muir chose Mr. Clarence Brown. For him she recorded a position well near sensational in its contrasts. He insisted ". . . the movie stars owe it to themselves and their profession to observe good morals, at least not to be caught in their lapses. Stage women can do things that movie stars can't do, and get away with them. The audience of the stage is limited, by the nature of things. The movies are as near to universal entertainment as we have ever got. Movie personalities do not realize it but they are present at practically every social gathering in America. They are gossiped about. In their hands is the torch, so to speak, that stands for social purity, honor in marriage. They've got to hold up that torch. It's their job. . . ."

After this survey of the series, the Motion Picture Herald deemed it a reasonable step to seek Hollywood reactions to the Daily News presentations, and requested an inquiry by Mr. Gus McCarthy of the Hollywood office of Quigley Publications. Happily for the record and the facts, the telegraphic response was:

SAMUEL GOLDWYN DISCLAIMS REMARKS ATTRIBUTED HIM BY FLORABEL MUIR. HE AUTHORIZED JOCK LAWRENCE GIVE ME FOLLOWING WIRE SENT SEPTEMBER EIGHTEEN FOR YOUR INFORMATION. QUOTE PATTERSON DAILY NEWS. DEAR CAPTAIN PATTERSON I WAS SHOCKED TERRIBLY UPSET WHEN ARTICLES BY FLORABEL MUIR NOW RUNNING IN DAILY NEWS WERE TODAY CALLED MY ATTENTION. I ALLOWED MUIR INTERVIEW ME ONLY BECAUSE SHE SAID IT WAS AT YOUR PERSONAL REQUEST AND BECAUSE I HAVE ALWAYS BEEN ONLY TOO HAPPY TO DO ANYTHING I COULD FOR YOU. HOWEVER I AM NOT ACCUSTOMED BEING MISQUOTED OR HAVING MY WORDS TWISTED AS HAS BEEN DONE IN THESE ARTICLES. ARTICLES IMPLY THAT I CONDONE IMMORALITY BOTH IN PICTURES AND OTHERWISE. AS MATTER FACT NOTHING COULD BE FURTHER FROM TRUTH AS NO ONE HAS BEEN MORE ZEALOUS THAN MYSELF IN STANDING FOR DECENCY AND KEEPING PICTURES CLEAN. THESE ARTICLES HAVE ALREADY DONE ME VERY CONSIDERABLE INJUSTICE AND IN ALL PROBABILITY HAVE DONE AND WILL CONTINUE DO ME VERY CONSIDERABLE DAMAGE. IT IS URGENTLY NECESSARY YOU IMMEDIATELY CEASE PUBLICATION SUCH MISSTATEMENTS AND THAT YOU CORRECTLY PRESENT MY VIEWS TO PUBLIC THROUGH YOUR COLUMNS. SINCERELY, GOLDWYN. UNQUOTE. ZANUCK QUOTE I HAVE NEVER BEEN INTERVIEWED BY MISS MUIR UNQUOTE.

UNHAPPILY these denials have not overtaken, and, in the nature of such cases, never can overtake, the original presentations.

Here once again the motion picture industry can see exemplification of how its repute and status, which constitute its greatest basic asset, can be and are at the mercy and whim of external interests, forces and persons.

In this instance again is evidence enough of the importance and the delicate nature of Hollywood's publicity problem.

No matter how much or how little was said, it is plain enough that some shop talk got out of the shop.

The Hollywood expression, from whatever source or authority, or without authority, which says that stardom is made of sexual adventure, that glamour is made of sex exploitation—and that gay, naughty days are here again, is inviting for the screen, once more, accusing, pre-prejudiced eyes of scrutiny—asking for trouble, censorships, legislation.

More Reissues

Exhibitors have made increasing use of reissues and repeat bookings in the last several months and in most cases have found them an unexpectedly good source of revenue. Among the reasons assigned for the increasingly widespread adoption of the policy is the fear of a shortage of product owing to the use of double features. Many theatre operators say they prefer to show an outstanding old picture rather than a new program film of untried and dubious quality. In several territories throughout the country managers have found the practice so profitable that they expect to continue it through the new season.

A survey of the condition, compiled from reports covering various sections of the country, and a list of titles which have proved most popular is printed on page 13.

Turn About

A new kind of new deal appears to have gone into effect in Hollywood with respect to the treatment of temperamental players who, on occasion, can't quite see their way clear to starting scheduled productions on schedule. In three recent instances substitutions have been made forthwith and an early end to an old prerogative is foreseen.

The temperamental ladies of the above mentioned instances are named on page 35.

SMPE Program

The fall convention, first of the two meetings yearly, of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, will be held at Rochester, N. Y., October 12-15, marking the first time since 1922 that the organization has gathered at the sites of the plants and home offices of the Eastman Kodak Company and the Bausch and Lomb Laboratories. The delegates will be entertained by the two organizations at luncheons and these will be followed by tours of the respective manufacturing plants.

A list of important papers by wellknown figures is scheduled to be presented during the convention and this list, along with a complete program, appears in the story found on page 58.

Anti-Trust Suits

Four anti-trust suits have been filed in the federal district court in Boston by Attorney George S. Ryan, counsel in actions claiming damages in each case of $100,000 for triple damages allegedly sustained as a result of a combination and conspiracy to monopolize and to restrain interstate commerce in motion pictures.

One action was brought by Nashua Theatres, Inc., operating the Colonial theatre in Nashua, N. H., against Colonial Theatres Company of Nashua, N. H., a member of the M. A. Shea circuit and the major distributors. The other actions filed by Attorney Ryan were brought only against the major distributors. These plaintiffs are Standard Amusement Enterprises, Inc., which operated the Capitol theatre in Elizabeth, N. J.; Elite Amusement Enterprises, Inc., operating the Rialto theatre in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and Fidel Amusement Enterprises, Inc., which operated the Cameo theatres in Newburgh, N. Y. The Capitol and Cameo were forced to close when product was refused them, said the complaints.

Kinema Copy

To Francis Meynell, poet, publisher and publicist, is credited sharply improved standards of motion picture advertising and publicity in the British Isles during his activity as director of promotion, first for United Artists theatres, then for the widely varied but integrated interests of Gaumont British.

Bruce Allan's story of the man, his background, experience and policy, is presented on page 17.

Censorship Denied

Dr. Paul Czinner, producer who will make the film version of George Bernard Shaw's play "St. Joan," has made a definite denial of charges by the author that the screen adaptation had been censored by "Catholic Action" or by the Motion picture Producers and Distributors of America. Dr. Czinner said that he had submitted a script of the play to authorities in Rome in order to get an opinion on possibly objectionable parts. "These people studied the script and made notes of everything that could possibly be objectionable," he said. It was these notes which prompted Mr. Shaw to make the charges, he said.

Dr. Czinner's explanation of the story is quoted on page 56.

Finances Bright

Improvement in gross earnings for the current quarter for Paramount and Columbia were predicted this week by the Wall Street Journal. Statements have not been completed, but the net profit for Paramount is expected to be well over $1,000,000 after all charges have been deducted. Theatre operations, especially, are said to have shown improvement. Harry Cohn, president of Columbia, said after the annual stockholders meeting this week that the gross income for this quarter will exceed that for last year.

Significant details are given on page 38.

Milwaukee Pool

Warner Brothers and Saxe Brothers on Wednesday announced that their 20 Milwaukee theatres will be pooled under an agreement which goes into effect October 1st. Physical operation will be handled by both circuits and Warner Brothers will do the buying and booking.

24 Hour Day

Theoretically practicable is a 24 hour camera day by ultimate development of the use of infra-red rays in a process already employed by Ernest Haller, A.S.C., to photograph in late afternoon light certain scenes for "The Captain's Kid." Already practicable is the shooting of exteriors through mist and other formerly insurmountable natural phenomena.

A story on the subject appears on page 35.

Exhibitors Active

E. F. Maertz was elected president of the Independent Theatres Protective Association of Northern Michigan in its convention ending September 17th in Milwaukee, first of a series of sectional conventions calendared for the immediate future and marking the end of a general summer suspension of exhibitor organization activity.

Details are on page 18.

Capt. Dixey Explains

With approval in principle given the plan for a new exhibitor-distributor company to serve independents, Capt. Dixey told 150 theatre men at the Trocadero in London that $2,000,000 capital is available if exhibitors contribute $100,000. Franchise contracts will contain a 10 per cent rejection clause and plenty of product is promised.

This and other developments in the British business cinematic are reviewed on page 56.

Luescher Dead

Mark A. Luescher, veteran showman and publicist, died Sunday at his home. He was 60 years old. Forty of those years had been devoted to theatrical interests of major importance in the New York area.

The story of Mark A. Luescher is told on page 32.

GB Deal Question

The possibility that the Twentieth Century-Fox and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer deal with Gaumont British may be indefinitely postponed because one of the Ostrer brothers is insisting that the terms of the agreement be rewritten on better terms, was partially confirmed by Joseph M. Schenck this week. The Fox board chairman, by telephone from a hospital bed in Mt. Sinai hospital, New York, told the press that he had been informed that either Mark or Isidore Ostrer was holding up consummation of the deal. "We have made our offer and are standing by it. I do not propose to change the terms," he said. Reports from London indicated that John Maxwell, head of British International Pictures, had increased a bid he made some time ago for GB control.

Cables telling of the rumors current in London on the situation are cited on page 50.

IN THE MIDDLE OF A GREAT BLOW. Obscured by rain beaten into a cloud by the raging wind, these Pathe News cameramen are shown "covering" the hurricane which bore down upon the middle Atlantic coast. Many crews lugged their equipment into the heart of the storm area, and the resulting film records owed some of their thrills to the activities of the newsreel men themselves.

MARKED TREND TOWARD REISSUES AND REPEATS

Fear of Shortage of Pictures Owing to Double Bills and Caliber of End-of-Season Product Found Major Factors

Reissues and repeat bookings, long a minor source of steady revenue for exhibitors in scattered spots, this summer assumed a major role for a number of reasons and proved a boon to theatre men and to the producer-distributor. Although the reason given for the development, in most cases, was the fear of a shortage of pictures because of the widespread use of double features and the usual slough in end-of-season-product, the practice is continuing in many cases into the beginning of the new season.

The additional revenue received by the large companies from the repeat bookings and revivals of pictures released as long as four or five years ago will play a more and more important part in their earnings, a study of business done in the last few months shows. The trend has been particularly noticeable in New England, in Cleveland, Los Angeles, New Orleans and Philadelphia and to a lesser degree in Chicago, San Francisco and Washington, D. C.

At least two of the major companies have more than a dozen pictures whose negative costs were amortized anywhere from a year to several years ago, back on the revival list, and the films are reported to be doing the same amount of business as on the original release and in many cases more. The runs are booked on a percentage basis and usually at a discount of 25 per cent or more from the original price. Exhibitors who have met with success in the use of the revivals say that they would rather book a picture which was a popular success several years ago than new product of dubious quality.

"Class" and Star Favorites

The favorite repeat bookings, of course, are the so called "class" pictures and the outstanding productions of current stars, but interest is being shown in pictures made by players, now box-office names, who then were starting and appearing in minor roles.

Paramount, 20th Century-Fox and Warner Brothers had no information to offer at the home offices on the amount of business being done by the repeat bookings of their old releases. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, which is leading the field with 8,092 repeat sales at the present time, Universal, United Artists and Columbia all are cognizant of the potentialities of reissues, and home office executives are studying the condition. RKO-Radio officials said that the company makes a definite policy of not reissuing or rebooking old films on the assumption that revivals kill returns on current film.

Rebooking of "There's Always Tomorrow" has been astonishingly successful, says Universal. The picture is being handled with the new season product, although at about 25 per cent less than its original price. Late last spring it became apparent that Robert Taylor and Binnie Barnes had grown into box office personalities.

"OBSESSION" BOOKED FOR SEVEN REPEATS

Among unusual records scored by pictures on repeat runs and reissues is the one made by Universal Picture's "Magnificent Obsession," which has been brought back seven times to the Philmont theatre, Phillipsburgh, N. J., and every time to profitable business.

Mr. D. O. Atkinson, manager, said that he will bring the picture back to the Philmont once a month as long as its gross exceeds $100 a day.

First runs of the rebooking of the picture were sold to Milton Arthur's Orpheum in San Francisco and to Joe Leo's Los Angeles in Los Angeles. In the Tudor theatre in New Orleans the film played a record three week booking. It was held over by the Warner circuit houses for three additional days in Wilmington, Del., and Lancaster, Pa. Out of Universal's Dallas office in Texas 200 important bookings were made in key cities through East Texas Amusement Company, the Robb & Rowley circuit and the O'Donnell group.

Though not reissued, Universal still is doing a profitable business with "Imitation of Life," "Magnificent Obsession," "All Quiet on the Western Front," "Be Mine Tonight," "Counsellor at Law," "The Good Fairy," "King of Jazz," "Once in a Lifetime" and "Only Yesterday."

United Artists has been experiencing more than a modicum of success with repeat bookings on "Henry VIII," "The House of Rothschild" and "The Count of Monte Cristo."

In Denver, where the program of revivals has reached three first run houses, the Broadway showed a week of old United Artists films including the three mentioned and "Les Miserables."

The Orpheum and Denver are the two other main theatres featuring former successes with good results at the box office. Of other old UA films a steady business is being done with "Cynara," "Arrowsmith," "Affairs of Cellini," "Dark Angel" and "Barbary Coast."

Preparing for Reissue

Columbia Pictures cites the success of "It Happened One Night" and "One Night of Love." The conferring of the Award of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Science upon "It Happened One Night" for the year of its release is credited for its current success, and the company recently announced that all bookings have been temporarily suspended, indicating a reissue shortly. Grace Moore continues to attract patrons, especially music lovers, with her first screen success, "One Night of Love." Columbia officials add that exhibitors ~~can~~ get prints on any of last year's films if they ask.

Films First Issued Four or Five Years Ago Play Large Part in the Revivals; MGM Reports 8,092 Repeat Bookings

The company with undoubtedly the greatest number of repeat bookings to its credit is Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, with a total of 8,092. "The Big House," released in 1930, had 399 repeat bookings to its credit up to May of this year. Since that month the figures have mounted to 997, with some houses bringing the film back again and again to more business each time, much to the surprise and glee of both exhibitor and distributor.

"Billy the Kid," also released in 1930, has had some 200 return engagements at the present time. "Dancing Lady," featuring Clark Gable, Joan Crawford and Franchot Tone, and "The Thin Man," with the publicized combination of Myrna Loy, William Powell and Director W. S. Van Dyke, are credited with being the two pictures which gave the momentum to the repeat booking movement. To date, "The Thin Man," which first appeared in 1934, has 302 return engagements and "Dancing Lady," produced in 1933, has 1,087 playdates, more than 700 of these since May. The company is now reissuing "Trader Horn" for Christmas bookings.

The MGM sales organization claims there has been no organized sales drive to sell repeat engagements of past successes; the exhibitors themselves first began asking for the prints, thus giving the first indication of a very considerable market in the field.

The complete list of MGM's repeat bookings includes 127 features, dating back as far as 1930. Among the outstanding pictures to play numerous return engagements are "The Barretts of Wimpole Street," 76; "Broadway Melody of 1936," 449; "Chained," 81; "China Seas," 149; "David Copperfield," 153; "Men in White," 170; "Mutiny on the Bounty," 263; "Naughty Marietta," 605; "Rose Marie," 277; "San Francisco," 182; "Sequoia," 112; "Society Doctor," 174; "Tale of Two Cities," 74; "Times Square Lady," 180; "West Point of the Air," 102, and "The Great Ziegfeld," 3.

Four Will Rogers films, "State Fair," "Ambassador Bill," "Doubting Thomas" and "Dr. Bull," have been reissued by 20th Century-Fox, but the general policy of the company is to concentrate on current product and refuse rebookings on old films. The four pictures, considered a special case, each have played approximately 60 dates this month.

Warner Brothers has a list of 28 features which are kept alive for spot bookings in houses which missed them the first time or for return engagements where exhibitors feel the demand warrants it. The films are sold at approximately 25 per cent off the original prices. None of the prints is released without Production Code Certificate. In cases where films have no seal, the company will apply one if there is sufficient demand for the subject.

The list at present includes "Dark Hazard," "Wild Boys of the Road," "Big Shakedown," "Side Street," "Midnight Alibi," "Dragon Murder Case," "Journal of Crime," "Merry Frinks," "Registered Nurse," "Bed Side," "Return of the Terror," "Wonder Bar," "British Agent," "Flirtation Walk," "Mandalay," "Massacre," "Circus Clown," "Harold Teen," "From Headquarters," "Friends of Mr. Sweeney," "Personality Kid," "Smarty," "College Coach," "Ever in My Heart," "Modern Hero," "The Key," "Gambling Lady," and "The Kennel Murder Case."

In response to requests from many situations, particularly on the West Coast, Paramount sent out several old prints which met with such success that they were held in the exchange there for occasional spot bookings. Present demands indicate that they will be in circulation at least until December. They include: "Misleading Lady," "Shanghai Express," "Reserved for Ladies," "Strange Case of Clara Deane," "Horsefeathers," "Movie Crazy," "Evenings for Sale," "Murder in the Zoo," "Crime of the Century," "Woman Accused," "Terror Aboard," "Way to Love" and "The Wiser Sex."

In representative cities in all sections of the country exhibitors and exchange men report that the success of repeat bookings played this summer has encouraged them to continue the practice, and has pointed a way to sustained revenue whenever a shortage of product threatens or a manager prefers to exercise a selective clause in his contract and cut down bookings on pictures of lower quality.

New England Trend

From Boston it is reported that there has been a decisive trend throughout the New England states toward reissuing of old pictures. Many houses with a seating capacity ranging from 500 to 1,500 have found it a successful policy to play a return date for a film where the players through some medium have gained national attention.

Managers in general say that a picture which did a good business on the first showing can be reasonably sure of bringing in substantial revenue on subsequent runs in the same theatre if shown from two to five months later, particularly in cases in which a manager has a block booking contract and is about to play an untried film with no names in the cast. If he can re-book a film instead of the new picture he can assure himself of a reasonably good attendance, they said.

The Tremont in Boston, a 1,600-seat house playing second-run features several weeks later than the first-run houses in the territory, has found that repeating such films as "The Thin Man," "Naughty Marietta" and "One Night of Love" has brought as much in gross business as the first time played. Some films have been repeated as many as 10 and 12 times with good attendance.

The policy of playing repeats has tended to create goodwill among the patrons by giving them an opportunity to review an old picture which they liked or to see it for the first time as a film of proven quality, exhibitors report.

The cost of reissued films has been an individual problem depending on the cast of characters, previous success of the picture or other factors. Most repeat bookings are being made on a percentage basis rather than a flat rate, and exhibitors report that the percentage is approximately 10 per cent lower than the original price.

Exceptional are such cases as "The Informer," which on the first showing was greeted with only fair attendance. After the film had received the Academy award it was sought for rebooking and the rental was found to be above the original figure.

The manager of the University theatre in Cambridge, Mass., has set aside Wednesday, the last day of the half week showing, as Review Day, one or two reissues being shown instead of the regular program. The Community Playhouse, a 500 seat house in Wellesley Hills, Mass., has made it a policy to repeat films of proven grade rather than play a new and untried picture. This house played " One Night of Love" six different times and held a high patronage on each showing. Others repeated more than once were "The Informer," "Rose Marie," "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town" and "The Thin Man."

Reissues in Chicago

The reissuing of films in the Chicago territory, while not a practice of all companies, has proved successful. The Paramount exchange found 'The Virginian" and "If I Had a Million" to be excellent box office attractions in the area for the second time. The Will Rogers pictures are available at the Fox exchange and are reported to be selling well on repeat dates. "The Iron Man" and "There's Always Tomorrow" have proved surprising sources of revenue to Universal and many theatres in other cities in the Chicago area.

Chicago distributors say that rental charges on repeat bookings are considerably lower than when first released. None of them, however, gets less than the price for program pictures. In most cases they are played on percentage and the receipts have been considered very gratifying.

Reasons for the success of the policy are variously said to be the rising to stardom of players not well known when the pictures were made, and the fact that during the depression many pictures grossed much lower than normal because many who wanted to see them were deprived of the opportunity because of tightened purses.

Repeat bookings of current releases and reissues of former releases have been more widespread in the Greater Cleveland area in the last eight months than ever before. A contributing factor in the situation has been the fact that every theatre in and near Cleveland was running full time all summer, creating a demand for more than the usual number of currently available pictures. An increase in the practice of running double features also is believed to have helped to bring about the shortage of product.

Leading independent circuit owners further attribute the growth of the revivals to general poor quality of features available at the end of the summer. Repeat runs of outstanding pictures, these circuit heads claim, were better box office attractions than new pictures of poor quality. Revival week, as a consequence, has become a general policy at many subsequent-run houses.

Actual shortage of current product also is given as a reason for the number of repeat runs in the Greater Cleveland area. The Circle theatre, an outstanding first run neighborhood house, subsisted almost the entire summer on MGM and United Artists repeat runs. The Alhambra, another first-run neighborhood house, also injected an unusual number of repeat engagements of the previous season's successes.

Exhibitors in the Kansas City territory, in general, are not partial to reissues, regarding them as too uncertain. The majority report that about half of such pictures do a business which justifies their being brought back. However, they are eager to play films in which players appear who since have become popular, creating a new audience for the picture. Early pictures in which Robert Taylor appeared are currently popular whether as reissues or rebookings. The Will Rogers pictures, exhibitors feel, are in a special category.

The increased use of double bills in the area is believed to account for a good part of the rebookings. In giving causes most exhibitors explain that they prefer showing a good old picture to a poor new one in a double bill.

E. E. Webber, manager of the Mary Lue, in Kansas City, recently brought back a popular musical to play on a double bill and he reported that it did a better business than on its first run. E. S. Young, manager of the Central and Roanoke in Kansas City, formerly made it a regular practice to rebook old pictures and did good business on them, but during the past six months or so, he reports, the results have not justified the practice. He played "Thanks a Million" and "The Littlest Rebel" the last week of August at the Roanoke and did below average business. On the other hand, not long ago he brought back "Murder in the Fleet," with Robert Taylor and did a very good business.

Regard Prices As Reasonable

Mr. Young and other exhibitors regarded the prices for rebookings asked by the Kansas City exchanges as reasonable. In general they were about 30 to 40 per cent of the original price. In the case of Mr. Young's Roanoke, a 20 cent house, the rebooking price on "Magnificent Obsession," originally carrying a $30 guarantee with 30 to 35 per cent, was approximately $15 flat. C. E. Esterly, operator of the State and Prospect, reported that exchanges were asking about regular program feature prices for rebookings, or from $12.50 to $15. The same figures were quoted by G. C. Diamond, film buyer for the Glen W. Dickinson circuit.

Other exhibitors in the territory reported that the success of the reissue showing by a first run seems generally, though not always, a fair guide to what the picture will do in its replaying by subsequent run exhibitors.

A marked interest in reissues and older films in the Los Angeles territory in the last three months is attributed by exhibitors to two factors, the reopening of a number of houses with resultant shortage of product, and mediocre end-of-season product.

Competition a Factor

Howard Sheehan's Vogue theatre on Hollywood Boulevard is regarded as a typical example of a house forced into the reissue policy. Mr. Sheehan took over the house and then found that he was facing sixth and seventh runs on all major product. In competition are the Chinese, Egyptian, Hollywood, Iris, Studio and Marcal. The Pantages and Warners Hollywood are first run competition for the locality. Rather than trail these houses with current releases, some good and some poor, Mr. Sheehan experimented with old pictures which had proved great box office attractions. So cordial was the response that he made old films a definite policy of the house.

Fox West Coast has adopted the same policy for the Palace in Long Beach. When the circuit took over that house recently, it was intended to operate it as a third run house, but most product already had been signed by competition for third and fourth runs and, rather than go to fifth run, older attractions were booked.

The Olympic theatre in downtown Los Angeles is playing requested features only, films being selected by patrons who register preferences in a lobby ledger. The Cabrillo theater in San Diego is also being operated on an old film policy by Lou Metzger.

Block booking, some exhibitors said, was mainly responsible for the trend to repeats and the generous use of reissues in the New Orleans territory, not only by downtown houses and neighborhoods but by theatremen upstate as well. In the opinion of downtown managers a good film can be brought back as long as a year after its first release and still make money.

Harry S. McLeod, manager of the New Strand theatre, tells of "One Night of Love," which played the Canal Street theatre until it was "threadbare," and later 14 neighborhood houses to good business. The film was brought back by him to the St. Charles theatre, which he was managing at the time, and broke all house records.

No Set Price for Repeats

Exhibitors say that there is practically no set price for repeat bookings. One major circuit buyer said that it is simply a matter of how much pressure an exhibitor can bring to bear on the exchange men, the final price depending chiefly on his bargaining power and the age of the picture.

Early this summer Philadelphia exhibitors began making heavy demands upon film exchanges for more and more repeats and revivals. This was especially true of dual bill houses in neighborhood locations. Distributors are hesistant about admitting that the situation was brought about by a shortage in product, but showmen said otherwise.

An analysis of conditions in the Warner circuit typifies the problem. The first-run and key neighborhood houses, averaging two pictures a week, were just about able to clear the season. The subsequent runs, calling for at least four pictures weekly, had to make up the difference by using repeats. The key houses used only one reissue, at the end of the season.

The Karlton theatre, a downtown house showing first-run program pictures and second-run features, penciled in "Henry VIII" for a week. The run scored the third best gross of the year. The success of the trial led to the playing of the picture in the key houses, where it brought average grosses, and in the State theatre, where is did exceptionally well. The general practice for the Warner theatres, however, is to steer clear of repeats, except in unusual cases.

As long as a shortage in product looms for the independent exhibitor, especially in dual houses, the recourse to reissues and repeats may well become a house policy for the coming season, showmen said. The success of the practice this summer indicates that managers will increase their use of it. The independents have found that with a reduced rental possible in most cases, and banking on the star's name value rather than the title of the picture to draw patrons, it has become a good policy to repeat a program.

The Europa theatre, a Philadelphia mid-town independent which formerly specialized in foreign language films, has had unprecedented success with revivals. The house had been showing "The Informer" just prior to the awarding of the Academy prize, and the resultant publicity kept the picture there for nine weeks. Nor is a picture limited to one reshowing. "Blue Light" has been repeated five times at the theatre, "Unfinished Symphony" three times, and the new season is expected to find the totals increasing.

Jerome B. Smith, manager of the Europa, says that just as folk like to read a good book over and over again, these same individuals will come to see a good picture time and time again rather than a mediocre one. Most independent exhibitors in the territory express the same sentiments.

"THREE LITTLE PIGS" REVIVED ONCE AGAIN

Walt Disney's "Three Little Pigs" is proving its timelessness with a repeat run at the Rivoli, New York, in connection with the premiere of "Dodsworth" this week. United Artists officials say they have lost track of the number of repeat bookings scored by the cartoon classic but they are sure the figures have mounted into the stratosphere. An indication is the fact that 75 prints were made since the picture was first released.

The trend toward reissues of early films is limited in northern California mainly to the San Francisco metropolitan area, most exhibitors claiming that only exceptional name value, not picture merit, makes the policy profitable. The major exception to this was the eagerness with which Sacramento, San Jose, Fresno, and other smaller California cities booked the two Will Rogers films, "State Fair" and "Connecticut Yankee." The Fox exchange in San Francisco reported that no less than 80 per cent of exhibitors booked the two pictures. Rentals for the films averaged 20 to 25 per cent under those obtained at the time of original issue, but the difference was ascribed in large part to the fact that many houses booking on percentage billed the reissues for poor show nights rather than for Saturday or Sunday business.

"State Fair," teamed with what was termed a decidedly weak independent offering, grossed $6,000 at the 5,000 seat Fox theatre in San Francisco within the past month, an excellent figure considering the heavy competition from other first-run houses that week.

Teamed with New Product

Hal Neides, manager of the Orpheum theatre in San Francisco, reported excellent business on two reissues which he teamed with 1936 product, United Artists' "Henry VIII" and Universal's "There's Always Tomorrow." The Orpheum gross on the second picture and a new Universal program offering was $10,000, or $3,000 over average, while "Henry VIII," teamed with a new Columbia feature, scored $7,500 in a week of generally low first-run business.

Both Mr. Neides and Barney Rose, Universal exchange manager, ascribed to Robert Taylor the satisfactory draw on "There's Always Tomorrow." Mr. Rose said that rental on the film, which is now being shown by suburban runs, is averaging slightly over the 1933 price.

Ollie Watson, acting manager of the United Artists exchange, reported that "Henry VIII" also was selling for the same price as when first released. Mr. Watson indicated that the current vogue for costume pictures was as much responsible for renewed interest in the picture as were the many then unknown players in it who are now first ranking stars.

A tryout reissue of this film several months ago at Aaron Goldberg's Regal, Market Street subsequent-run house, brought so much business that it was one of the deciding factors in United Artists' national reissue of the drama.

The sensation of reissue showings in the coast city was the 23 day run at Herman Cohen's Embassy by two 1932 MGM hits, "Dancing Lady" and "The Big House." The two reissues rolled up an estimated total of $12,500, as against a general house average of $3,200 a week. Both films are being booked with good grosses in the subsequent-run and suburban houses, MGM's exchange reports.

Revivals at U. S. Capital

Independent exhibitors in Washington, D. C., also are reported to be turning more and more to revivals and reissues rather than face the necessity of showing outstanding current productions after they have been exploited for first, second, third and fourth-runs by the major circuits. Exhibitors and exchange men look upon the practice as the logical expansion of a well-known theme.

Two theatres in the Capitol and one in Baltimore have met with success with a consistent policy of playing revivals. The Little Theatre in Washington, originally scheduled for a foreign picture policy, opened two years ago playing new product long after exploitation by first-run houses. Mrs. Louise Noonan Miller, operator of the house and daughter of the founder, soon abandned this for a policy of straight revivals. The plan proved so successful that she has taken over the closed Rialto theatre and plans to reopen it this month under the same policy.

Similar experiences are reported by Radin & Levine's Belasco theatre and at Herman A. Blum's Little Theatre in Baltimore. These, however, are the only houses in the territory operating on an exclusively reissue policy. Other exhibitors, especially the independents, play them from time to time and in general indicate that they prefer to screen an ace picture of an earlier year than a dubious current film.

National Decency Legion Reviews 12 New Pictures

Class A-1 "Unobjectionable for General Patronage": "Missing Girls," "Murder With Pictures," "Old Hutch," "One Hundred Days of Napoleon," "Ramona," "The Tattler." Class A-2 "Unobjectionable for Adults": "Ciboulette" (French), "The Girl from Maxim's," "The Isle of Fury," "Wives Never Know." Class B "Objectionable in Part": "Everything Is Thunder." Class C "Condemned": "Gambling with Souls."

MPPDA Directors Meet Postponed by Hays' Absence

The twice-postponed annual meeting of the board of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., which was scheduled for this week, is being postponed again and will be held September 30. The postponements have resulted from changes in plans which have kept Will H. Hays, president, in Hollywood longer than he expected, but he is expected in New York early next week.

A Poet Revolutionizes British Film Publicity

Francis Meynell, Poet-Publisher-Publicist, Sets New Standards of Kinema Promotion

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

The poets have landed and the situation in an industry inured to the incredible is well in hand.

From a grave in verdant Stratford-on-Avon one William Shakespeare has thrust into the quick hand of an only momentarily astonished Hollywood a sheaf of soundly commercial screen plays.

From a modern studio in New York a Maxwell Anderson has supplied RKO-Radio with the slangy blank verse dialogue of "Winterset," last year a courageous stage experiment, this year a scenario approached with complete confidence based on box office performance.

And from an efficient office at 5 and 6 Cork street, London, Poet Francis Meynell, publisher and publicist extraordinary, has sent out to British periodicals a sequence of motion picture advertisements revolutionizing the technique of screen representation in the British Isles, revising sharply upward the long static standards of printed promotion in the homeland of the language.

Devises First Advertisement

Francis Meynell is director of advertising and publicity of the Gaumont British organization. He devised his first kinema advertisement a little more than eighteen months ago for United Artists, employed at that time and with what was regarded as daring by Maurice Silverstone, managing director of United Artists theatres, and he brought to the preparation of his copy experience and intelligence unique in the annals of exploitation. His advertisements for United Artists theatres, smart, modern, clean cut and concise, created a sensation when printed in the columns of stodgy, typographically inhibited London daily publications alongside the routine, "boiler plate" announcements of the competition.

Trade eyes came to abrupt focus upon the advertisements of Poet Meynell and trade talk took up the tale of the box office results thereof. Quickly absolved was the daring Director Silverstone of criticism for appropriating a retainer reported in varying multiples of the stipend regarded as standard for the post, and quick, too, was Mark Ostrer of the house of G-B to negotiate an arrangement whereby the productive talents of this singularly practical poet were taken over under even more spectacular terms. Answerable solely to Mr. Silverstone in his United Artists berth, the artisan was made accountable only to Mr. Ostrer under the new auspices and, further, was authorized to set up his own headquarters, far removed from the executive chambers of Gaumont British, and to formulate and direct his own organization.

FRANCIS MEYNELL

Swiftly, as the word is interpreted on this side, contemporary exploitation men have followed the Meynell lead in fashioning layout and text, with the result that motion picture advertising in the United Kingdom has improved steadily and continues to improve. Less diligently has the profession plumbed the record for explanation of the Meynell success. It knows the man, now, as founder and president of the Nonesuch Press, devoted to the publishing of fine volumes, rare works, editions d'art, but it knows little of the antecedents that equipped him, at once, for success in that enterprise and in the immensely wider field of motion picture promotion.

The story of the poet-publisher-publicist begins in the small years of the nineteenth century on a day when Charles Dickens introduced his friend, Thomas James Thompson, to Christiana Jane Weller. This lady and gentleman of literary inclination were wed and of this union was born a daughter, Alice, whose 'teen years witnessed the production of a book of verse, "Preludes," pronounced worthy by such qualified critics as George Eliot, John Ruskin, Dante Gabriel Rossetti and Robert Browning.

Another critic who found youthful Alice Thompson's phrases well turned was Wilfred Meynell, author and editor, who read into her sonnet, "My Heart Shall Be Thy Garden," that which made him seek her out and pay court. They were married in 1847 and their pens traced out, singly and separately, the never routine pattern of their forty-five years together.

These were not dull years. Eight children were born to the writing Meynells. One died in infancy. Another, born in 1890, was Francis Meynell. All grew up in a household animated and swayed by literary fervor. In 1881 Wilfred Meynell assumed the editorship of the Weekly Register, a Catholic periodical, and for eighteen years Alice Meynell assisted him in the work. In 1883 he founded the publication, Merrie England, which printed during its twelve years of existence the first works of Bellaire Belloc and W. H. Hudson, and for the columns of this brave but foredoomed organ Alice Meynell wrote unceasingly.

During this period of intense application to the needs of a formidable array of growing Meynells and the requirements of two periodicals the home became an habitual gathering place of the literati of the day. George Meredith and Coventry Patmore were familiar figures in a library cluttered with the tools of the scrivener, for the children's favorite game was played with pen, paper and scissors, with the making of the family newspaper for a suppositious press the daily objective. It was Coventry Patmore who, years later, was to advocate the succession of Alice Meynell to the poet laureateship of England on the death of Lord Alfred Tennyson.

By no means least beloved of those who shared the Meynell hospitality was frail, sensitive, ill starred Francis Thompson, an intense young man whose verses, submitted to Merrie England for publication, had led to the formation of a lifelong association with the Meynells. He stood as godfather to Francis Meynell, named for him. Educated for the medical profession, the boy had fled college to pursue his literary ambitions. Destitution followed by illness is credited with an addiction to opium frowned upon but forgiven by those who found his verses fine, his prose powerful, spirited and sincere. The Meynell mantle was flung abount him and sheltered him until, leaving "The Hound of Heaven" outstanding among many poems expressing Christian reaction to the phiosophies of neopaganism and materialism, he died in 1907.

Maynell Enters Journalism

Reared in the Meynell menage and heir to the Meynell talent, Francis Meynell, on coming into manhood, proceeded to Fleet Street, where he took assignments as he found them. Of his own poetry he had said, to many who held it excellent, "I was fattened up to be a poet, but early decided to print other people's good poems well rather than have my own bad poems printed at all." As a journalist he became the News Chronicle diarist. He was for a period news editor of the Daily Herald. He served as typographer with the London Press Exchange, obtaining experience reflected in his book, "The Typography of Newspaper Advertisements," published in 1929.

He learned much and forgot little. Perhaps influenced by the sort of conversations young ears hear when exposed to the protracted holdings-forth of literary giants, he conscientiously objected to participating in the world war and was imprisoned for so doing, on which occasion his illustrious mother wrote a memorable letter to the London Times. Out of it all he emerged, in 1923, uncommonly well qualified to found a publishing house specializing in the printing of rare editions, the Nonesuch Press, an institution of such eminent status that the Limited Editions Club of America has recently purchased a part interest.

Outlines Advertising Theory

To the business of advertising the motion picture to the public in such a way as to produce the greatest possible box office result without sacrific of prestige Mr. Meynell brings not only an obviously adequate preparation but a not at all obvious theory. He believes:

That the motion picture industry, in its publicity address to customers, betrays an inferiority complex born of mistakenly admitted kinship with inferior ancestral amusement forms.

That this complex affects nearly all film advertising, usually in the direction of compensatory blatancy.

That worthy publicity matter will not be had until its creators realize it is no longer necessary to be inferentially apologetic.

That it is a fundamental fallacy to draft publicity on the assumption that the public, of average intelligence when reading the news columns, is composed of cretins when reading the advertisements.

That the objective of film publicity should be to exploit good pictures to the maximum, not to extract a little extra revenue from the bad ones.

That simplification is the essence of successful advertising appeal.

Follows Positive Policy

Analyzing the status of motion picture advertising in England thus, Mr. Meynell set out to do the precisely opposed thing. The staff assembled was selected accordingly. He employed the distinguished artist, F. McKnight Kauffer, to draw Charles Chaplin for his "Modern Times" announcements. ' He commissioned Mariette Lydis, internationally known French artist, to paint a likeness of Jessie Matthews for poster use in advertising "It's Love Again" and paid her eight times the standard price for the work. An advertising drawing for "These Three" was featured editorially by the Sunday Express.

His headquarters staff is, in effect, a talent pool made up of adequately paid experts in the advertising, art and press fields. Each is available as an expert to either the theatre, distribution, equipment or studio departments. Separate publicity units in each of these departments act as feeders to the central publicity office, but all copy goes out through that office, which is operated strictly on newspaper lines and independently of other departments of the G-B organization.

As a means of crystallizing his concept of motion picture advertising for persons who require patterns, Mr. Meynell cites Pond's cream and its advertising as comparable parallels. Pond's cream, he points out, is a luxury, yet it is sold to two out of every three women in England by means of strictly "class" advertising copy which links it, ever so subtly, with sex appeal. That citation brings the whole elaborate policy of operation, roughly but effectively, within the comprehension of the dullest errand boy in the Meynell office.

Musicians Discuss Extension of Fight

Local 802 of the American Federation of Musicians is considering extension of its picketing campaign, designed to bring about the reemployment of "living music and entertainment in the theatres," from New York to other major cities and a decision is expected to be made next week.

Meanwhile motion picture unions elsewhere in the country were making news. At a meeting of the Nebraska Federation of Labor three resolutions were passed affecting theatre labor. They advocated two-man booths for all houses of more than 600 seats, complete lavatory facilities for all booths, and moral support for the campaign to use living orchestras in theatres.

The International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes has closed contracts with all Springfield, Mo., theatres on the same basis as last year. In Topeka, Kan., the labor group has secured a nine to ten per cent increase for operators. All Kansas City houses are continuing on the same basis as last year. Local 150, I.A.T.S.E. union in Los Angeles, has completed negotiations with the Fox West Coast circuit

The License Bureau in New York City has resumed issuance of licenses to motion picture operators, after a suspension of six months.

EXHIBITOR UNITS RESUME MEETINGS

Exhibitor organizations which have suspended meetings during the summer period are resuming regular sessions.

The Independent Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Connecticut resumed regular bi-weekly meetings on September 22nd.

Fred C. Herrington, secretary of the MPTO of Western Pennsylvania, has appointed committees for the annual convention to be held in Pittsburgh October 19-20.

The annual convention of the MPTO of Washington has been scheduled for October 16th at the Washington Hotel in Seattle.

Elect Maertz to Head Wisconsin Exhibitor Unit

E. F. Maertz of Milwaukee was elected president of the Independent Theatres Protective Association of Wisconsin and Northern Michigan in the closing session of the unit's convention in that city on September 17th. Other officers are William Copeland, vice-president; A. C. Berkholtz, secretary; Max Krofta, treasurer, and L. F. Thurwachter, chairman of the board.

The convention went on record as opposing the appearance of film personalities on commercial radio programs and recommended that independent exhibitors make it a policy to purchase 20 per cent of their product from independent producers.

Speakers addressing the convention included Abram F. Myers, general counsel of Allied, who outlined the contemplated drive of the national organization defense committee to resist producer invasion of the exhibition field, and Congressman Harry Sauthoff, who urged that exhibitors mould public opinion in their favor if they would escape legally imposed censorship.

Other speakers were Congressman Thomas J. O'Malley, Milwaukee; Aaron Saperstein, Chicago; Col. H. A. Cole, Texas; H. M. Richey, Detroit; A. W. Steffes, Minneapolis, and R. A. Tesch, business manager of the Wisconsin organization.

Plans Delayed for Italian Studio Use

Final commitments by American producers to use the new Italian studios being constructed near Rome are not expected for another six or eight months, Carlo Roncoroni, Italian government film envoy, said in New York this week just before sailing for Italy. Signor Roncoroni discussed the subject with many Hollywood producers on a visit to the coast but aside from an earlier commitment with Walter Wanger to make at least one picture in Italy next year no other definite acceptances were given.

The envoy said that the new studio would not be ready before next June. He placed heavy orders for equipment for the new plant while in this country and made a study of operations in Hollywood.

Signor Roncoroni, who was accompanied by Hans Bittman, Italian film technician, declined to comment on reports that Italy would entertain proposals for more stringent financial regulations on the American film business in that country in the event American professional and technical aid for the new studio was not forthcoming.

* Tentative title.

The wheels of Broadway's legitimate theatrical mill commenced their annual grind last week, but in spite of the fact that prospects for 1936-37 seem at this time better than they have been at the opening of any season in the last eight years, the wheels have been slow in starting and their operation has been marked by an uneasiness, because,

1. Broadway showmen have taken a long time to wake up to the fact that motion picture financing will not be forthcoming for play production this season.

2. The Federal Theatre Project of the WPA is offering stiff competition to the established theatre.

3. The summer theatre season was marked by a dearth of good new plays.

4. The annual cry of Broadway producers that Hollywood is responsible for unavailability of players is louder than ever before, and, in some instances, justifiably so.

A majority of producers, including old-line and newcomers alike, had spent the summer confident that last season's three-cornered row among the Dramatists' Guild, the motion picture companies and themselves would blow over and that, despite the fact it was clearly and officially indicated as far back as last April that film companies would not finance plays under the terms of the new Minimum Basic Agreement—which, among other salient features, reduced the manager's share in the sale of motion picture rights from 50 to 40 per cent—film money would be as plentiful along the rialto as it was last year.

"Disgusted with Returns"

The fact remains, however, that money, that is, film money, officially is "not to be had." The official sources have been tapped by Broadway the last three seasons to a point where they are disgusted with what returns, if any, they have had from the legitimate theatre. In a majority of cases, about all Hollywood appears to have garnered from money invested in plays is the film rights to many mediocre and very few worthwhile vehicles.

There are a few producers of legitimate entertainment who feel now that motion picture financing of plays is not the solution to the problems of the average Broadway manager, pointing out that there was a time, long before sound pictures came into practical being, when legitimate showmen did not care whether or not a play had motion picture value. A play was produced and money was spent for the value of the play alone and for what the producer could make out of the production of that play. Motion picture sales were a secondary consideration, with the theatre box-office regarded, and played up to, as the chief source of the producer's income. For the past few seasons this has worked in reverse, with too great import being placed upon the value of plays for pictures.

[While Hollywood is not directly taking a hand in the financing of Broadway plays this season, it appears that it will have some indirect influence through the Bureau of New Plays, Inc., under the management of Theresa Helburn, which is sponsoring a competition among authors for several types of dramatic production. The competition is being financed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Paramount, Warners,

Radio, Universal, Columbia and Paramount, in that they will supply the funds to cover the cash prize awards to the winning authors. The prize plays practically are guaranteed production on Broadway, according to Miss Helburn's office, and it is expected that the funds necessary to produce the winning plays will be forthcoming, either wholly or in part, from the various motion picture companies.—Ed.]

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, unquestionably, has been the largest backer of legitimate plays the last four seasons, and just prior to his departure for Europe early in the summer, J. Robert Rubin, vice-president of MGM, announced that his company had spent upwards of $500,000 in three years on Broadway and had taken literally nothing financially out of its investment.

This fact was revealed at a meeting of eastern story and production heads and at the conclusion of the meeting it was generally agreed that, in view of the new Basic Agreement, to which Broadway producers must subscribe, with its many definitely negative features, and in view of the fact that in most instances financing resulted in little if any return and a great deal of discord between the film company and the manager, motion picture concerns would cease this activity.

Most See Move Beneficial

The consensus among film executives was that in the long run Broadway showmen would benefit in that film companies would have to pay higher prices for motion picture rights to plays than they have been paying when plays were financed by them. Obviously it is less expensive for the film company to pay a higher price for the rights to a play financed by the manager than it is to pay a slightly lower price and finance at the same time.

Most Broadway producers now realize that this move by film concerns is beneficial, but a few who had counted on motion picture finance this season still feel definitely that Hollywood once more has "put something over on them."

See WPA Competition

However, and regardless of whether or not Hollywood might participate extensively in the Broadway scene this season, private financing of plays appears to be coming back to where it was prior to the depression. Money in Wall Street for such purposes is more plentiful than ever before. The fact that the general upturn in business has been more marked than at any time since 1933, lends confidence to Broadway showmen that the current season will be the best since 1927.

Business conditions in New York State, which has the largest population, should reflect what is to be expected by show business in the rest of the country, even if the New York theatre will be proportionately more benefited by the fact that legitimate drama is principally centered on Broadway.

In spite of improved conditions, however, there is feeling among some Broadway producers that the WPA, because of its announced intention to become "more commercial" during the new season, may offer considerable competition to the established legitimate drama.

FLEISCHER NAMED AS DRAMATISTS' CONTACT

Sidney Fleischer was named permanent negotiator for playwrights and producers under the new basic agreement, and arbiter under the old agreement, at a meeting of the Dramatists' Guild held at the Lincoln Hotel in New York this week. Mr. Fleischer succeeds the late Joseph P. Bickerton, who occupied the post up until the time of his death two months ago. Mr. Fleischer was associated with him for many years.

The negotiator is a strategic factor in the sale of film rights to stage plays under the new procedure established by the basic agreement between playwrights and producers.

A schedule of 32 productions before November 1 was announced early this month by the WPA, the schedule embracing virtually every branch of entertainment, and, although no mention of it has yet been made officially, the project is expected to rent at least two more theatres in New York to house its many activities. Already a new unit of WPA in New York, called "891 Presents," has taken over the Maxine Elliott theatre in West 39th Street, one of the oldest legitimate houses in the city and a popular theatre for many years. It is considered that this spread of WPA into established legitimate houses may have a devastating effect upon the plans of Broadway managers, inasmuch as there are not more than 40-odd theatres available under any circumstances.

The spread of WPA into Broadway theatres, therefore, appears to constitute the chief menace of the Government-subsidized theatre to the legitimate drama, as it is generally conceded that the quality of WPA productions, at least during the season just past, was far below that of the average Broadway show, with one or two exceptions, notably, "Murder in the Cathedral" and the all-Negro "Macbeth."

Another innovation of WPA is the "Suitcase Theatre," the new name for a unit touring various spots in the New York Metropolitan area, which plans to present established Broadway successes. This feature of the government project is considered by many old-time legitimate roadshow men to be a direct threat to the gradually reviving "road," as it is expected the traveling unit may extend its activities to other parts of the state and, eventually, throughout the country.

The Government also has in mind the idea of presenting a number of American plays "by various units of the theatre project in a manner that will approach the long-time dream of a repertory theatre in which the great American plays of the past can be reviewed," according to an announcement from the office of Mrs. Hallie Flanagan, national director of the Federal Theatre.

Mrs. Flanagan bemoans the fact that newer plays, that is, plays presented on Broadway in the last five to ten seasons, do not express "the age of expanding social consciousness," complaining that with the exception of the playwrights responsible for the "Living Newspaper" unit, Federal Theatre playwrights have contributed virtually nothing to the project as a whole.

Clamoring for Scripts

"Every one of our 158 theatres is clamoring for scripts," Mrs. Flanagan said recently. "Where are the new plays? I spend every available hour reading scripts. They cling forlornly to the skirts of the past. If I may mix my metaphors, they are dull legitimate offspring of Henry Arthur Jones and Madame Vestris. . . . If the plays do not exist, we shall have to write them. We shall have to work more closely with our dramatists. We cannot be too proud to study our medium. It is not going to hurt the imagination of any dramatist to cut his pattern to fit the cloth. Shakespeare was not too proud to write that way. Neither was Chekov. Neither was Euripides."

Whether Mrs. Flanagan discovers any worthwhile new playwriting talent or not, however, the Government has set aside $7,000,000 for the new season, of which approximately $3,000,000 is to be allocated in the New York area.

Although several of the newer Broadway managers raise skeptical eyebrows at talk of competition from the WPA projects, there can be no escaping the fact that the Government-subsidized theatre is a fairly imposing organization. The latest available figures show, among other things, that there are within the neighborhood of 10,000 actors, writers, directors and stagehands currently on WPA payrolls.

Immediate expansion to quota strength of the Play Bureau of WPA, with future regard to the law governing appointments, which Col. Brehon B. Somervell, New York City Administrator, is charged with having "flagrantly violated," was demanded early this month by the American Writers Union. On behalf of the union the addition of 60 dramatists to the creative personnel of the bureau was urged and a corresponding increase of $6,000 monthly in the project appropriation, or, a total increase of $18,000 above the three months allotment of $3,986,000 for July, August and September.

Of the quota of 250 workers allocated to the Play Bureau, only 148 have been appointed, according to the writers' union, and in the allocations the creative forces have been neglected.

In New York this week Lieut. Col. Somervell, WPA administrator, commenced an investigation of conditions in his department following charges of Frank Gillmore, head of Actors' Equity, that many WPA actors could not possibly qualify as professionals.

"As far as I know," Col. Somervell said Monday, "people are being hired on the basis of qualification and not stage ambitions. If they are not being hired on a basis of qualification it is up to us to look into it."

Meanwhile, at the weekly Equity meeting in New York on Monday, the charge that that organization was failing to protect acttors engaged in WPA activities resulted in a heated discussion between the conservative members and the left-wing element, which rapidly is gaining a hold in the association's affairs.

Producers Object

The first official statements to be issued by established Broadway producers on the Federal Theatre Project came only after it had been announced that Sinclair Lewis' play, "It Can't Happen Here,"—based on a novel by the author and rejected for production by MGM last season for "political" reasons—was to be produced in New York by WPA. The announcement immediately brought forth a tirade from such wellknown producers as Brock Pemberton and Lee Shubert.

"The Federal Theatre should be abolished," Brock Pemberton declared. "It's funny to begin with that the WPA can tackle something which the films cannot.

"Of course it is not humanly possible for a State theatre not to be affected by the policies of the State. Everybody knows that the Federal Theatre is definitely away over to the left. It's not surprising that, since the administration is on that side too, they should want to produce an anti-Fascist play."

Mr. Pemberton said that the Federal Theatre's competition is unfair "because they're subsidized and can do things we as commercial producers cannot do. We pay our stagehands and musicians two or three times what they pay. The minimum we can pay actors is almost twice their standard.

"We offered as an industry to do on a loan of $1,000,000 or $2,000,000 what they have taken countless millions to do and we were turned down." Mr. Pemberton concludes. "The Federal Theatre is one of the greatest radical nests in the whole set-up and apparently is to be used more and more for propaganda."

Arthur Hopkins, on the other hand, feels that "the better the project's productions are, the more theatre-goers they will make."

Lee Shubert, veteran showman, has this to say of the situation:

"So far the Federal Theatre Project has not been competition. The prices have been low. They have not been able to afford high-priced actors. But the production of 'It Can't Happen Here' raises a new question. It will be a play based on a book by one of the best known authors and will be produced in a wholesale way. Still, the prospect does not appear alarming."

AFA WINS RULING IN WPA DISMISSAL NOTICE

In answer to a protest by the American Federation of Actors, pointing out that Ruling No. 13 that actors on the Federal Theatre Project be entitled to a one-week dismissal notice did not specifically cover performers on the Variety Project, Deputy Director of the Federal Theatre Project, William P. Farnsworth, has informed Ralph Whitehead, executive secretary of the A.F.A., that:

"The vaudeville actor is not in a contractual relationship with the project, but through agreement with The American Federation of Actors, effective September 15, no vaudeville actor is to be dismissed by the Federal Theatre Project without at least one week's written notice from the project supervisor. No vaudeville actor is to withdraw from the project without one week's written notice to the Project Supervisor in charge of his unit."

Mr. Whitehead has approved this new ruling (No. 14) and it goes into effect immediately.

Despite the annual rumblings about competition, the season now appears to be getting into full swing, albeit a bit late. Despite the fact that the summer theatres contributed but little to the roster of new plays to be produced this season—out of a total of 75 tryouts in the cow-barns only 10 will find their way into New York—the 1936-37 show season has over 200 plays listed thus far. Unquestionably the number will pass the 300-mark before the season is over.

The 1936 summer theatre season, incidentally, was one of the worst in the history of the business. More theatres were forced to close their doors within a few weeks after opening than ever before and the financial returns from the majority were far below those of previous years.

The reason for this apparently is that summer activities of the last ten years have tended to stimulate in summer audiences a keener critical appraisal which has increased through the years to a point where they no longer will stand for the slip-shod productions of the past.

Handicap in Equity Demands

Regardless of the merit of summer productions—and in some situations the work of summer theatres could bear the closest scrutiny of Broadway critics and not suffer therefrom—the new demands of Actors Equity Association, put into force this past season, have done much to handicap the summer manager. The actors' association now requires that the manager engage a minimum of six Equity members in his company at not less than the minimum salary required by Equity in New York. In practically every instance this has proved to be a good thing for all concerned in that it has automatically eliminated irresponsibility in management, but the fact remains that it has increased the manager's overhead appreciably.

The only interest which Broadway has in the summer theatre, however, is the trying out of new plays. For some strange reason, and the writer speaks from firsthand experience, the average summer audience has learned to fear tryouts, and it is a known fact that the only summer theatres, practically without exception, which make money are those which stick exclusively to tested Broadway productions on a stock performance basis. It is obvious that when a play requires four weeks of intensive rehearsal in New York before its production the same play cannot adequately be produced in summer stock, under unusually difficult conditions, with but one week of rehearsal. Added to this is the fact that most of the company—it is the custom in most instances to import from New York only the star and one or two featured plays—are working in another performance at night and cannot concentrate exclusively on the work at hand. Therefore more and more managers have been trying to get away from tryouts completely, and it is generally conceded that the time will come when the only new plays tried out will be tried, and paid for, by the New York producers interested in them.

One of the practices which has done much to injure summer theatres, and certainly is responsible for much of the grief which new plays in summer stock run into, is the payment of a sum of money to the manager by the agent for a play as an inducement to a tryout. In nine cases out of ten the play in question is not ready for even a tryout. In any event most of the reputable agents and managers do not regard money as a consideration to a tryout.

Broadway, however, has forgotten the summer of 1936, for more than one reason, and has weighed anchor for the trip into the portentous seas of a new season. The managers are giving their annual interviews in which they repeat, as at the start of every season since 1929, that "everything points to a better season than we've had in years." Be that as it may, the only thing which makes a season good is the production of good plays, capably produced in every department. It is not for any individual or individuals to classify a play as good, bad or indifferent; only the audience which pays its money at the box office does that, as in the motion picture business. Just as the patron passing the exhibitor's doorway, on his way out, says "it was good," or "it was bad," so will we see good or bad plays on Broadway this season, and according to the patrons' dictate the money will or will not roll into the box office.

Anyhow there are plenty of plays to be done, so it should be fairly interesting.

SPANISH FILM WORKERS APPROVE SOCIALIZED CINEMA REGULATIONS

Exhibitor Rated as Employee; Cinema Receipts Taken by Committee and Wages Paid on Fixed Percentage Basis

Spanish cinema employees have made public the rules and regulations agreed upon under which theatres will be permitted to operate in the Barcelona area with the Comité Enconómico de Cines en Exploitación in full control.

Under the rules the exhibitor, or "empresario," is rated on a par with employees, his revenue is fixed by percentage and his suggestions as to management of his theatre are invited by the Comité.

All receipts of all cinemas operated in the area are collected by the Comité and divided, on a percentage basis, among all workers engaged in the operation of all the cinemas.

The status assigned the exhibitor, who continues at least theoretically as the theatre owner, is precisely defined and definitely circumscribed. His participation in the receipts of his enterprise is limited to a fixed 200 per cent, which compares with an apportionment of 100 per cent to his orchestra leader and to each of the 18 men in each of his orchestras, of which there are two. Each of his operators, three of whom are assigned to each booth, also draws 100 per cent.

Article 1. The salaries will be uniform for all kinds of work in all the branches of the film industry.

Article 2. The box-office receipts obtained in all the theatres in Barcelona and its radius will be daily handed over to the "Comité Económico," which will be denominated "Comité Económico de Cines en Explotación" (Economic Committee of Cinemas in Exploitation).

Article 3. The payments will be made by the Comité Económico at their business address, one day each week, advising the day and hours in which said payments will be made by means of notices put up at the theatres and at the payment window of the corresponding Section.

Article 4. The benefits obtained during the week will be divided between the total percentages corresponding to all the employees placed in the working places and the coefficient which results will be multiplied by each percentage and the result of this will be the week's payment which corresponds to the employee.

Article 5. The Syndicate will form part of each theatre in the same manner as an employee of the staff with the same percentage as the one who receives most of the theatre.

Article 6. The substitutes of all kinds of works will be paid at each theatre where they work, in accordance with the hours they work—without passing a maximum of thirty-six hours per week. The coefficient to be applied must be the same as that obtained by the regular staff workers.

Mr. Dored's assistants were executed.

Article 7. The different kinds of work will have the following percentage:

Syndicate—100 per cent.
Operators—100 per cent.
Box offices—90 per cent.
Box office substitute—50 per cent.
Person in charge of toilet—65 per cent.
Substitute to person in charge of toilet—33 per cent.

Night watchers—95 per cent.
Ushers—90 per cent.
Janitors—90 per cent.
Cleaners—50 per cent.
Electricians—100 per cent.
Substitutes to electricians—50 per cent.
Electrician for 3 theatres—100 per cent.
Substitute electrician for three theatres—100 per cent.
Musicians (18 for each cinema), each musician—100 per cent.
Second orchestra, also of 18 musicians, each musician—100 per cent.
Orchestra directors, six fixed as staff and one substitute, each—100 per cent.
Two varieté numbers in the cinemas—100 per cent.
Two machinists of the theatre and one substitute in each cinema—100 per cent
Authors—one per cent of the gross box office receipts per theatre.

Article 8. The employees doing all manners of work in the theatres will be arranged as follows—for all the cinemas:

Operators—three for each cabin.
Box-office—one and a half per theatre.
Toilet—one and a half per theatre.
Cyclist—one and a half per theatre.
Concierge—two per theatre.
Night watchers—two per theatre.
Janitors and ushers—those at present employed plus two substitutes to form part of the fixed staff of each theatre.
Cleaners—those at present employed.
Electrician for a special theatre—one and a half each.
Electrician for three theatres—33 per cent each theatre.
Substitute electrician for three theatres, the same.
Musicians—18 per orchestra in six theatres.
Orchestra director—one for each orchestra in six theatres.
Varieties—two numbers in two theatres.
Theatre machinists—two and a substitute per theatre in two theatres.

Article 9. The "empresarios" are to be assigned to the theatres as workers on the staff with a percentage of 200 per cent. They will not have authority over the staff and will be directly in communication with the "Comité Económico." The "Comité" will listen to any suggestions from the "empresarios" when these tend towards the benefit of the system of socialization established.

Article 10. The opening and closing of all the theatres in Barcelona and its radius will be uniform. During the months of June, July and August they will open at four o'clock in the afternoon and close at one o'clock in the morning; during the remaining months of the year they will begin at half past three and end at half past twelve. The box office will be opened a quarter of an hour before the session begins and will close in summer at twelve o'clock and in winter at half past eleven.

Article 11. The working hours for the cinemas will be from five to ten o'clock with the exception of the women who do the cleaning, who will work four hours daily and will have one holiday every week.

Article 12. Each theatre will have its complete staff whose members will not be changed unless voluntarily and in accordance with the "Comité Sindical" of their respective Section.

Article 13. Sanctions in matters considered of importance to the carrying out of the work will have to be made known to the corresponding "Comité Sindical" who, within a period of three days, must call a general meeting of the section in question, and the sanction, in case of its being accepted, must be voted by three-quarters of the components of same. The affected party can appeal against the sanction imposed at the general meeting of the Branch, and finally to the "Federación Local de Sindicatos de Barcelona."

Article 14. The janitors, "regisseurs" and other employees of the theatres and concert halls belonging to the Syndicate and professionally to the socalled Section of Cinemas, Theatres and Concerts, will be paid the same amount weekly as similar employees in the cinema trade, and consequently, if by means of the tax established in their professional area they do not arrive at the coefficient arrived at by the cinemas, the Accounting Section of the "Comité Económico" will pay them the remainder, and if it is over and above the percentage, the Cash Department of the Committee of that Section will keep the excess so as to add it to the Cash of the "Comité Central del Sindicato."

Article 15. There will be established, in a permanent form, a fund for aid in cases of illness, invalidness, old age and forced unemployment, as follows:

(a) For illness: complete indemnity.

(b) Invalidism: gradual indemnity depending on the number of people whom the affected party maintains—with a minimum sum of 70 per cent.

(c) Old age: same as (b).

(d) Unemployment: complete indemnity until the corresponding section gives him work at his specialty.

These will all be paid when the economic possibilities of the Syndicate permit it.

Article 16. A special hospital will be installed and called "Clínica del Sindicato Unico de Espectáculos Públicos de Barcelona," taking in all of Barcelona. This hospital will be governed as is to be determined.

Article 17. A group of students will be formed which will be called "Grupo Escolar de Espectáculos Públicos," the details to be determined later.

Article 18. The rental prices of all the cinemas in Barcelona and its radius will be considerably reduced.

The Government of the Generalidad of Cataluña will regulate these rentals.

Article 19. With the exception of the beneficiary taxes there has been a tendency to increase all taxes and arbitrations.

The Government of the Generalidad of Cataluña will regulate and see about the reduction of the taxes and arbitrations which are actually in force, and will then suppress those considered unnecessary.

Article 20. Twice a year there will be paid holidays, one in winter of fifteen successive days and the other in summer lasting one month, also without interruption.

Article 21. Cinemas will be divided into four categories. The admission prices will be the same in each category. On Sundays and holidays there will be no difference in price from any other day, with the only exception that there will be two shows in the afternoon and one at night. The cinemas where newsreels, documental films and other reports are given will operate as heretofore.

Article 22. The "Comité Económico" will regulate economic matters of the cinemas. This committee will be composed of a president, secretary, vice-president, vice-secretary, accountant, cashier, assistant to cashier, three members of the board who constitute the Section of Distribution, three more for the Section of Control of Booking, two for Box-Office Control and two more for Propaganda, the cashier and the assistant.

The term of each member of the "Comité Económico" will be two years, after which they may be re-elected for two years more.

These positions will be paid the same weekly salary as corresponds to other employees doing the same kind of work in their branch. The representing member there may be of the Section of Authors and Composers and will be paid with the same percentage as the one who gets the highest amount in the committee, discounting one per cent for the author's tax.

Article 23. The different sections will keep the same syndical structure which they have had up to date; they will continue controlling their members in their working places and will administer their respective "Bolsas de Trabajo" (Labour Exchange).

Article 24. Each cinema will have a Local Committee which will take care of everything which has anything to do with the employees.

Article 25. Pictures of foreign and of national production will be accepted according to terms agreed upon between the distributing firm and the Economic Committee—Section of Exploitation of Cinemas—with the intervention of the Delegation of Public Entertainments of Cataluña.

Article 26. No picture will be shown which has a marked reactionary tendency or which appears to discredit the actions of or abridge the liberties of members of the National Work Confederation. For the carrying out of this clause, the "Comité Económico" of cinemas will be in continuous contact with the official organizations of film censoring.

Article 27. All theatres which have been abandoned by their respective managers will be carried on directly and exploited by the Syndicate. In all of them the "Comité Económico" will have a representative who will be paid the wages which correspond to the kind of work to which he belongs.

Article 28. There are established four first release houses, the Coliseum, Fémina, Urquinaona and Astoria. The prices of seats will be the same in each of these four cinemas.

Article 29. There is fixed a maximum salary for all the specialities of work comprised in the cinemas for the highest percentage 175 pesetas per week.

Article 30. Whatever money remains in the cash of the "Cinema Committee" will be handed over without any deduction whatsoever to the general funds of the Syndicate in order to enable them to attend to moral and economic necessities.

Article 31. The weekly coefficient will be drawn up by the Cinemas's Economic Committee, and the employees will be paid every Monday at the respective theatres.

Article 32. All theatres which open in future in Barcelona and its radius to be exploited will have to become part of the system of socialization which the syndicate has established. The complete staffing of the cinema, in all different kinds of work, will be handled by the Labour Exchange of the Section.

Article 33. The amounts obtained for advertisements and show windows will be exclusively for the account of the Syndicate and the benefits obtained will be added to the funds of the "Economic Committee of Cinemas."

Article 34. The "empresarios" of the cinemas which work only a part of the week and other cinemas of slight monetary value will be paid the percentage which the "Economic Committee" establishes in each case, taking into account the value of the cinema and the economic carrying on of same.

Article 35. All the cinemas—just as they are at the present moment—are passed over to the Syndicate to depend directly on it for their normal working, and all reclamations which are justly presented will be resolved by the "Economic Cinema Committee." The indemnifications which the Syndicate agrees to attend to will be paid when the economic situation of the Committee permits.—

Mark Luescher, Dead at 60, Was Pioneer Showman

Mark A. Luescher died at Shady Brook Farm, his home near Southport, Conn., on September 20th, aged 60 years and prominently identified during 40 of those years with metropolitan show business. He is survived by Mrs. Luescher, two daughters, a brother and three sisters.

The motion picture industry knew Mr. Luescher at first hand as publicity director of RKO in New York, as director of press and public relations for the Roxy theatre and, after handling the promotional campaign for the opening of the Rockefeller Center theatres, as press representative of the Music Hall and Center. It knew him a little less intimately, and perhaps a little more spectacularly, as a pioneer in that special branch of exploitation which became the particular province of the late Harry Reichenbach, a field in which his sponsorship of Mlle. Dazie ("Rogue Domino") as the masked star of his roof garden show atop the New York theatre set an all-time mark for exploitation men to equal.

Mr. Luescher was born in Syracuse, N. Y., and educated at Cornell, launching a self-written magazine which won him a post as drama critic and led to his acquaintenceship with Lee Shubert, soon to develop with his brothers the theatrical firm which bears their name and to take with him into New York Mark Luescher. Mr. Luescher managed the Herald Square theatre, the first Shubert acquisition in New York, and became, later, first manager of the New Amsterdam for Klaw and Erlanger. It was from this firm that, in partnership with Louis Werba, he leased the roof garden, regarded as a white elephant, which he promptly made prosperous by his exploitation of the girl in the red mask.

Mr. Luescher was general representative of Martin Beck's Orpheum circuit for four years, producing many musical comedies, among them "The Spring Maid," "The Rose Maid" and "When We Were Forty-one," in which Elsie Janis made her first success. He managed the New York Hippodrome for Charles Dillingham from 1915 to 1922, when he became promotion director of the B. F. Keith vaudeville circuit. He joined the D'Oyly Carte Opera company as director of publicity in 1934.

AT&T Wins Suit Against General

American Telephone and Telegraph, Western Electric and Electrical Research Products, Inc., this week won a decision against General Talking Pictures Corporation in a patent infringement suit begun in November, 1934, and heard a year ago.

United States District Judge Mortimer Byer also ruled that the infringement apparatus should be turned over the plaintiffs.

General Talking Pictures took over the business of DeForest Phonofilm Corporation in the early days of sound and marketed theatre reproducers, which AT&T and its subsidiaries claimed infringed eight patents controlled by AT&T and licensed to Western Electric and Erpi.

The court decided that General Talking infringed six of the Telephone Company's patents by leasing to exhibitors vacuum tube amplifiers for use in theatres.

Studio to Assign Thalberg's Films

With work on four important films temporarily halted, executives of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer were in conference in Hollywood this week in an effort to bridge the gap left by the loss of Irving Thalberg.

The studio officials, stunned by the unexpected death of the 37 year old producer, were making every effort to get the studio machinery back into running order. No attempt will be made, it was said, to fill Mr. Thalberg's post of vice-president in charge of production.

The contracts of such players as Norma Shearer, the producer's widow, and Charles Laughton, who were under personal contract to Mr. Thalberg, are expected to revert now to the studio.

Darryl F. Zanuck was elected chairman of the Producers' Association controlling committee to fill Mr. Thalberg's former post.

Philco Officers Define Position In Court Hearing

Hearings in the action of the Philadelphia Storage Battery Company seeking an injunction preventing Radio Corporation of America from discontinuing a licensing arrangement by which the plaintiff uses RCA patents on a royalty basis were continued last week and this in the chancery court at Wilmington, Del., with officers of PSBC and the related Philco Radio and Television company giving testimony relating to the reorganization of Philco, formerly a PSBC subsidiary, as an independent concern in 1934.

Purposes of the reorganization, according to the testimony, were to enhance the company's position with relation to excise tax legislation then pending in Congress and "to prevent its greatest competitor, RCA, from seeing its list of customers and prices at which it sold to the several customers." The right to inspect the books of PSBC was RCA's under the terms of the agreement at issue.

President Larry E. Gubb of Philco denied on the stand that the reorganization as an independent company had been brought about with intent to "chisel" on royalties paid to RCA under the licensing arrangement which RCA has signified intention of terminating on that and similar grounds. His and other officers' testimony tended to show that the separation of Philco from PSBC is absolute and not, as hinted by their questioners, a paper operation for strategic purposes.

The royalty payment covering the first quarter of 1935 made by PSBC to RCA after the latter company had threatened to cancel its licensing agreement, was arrived at by calculating the royalty as if there had been no separation between PSBC and Philco and other companies, and was calculated on the formula that had been prescribed by RCA, Charles F. Steinruck of Philadelphia, accountant for PSBC, testified as the hearing continued.

Tax Revenues Show Decrease for August

Breaking a steady upward trend which had prevailed since last March, admission tax collections in August dropped more than $184,000 from the July figure of $1,568,487 to $1,384,107, it was reported in Washington by the Bureau of Internal Revenue. Collections for the month, however, were more than $70,000 ahead of the August, 1935, figure of $1,313,552, it was pointed out.

For the first eight months of the year, bureau records show, collections were more than $1,000,000 ahead of the comparable period of 1935, totaling $11,189,899 against $10,121,617.

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

Hollywood producers may not be aware of the fact, but they have had in their midst and in their employ an African Negro whose father in Nigeria had 25 children and the indisputable power of life and death over his tribal subjects in the jungles.

Momodu, claiming interludes with Barnum and Bailey's Circus and the movies, now bobs up in New York as the chief perker-upper on "Bassa Mona," an all-African play to be produced any day now by Mr. Roosevelt's WPA Federal Theatre Project. He runs the rehearsals in a little rehearsal hall adjoining Times Square with the dictatorial authority his father once had in the sunless jungles of Africa's west coast—minus, of course, the big swerving cutlass which his father's witch doctors are supposed to have used to cut off the heads of virgins every year so that their blood might be spilled on dad's big jungle drum. Momodu is using eight drums in the WPA play, one standing five feet high, so that eight giant blacks can girate through the orgiastic dance of the tribal wedding ceremony.

"These," explained Momodu to William Birnie, who was investigating for the New York World-Telegram, are "toys for children. My father had a drum 20 feet tall. You had to climb a tree to beat it. You could hear it 300 miles away and its sound bounced back and forth in the hills for six hours. The top of the drum was made of the skin of a virgin."

The Summit Hotel at Uniontown modestly, very modestly, announces that it has acquired at great expense—$1,250 to be exact—the very bed in which the late John Gilbert slept, and is now engaged in installing it.

The real height of something or other, however, is reached in that part of the hotel's announcement that explains, "In order to avoid confusion and discrimination, because of the heavy demand that will be made upon the bed, the Summit management has decided a drawing will be held every morning and the bed will be assigned each night to the winning number."

Candidates with inferiority complexes are advised not to participate even in the drawing.

Found! A method for combating pass "chiseling" and "gate-crashing" at motion picture theatres by policemen, garbage collectors and other forms of badge flashers:

Exhibitors in Mexico City were pestered no end with the evil. It had gotten to the point where at some of their shows hardly half the audience had paid admissions. Then the owners began to boil. Like many effective cures, the procedure which they arrived at is simplicity itself.

Ticket takers now politely jot down the numbers on the shields of the chiseling policeman or other city employee. At the end of each month, two lists are compiled by the exhibitor, each containing the shield numbers of all who crashed the gate on the fit of their uniforms or the shine of their badge. One list is presented to the chief of police, and reveals to him what many of his caps are doing on duty when they are supposed to be combating crime. The other list is given to the city treasurer, who is shown thereby just how much money his coffers are losing from abuses of city employees—the tax on admissions in Mexico City being 13 per cent.

John P. Medbury relates the story about the writer who was trying to get a job at RKO's studios in Hollywood and showed Sam Briskin, studio head, some samples of his work. Mr. Briskin read a few lines here and there from the manuscripts and asked the boy if he really sold "stuff like that."

"Why, certainly I do," defended the writer earnestly. "I've sold seven or eight just like that."

"Good!" snapped Briskin. "You start work tomorrow morning."

"In the scenario department?" asked the delighted writer.

"Hell, no!" shouted Briskin; "in the sales department."

Plot-for-a-Movie Department: Ray Long once assigned Odd McIntyre to write a magazine piece requiring McIntyre's finding, if possible, the loneliest soul in New York. There were so many gradations, so many depths of such a surfeit of poignancy that McIntyre gave it up. Now, accidentally, the other day, after all these years, he stumbled upon the almost perfect type for such an article: A Swiss maid in a Park Avenue apartment house, widowed in the war and without relatives. For 11 years she has been doing her routine work without being more than five blocks from her place. She has never attended a single amusement nor heard from her native land. Her diversion is sitting at her roof-top window watching the city light up.

Generally known is the fact that the late Samuel Lionel Rothapfel—Rothapfel meaning "Red Apple"—dropped the "p" from his name when he walked across Broadway from the management of the Rivoli theatre to the Capitol. Hardly known, however, is the origin of his famous nickname, "Roxy," by which he was known internationally, and which now serves as the name for dozens of shops—shoe shine, laundries, lunch stands, and whatnot, throughout the land. He received it from his wife, who used it as a pet term. Now, in New York alone, it seems destined for endurance through the Roxy Van and Express Company, Roxy Window Cleaning Company, Roxy Grill (saloon) and Roxy Garage, Roxy Hand Laundry (five of 'em), Roxy Knitting Mills, Roxy Hotel and Roxy Jewelry Company, Roxy Neckwear, the Roxy Market, Roxy Lumber Company, Roxy Paint Supplies, Roxy this and Roxy that.

Roxy once told Terry Ramsaye that he had always wanted to change Rothafel entirely and legally to Roxy.

Speculating over the final monetary return from his career at the end, Hollywood is recalling a story about the late Irving Thalberg which gives some idea of the size of the estate, variously estimated at high as $10,000,000.

Two years ago Carl Laemmle, retired pioneer, was supposedly in financial difficulties. His whole Universal company, so the story goes, was at stake. Desperate, he called on Thalberg.

"Irving," he said, "will you do me a favor?"

"Yes," said Thalberg, "what is it?"

"Sign my note for a million dollars."

"Where's the note," answered Thalberg, and without batting an eyelash he signed on the spot.

OUTDOOR COMPETITION FOR FILMS ON INCREASE

Recreational Interest Doubled in Decade, Association Says After Survey of Activities

Statistics of playground and supervised recreation facilities computed for the last 10 years show that the recreation-mindedness of Americans has doubled in that time, according to a report of the National Recreation Association. The report, while it is concerned only with the increasing use of outdoor amusement facilities and play activities made available through municipal, state and federal funds, implies that the leisure time of the average citizen has been correspondingly increased.

On the basis of the rapidly mounting sums paid by the public in taxes for government operated means to enjoy their leisure time, it is assumed that the search for amusement has brought related benefits to the professional world of showmanship.

The 10 year review of the Association is confined strictly to the popularity of forms of film competition: playgrounds, bathing beaches, public golf courses, ice skating areas, swimming pools and indoor recreational centers designed to further the aims of the group which are expressed partially in the quotation, "A generation . . . that above all has developed character and established standards of values, will not be swept off its feet by the alluring appeals of the baser forms of amusements. The chief responsibilities are: to provide facilities for wholesome recreation; to control and redirect the tendencies to promote undesirable amusements, and to educate the people by developing attitudes that seek socialized uses of leisure time."

The amount of money spent by all sources, public and private, for public recreation in the fields covered by the survey increased during the decade from $18,816,615 in 1925 to $37,472,409 in 1935. Employed men and women in charge of recreation facilities increased from 17,177 to 43,976 in the same period. Last year, however, 25,480 of the employees and about $16,000,000 were supplied through emergency relief funds by the Government. The review covered 2,204 communities.

Bathing beaches, public golf courses, ice skating areas and swimming pools doubled, the survey shows. Schools and other buildings used in part for recreation tripled, and the number of buildings used entirely for recreation quadrupled.

Swimming, ice skating, softball, basketball, horseshoe pitching and tennis were the most popular sports. Picnicking led the informal outdoor activities, with 347,000 persons taking part. Hikers numbered 76,000. In the arts, handcraft attracted 438,000 children and 73,000 adults; pageantry enrolled 70,000; plays, 46,000; orchestras, 147,000; singing, 194,000; folk dancing, 108,000, and social dancing, 186,000.

The only mention of motion pictures in the report is under the heading of miscellaneous activities. In this group 134 cities having regular recreation service and 26 having only emergency service reported the use of motion pictures in the program, but in no case is the number of participants reported.

EDUCATIONAL FILMS PUBLICIZE SAFETY

Motorists who are haled before Philadelphia magistrates will find the usual judicial lecture on safety and sudden death replaced by a vivid motion picture made especially to propagate Mayor S. Davis Wilson's safety campaign. They will be taken into the Mayor's reception room and required to watch the film which dramatizes the results of wrong driving.

The State of Pennsylvania is also making plans to employ means of visual education through motion pictures to exploit safe driving campaigns. The Safety Division of the State Department of Revenue will sponsor a series of educational films for this purpose. Production of the pictures, to be spotted in theatres throughout the state, will begin early this Fall and Governor Earle and Secretary of Revenue John B. Kelly will play stellar roles in the first releases.

Puritan Includes 15 On Current Program

The current program of Puritan Pictures includes 15 films, nine of which are characterized as "roadshow specials" to be produced by Sentinel Pictures, in addition to six action melodramas to be made by Fanchon Royer Features.

The first of the roadshows will be "What Becomes of the Children," featuring Joan Marsh, Barbara Pepper, Robert Fraser, Natalie Morehead. "Forgotten Souls," the second on the list, is in production. The first action picture, "Pilot X," now completed, is soon to be released.

Puritan also plans 16 westerns, two musicals and six or eight other films on which details have not yet been set.

About 430 Theatres Now Admit Children

Approximately 430 of the 600 eligible theatres in New York already have been licensed to admit children without guardians. Each of the theatres has a special matron, licensed by the Department of Health, to look after the juveniles who are seated in special sections.

Some of the unlicensed theatres which are admitting children unaccompanied have been summoned for violating the Stand Act.

State Aid Is Asked For Mexican Films

by JAMES LOCKHART
in Mexico City

The Ministry of National Economy is studying a program calling for an advisory council of three to direct state assistance for the Mexican film industry, submitted by Manuel Reachi, producer. Mr. Reachi proposes that the council include an expert in film financing, an authority on production, preferably with producing experience, and one who is versed in international film distribution.

Mr. Reachi contends that the industry's slow progress here is due to the lack of technical and professional material for making good pictures, the few really competent directors of varied experience, ignorance of the best methods of making films commercially profitable, and lack of contact for large scale international distribution. More attention must be given to film stories and public desires, he says.

The Mexican Congress proposes to arrange state aid for companies which produce films designed to make the truth about Mexico better known abroad.

The Congress also is considering a measure which would provide for the production of a film history of the revolution, covering a period from 1910 to today. The picture would touch on all phases of the situation and be completely accurate. The measure provides that a Mexican company produce the film, which would have wide distribution abroad.

Two New Theatres In Central America

Only two new theatres have been constructed in Central America in the past year, Louis Simpson, head of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's offices in that territory, said upon his arrival in New York recently. The new structures are the Palace, a 900-seat house in San Jose, Costa Rica; and the Lux, a 2,600-seat theatre at Guatemala City. The Anker interests, who have the Palace in the same city, have taken over the Lux. There are 160 houses in Central America, all wired for sound. In Guatemala there is a Government tax of 15 per cent on the gross business which does not come out of the pockets of the patrons, but is paid by the exhibitor. In other countries, the tax is slightly lower, Mr. Simpson said, and levies are comparatively light throughout the territory.

Production Studio To Open in New York

The Film Art Studios, Inc., a new company, has leased the Erlanger Warehouse at 447 West 49th Street, New York City, for conversion into a motion picture studio. The building will have three stages. Officers of the company are Craig McDonald Kenny, president; John Doran, vice-president and general manager, and Harold Southern, secretary and treasurer.

Mr. Doran, who is also chairman of the Amusement Board of the New York World's Fair, will have complete charge of the studio, which is expected to be ready for production by October 10th.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Turn About

There is evidence that studios have decided two can play at the stars' currently popular game of stamped foot, tossed head, slammed door and see-my-agent. Gone are the days when a star brooding over real or fancied wrongs could enjoy her influenza, duly documented by a well paid medico, serene in the knowledge that her studio would hold up production pending her return to good humor and, hence, work.

Suddenly, and with quite impressive unanimity, the studios seem to have learned what to do. Stellar substitutions, once almost unthinkable, are becoming standard practice.

The case of Warner Brothers and Bette Davis is, of course, familiar. A deadline was set for her to report for work on "God's Country and the Woman" and, when she didn't choose to run, Beverly Roberts was assigned the role without further argument.

Twentieth Century-Fox operated in much the same fashion when Loretta Young found herself too ill to play in "Lloyds of London." Madeleine Carroll was borrowed from Walter Wanger and the ailing lady took herself and her influenza to Honolulu.

Simone Simon is another of the Twentieth Century-Fox people recently stricken by influenza. Hers was the ambulatory or tennis type of flu, which the studio press saw fit to diagnose as "threatened appendicitis," but the executive course was identical with that pursued in the case of Miss Young. June Lang got the job. The picture is "White Hunter."

Viewed by and large, the development is both interesting and amusing. It is generally felt that temperament, in this particular manifestation, has been rather disproportionately expensive. But there is another aspect of the matter. Stars sometimes do fall ill, and none there are who regard a studio as justified in substitution as a blanket policy covering the genuine as well as the counterfeit indisposition. Happily, the counterfeiters are rather generally known as such, and it is felt that there is little likelihood of the innocent being punished with the guilty.

Production Pauses

Due in major part to the untimely passing of Irving Thalberg, Hollywood's lately smooth running production machinery was sharply out of gear last week. As start of production of pictures slated was postponed and work on those in progress interrupted, only three new films got under way during the period.

The tragedy left executives, writers, players, directors and technicians with small desire to work. There was scant heart for the manufacture of illusion, comic, musical or dramatic, in the presence of real drama that benumbed the sensibilities of all.

PROTESTS NEWSREELS' POLITICAL FOOTAGE

Protesting that the newsreels are allotting too much attention to political matters, A. E. Hancock of the Columbia theatre at Columbia City, Ind., wrote to "What the Picture Did for Me":

"Full of political shots. Repetition after repetition. Something should be done to curb the excessive footage that is being used for political purposes."

Reference is to newsreels in general.

Prior to the tragic hour of 10:16 on Monday morning Columbia had started two pictures. In "Lady From Nowhere," which Gordon Wiles is directing, Mary Astor, Charles Quigley and Gene Morgan are featured. The cast for "The Cowboy Star" includes Charles Starrett and Iris Shunm.

At Radio "Night Waitress," which will feature Margot Grahame, Gordon Jones and Barbara Pepper started. Lew Landers (formerly Friedlander) is directing.

Two pictures were finished at Columbia. In "Come Closer Folks" James Dunn, Marian Marsh, Wynne Gibson, Gene Lockhart and George McKay will be seen. D. Ross Lederman directed. "North of Nome," a Larry Darmour production, will present Jack Holt, Evelyn Venable, Dorothy Appleby, Roger Imhof, Paul Hurst, John Miljan, Guinn Williams and Robert Gleckler. William Nigh directed.

Universal finished two pictures. "The Luckiest Girl in the World" features Jane Wyatt with Louis Hayward, Eugene Pallette and Catherine Doucet. Edward Buzzell directed. "Love Letters of a Star," formerly titled "The Case of the Constant God," will present Walter Coy, Polly Rowles, Henry Hunter, C. Henry Gordon, Halliwell Hobbes, Samuel Hinds, Nan Grey and Alma Kruger. Lewis R. Foster directed.

Republic finished "The President's Mystery." The cast includes Henry Wilcoxon, Betty Furness, Sidney Blackmer, Evelyn Brent, Barnett Parker, Mel Buick, Wade Boteler, John Wray, Guy Usher, Robert Homans, Si Jenks and Arthur Aylesworth. Phil Rosen directed.

Radio finished and quickly previewed the George Hirliman production, "Daniel Boone." George O'Brien is starred, supported by Heather Angel, John Caradine, Ralph Forbes, Clarence Muse, George Regas, Dickie Jones, Huntly Gordon, Harry Cording, Aggie Herring, Crawford Kent and Keith Kenneth. David Howard directed.

Disrupted MGM schedules were righted towards the end of the week, when the halted "Maytime" and "A Day at the Races" were resumed.

Color—Second Run

A local exhibitor startled a group of his fellows who were holding an animated discussion praising "Ramona" after the preview, by declairing that though he agreed it was a fine picture, excellently done, his theatre would not play it. It was not necessary to press him for reasons, for, as he became the center of the group, he volunteered the answer.

"You've just seen an exceptionally fine piece of merchandise," he began. "The picture has a fine story, the cast is well chosen, the production is class. But more than half the appeal of the picture lies in the color."

"So what?" someone asked. "I don't find color any handicap in my situation."

"Of course you don't," agreed the first exhibitor, "you play them all first run. But take my theatre, I get them all ninety days late. Have you ever seen a color print after it has played its first and second runs?"

Everyone agreed that they had not.

"That's just the trouble," the exhibitor went on, "none of the producers or top exhibitors ever see anything but brand new prints. When you get them the way I get them, they look altogether different. Those beautiful blues and oranges and reds you see now look like the clothes on my washline on a cloudy day.

"No sir, if they had made the picture in black and white, I'd be ready to book it now. But not in color."

24 Hour Day

Motion picture photography by means of the infra-red ray, for the purpose of utilizing natural light beyond the usual daily span, is receiving a good deal of attention as a solution of various long standing problems. No one intends, of course, to build up to a 24-hour camera day, although it is theoretically possible to develop the process, by which a still camera can photograph a hot iron in a dark room, to that extent.

More to the point is the use of the process by Ernest Haller in photographing scenes for Warners' "The Captain's Kid" in the late afternoon, obviating the necessity for postponing until next morning work which juvenile Sybil Jason could not legally do in the evening.

The infra-red ray is one of those things the intelligence recognizes although the eye sees it not. It may be explained that late afternoon light contains red rays in adequate intensity and is impractical for photographic purposes only because there is, at that time, an excess of yellow and blue rays. Screens filtering these out are used when photographing by infra-red rays is continued beyond a normal hour.

"U" to Expand Feature List

Universal's 1936-37 production program is being revised and expanded as a result of the increased number of contracts already closed, J. Cheever Cowdin, chairman, said this week in New York upon his return from Hollywood. The decision followed conferences at the studio.

"When the new administration took charge of the studio last April," Mr. Cowdin said, "we laid out a tentative and conservative program of what we expected to be able to do. Cochrane and I, during our last visit at the studio, found that in pictures completed and pictures fully ready to shoot we are now at the point which we had not expected to reach until next January 1. From the number of pictures already completed and those ready to go into work, Universal this year will be able to meet its release schedule promptly, something the company unfortunately has been unable to do several times in the past."

"As far as sales are concerned," said Mr. Cowdin, "we are far ahead of previous years both in the terms of new contracts and in their number. Because of this, a revision and expansion of our production program is justified. Cochrane and I are more than gratified by the results achieved by Grainger, our general manager of distribution, and his staff. Nate Manheim, in charge of our foreign operations, has set a mark for the domestic staff to shoot at, too.

"The records being established now by 'My Man Godfrey' are tremendously encouraging. Cochrane and I were both delighted and amazed at the marked progress made by our studio under Rogers and Koenig.

"We are having the same difficulty that all studios have at this time of year in casting pictures, but we are preparing for this by developing more new talent and promising personalities than we have ever tried to develop before. Hitherto we have tried to groom a few youngsters at a time, but now we have over 40 who look excellent and we are confident they will give new zest to our pictures."

Samuel Spring, film attorney, has been elected to the board of Universal Pictures Corporation. Mr. Spring was a vice-president, general counsel and treasurer of the old First National; he was a former advisory counsel of RKO, and has been attorney for Pathe and for the late Samuel L. (Roxy) Rothafel. At present he is attorney for numerous industry executives, among them Charles R. Rogers and Sam Katz.

Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe has reserved decision on a motion made by counsel for Carl Laemmle to dismiss the action of Edwin R. Lavin for $255,000 commission for the sale of Universal stock.

Woman Sues Pathe News

A $10,000 libel suit has been filed in the United States district court of Brooklyn by Mrs. Gertrude Sweenek against Pathe News, Inc. Mrs. Sweenek charges she was libeled in a release of April 13, 1935, which represented her and several other women taking reducing exercises in Philadelphia Jack O'Brien's gymnasium. She alleges that comment by Teddy Bergman held her up to ridicule. The judge reserved decision.

Edward S. Field, 56, Playwright, Is Dead

Edward Salisbury Field, playwright and real estate operator, died early this week at his home at Santa Barbara, where he had lived since 1911. He was 56 years old. Mr. Field wrote the dialogue for Mary Pickford's "Secrets," and also wrote "Smart Women," "Women of the Jury," and "Nancy's Private Affair." The adaptation, dialogue and continuity of "Little Women" were his work and he adapted "The Witching Hour." He was also author of the story, "His Greatest Gamble."

Survey Fails to Show Radio Evil

An analysis of grosses of 30 affiliated theatres, recently completed by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, has proved inconclusive in determining whether or not box-office receipts are injured directly by competition from radio programs which feature film personalities, it was revealed this week.

As a result of the failure of the study to indict the participation of stars in radio broadcasting, official quarters in New York believe that Will H. Hays will make no move on his return to New York from Hollywood early next week to influence radio officials to curtail their use of motion picture stars and feature players.

Meanwhile, despite exhibitors' complaints alleging unfair competition of film stars' air appearances, Ralph Brunton, manager of the Northern California Broadcasting System, has worked out a plan with 21 theatres to trade "plugs" of the radio programs on the screens for similar advertisements over the air.

Search for Talent Launched by GN

An international talent search which will cover every country in the world in an effort to build up their own list of contract players will be started soon by Grand National Films, it has been announced by Edward L. Alperson, president of the company. Sidney M. Biddell, eastern story editor, has been commissioned to head the talent department.

"In His Steps," first picture on the Grand National program, was released this week after a trade showing at the Astor, New York.

Sol Edwards, formerly assistant to Jack Skirball, general sales manager for Educational, has taken up his new duties as eastern district manager for GN. His territory includes exchanges as far south as Washington and west to and including Detroit. Dave Bader, who recently resigned as Carl Laemmle's special representative in England, has joined GN as special sales and publicity representative for B. F. Zeidman in the British Isles and Australia.

Mae Clarke and Helen Lynd have been signed to play leading parts in "Hats Off," Boris Petroff musical production which is scheduled to go into work next week.

Big Gain Seen for Two Companies

Considerable improvement in current gross earnings of both Paramount Pictures Corporation and Columbia Pictures Corporation were predicted this week.

Though the figures have not been completed for the third quarter for Paramount, net profit for the period is expected to be well over $1,000,000 after interest, depreciation and other charges, Wall Street Journal said. This includes undistributed equity in the earnings of theatre subsidiaries. The gain is reported to have taken place particularly in the theatre field. Normal earning power of the circuit with its affiliates is put at $5,000,000 to $6,000,000 annually, and current operations are said to be running close to this rate.

Management of the studios under Adolph Zukor is also reported to be running smoothly, with pictures being held within budgets. The company's cash position at present is strong, about $18,000,000 in working capital having been on hand at the start of the year.

At the annual meeting of stockholders of Columbia Pictures Corporation this week, Harry Cohn, president, said that gross income during the September quarter, the first period of the new fiscal year, has been running ahead of a year ago, owing to increased theatre attendance which has augmented the percentage rentals on films.

Zukor on Coast At Studio Helm

Adolph Zukor arrived in Hollywood this week following a visit to New York to conclude a business deal whereby he would concentrate all his activity in Hollywood and take charge of production at the Paramount studios. William LeBaron, executive producer, was to start east for home office conferences immediately after conferring with Mr. Zukor.

The Paramount board of directors was to hold its regular meeting Thursday.

The United States circuit court of appeals has denied four of the five final appeals from Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe's order dealing with applications for allowances for services in connection with the reorganization of Paramount. The fifth and final appeal was successful.

The circuit court's decision saves Paramount $202,500 in fees which had been sought by attorneys and denied by Judge Coxe, whose decision the higher court upheld. The appeals were taken by Samuel Zirn, who sought $75,000 as attorney for a petitioning creditor and, with A. J. Schanfarber and Louis Boehm, as attorneys for a Paramount security holder, who sought an involuntary receivership for the company in 1933, asked an additional $75,000; also Jacob Lesser, attorney who requested $37,500, and Archibald Palmer, attorney, who sought $15,000. The higher court reversed Judge Coxe on the disallowance of a $7,500 fee to Morris Feldblum, as a substitute attorney for a small committee, and granted Mr. Feldblum's application.

The Girl on the Front Page

(Universal)

Comedy-Romance

This is a bright, breezy comedy romance told against the familiarly exciting but nevertheless, as here applied, refreshing newspaper world background. A sleek combination of tried and true elements, humorous comedy, gay and provocative love interest, light drama, all pepped up by the own contrast of skullduggery, it's tailor made material for the talents of Edmund Lowe, Gloria Stuart, Reginald Owen, Spring Byington and members of the support. It moves speedily to the pitch of good dialogue, well paced action and interesting situations.

Development of the plot is different. Gloria Stuart inherits a go-getter paper. Hardboiled editor Loew vows he won't work for any half witted dame, nevertheless he is prevailed upon to accept the paper's management. Miss Stuart hasn't any illusions about Lowe. To show him up she writes a letter of introduction and in disguise applies for a job. Lowe sees through the gag and dishes out the toughest assignments. She takes her medicine standing up and somehow gets the idea that her boss is romantically interested in her. Ensues a series of situations in which her blackmailing butler, Owen, and his henchmen turn against her only to have Lowe, to the accompaniment of the expected thrill action, bust up the plot to provide a comedy-romance conclusion.

Sound comedy entertainment, the picture seems to be of the character and quality that amuse the run-of-the-mill folks. Though the title, to a certain extent, is hardly relevant, the story content plus cast names should readily provide a basis for exploitation campaigns to whet the interest.

Polo Joe

(Warner)

Comedy

This picture is merry, mad nonsense. Anything resembling a sane moment, even remotely, is noticeable by its absence. The film is merely a quick succession of character, situation and dialogue gags. There is a story, but it's not much of a one, even as screen stories go. Rather appearing as though they made it up as they went along, discarding material that was prepared in favor of something that promises further high and low foolishness, it's simply a framework on which clowning Joe E. Brown and his fellow troupers might hang one more stunt or gag. The result is ridiculous amusement that should fully satisfy the demands of the Brown clientele and provide plenty of hearty laughter for any kind of fun loving audience.

It's all about a fellow who, more afraid of horses than anything else in the world, gets mixed up with a swanky polo playing set. In a pickle because the girl he loves adores polo players and because his valet has built him up as the greatest polo player in China, his experiences provoke nothing but laughter. Whether he's singing Chinese songs, pursuing his romance, gagging, belting mixed up kidnapers or riding down the field a la Hitchcock, he's continually the center of fast, furious fun.

As the picture is loaded with amusement, so is it full of unique potential exploitation ideas that, grasped and efficiently publicized, should prove potent business stimulators. "Polo Joe" probably won't crowd any of the more costly and pretentious features off the map, but where enjoyable farce is appreciated it should do all right by itself.

Previewed in the Warner Forum theatre, before a typical neighborhood house. The only difficulty the audience seemed to experience was in finding sufficient energy to laugh more and louder.

Trouble Ahead

(Atlantic)

Romantic Comedy

Characters portrayed here are a motion picture producer intent upon conducting a fake popularity contest for the purpose of smuggling his sweetie into stardom, the sweetie, a press agent conspiring with them at the expense of the unknowing male star he represents, the star, the starry-eyed innocent of his heart's noble desire and, of course, studio attaches who indicate by wink and nod that all this is but routine practice. Like other stories in kind, this one is heavily underscored with humor, on the frequently propounded theory that comedy treatment of a situation keeps patrons from accepting it as representing a factual parallel, and, again like other stories in kind, this one achieves just that. All of which may have no connection whatever with the fact that the picture is being shown in New York without a production code seal number.

Players whose names are available for billing are Charles Farrell as the star in the story, Gregory Ratoff as the press agent, Margot Grahame as the producer's flame and Mary Lawson as the sweet young thing. All give creditable performances, Mr. Ratoff's excelling. Monte Bank, who directed the picture, also appears in it briefly and his name is, therefore, another for any marquee on which it appeared profitably in the days of his activity as an American comedian.

The story, as indicated, concerns the attempt of an American motion picture star and his press agent-manager to obtain a film contract in England from a producer who exacts, as a condition, that they shall conspire with him in a popularity contest which will be won by his girl friend, who needs a buildup. The actor meets and falls in love with an English girl. The manager tries to obtain the contract in spite of the star's objections to the terms. The actor and the girl become separated and the manager, relenting, brings about a reunion. It's all done with comedy, while a bit of singing, not very seriously undertaken, is tossed in at intervals.

Reviewed at the Globe Theatre, on a muggy afternoon, where a drop-in Broadway audience was altogether undemonstrative as to reaction.

Dodsworth

(United Artists - Goldwyn)

Comedy-Drama

A clever adaptation of a smart novel and stage play, "Dodsworth" measures up as worthy entertainment to engage the attentions of grownup audiences and showmen. Backed by class production effects and settings and given the benefit of those unique exploitation potentialities perculiar to Goldwyn's features, the motivating story skillfully blends those elements which provoke human interest.

Basically the story is a comedy drama of the happiness and disillusionments of mature married life. Presented in an atmosphere of believable realism, one that follows the it-might-have-happened idea, the picture is finely acted. The leading players, Walter Huston and Ruth Chatterton, as well as the support, are always real, human and convincing. As any tendency towards artificial theatricalism has been carefully eschewed, the narration is accomplished through the effectively combined media of natural dialogue and smartly contrived situations and movement. The comedy is humorous; the drama is sensibly dramatic, occasionally carrying a bit of pathos.

ness denied them during a lifetime spent in an isolated Midwestern manufacturing city. Dodsworth wants to see the sights. Fran wants to prove to herself that, instead of growing old, she is still attractive to men. Dodsworth tolerates and forgives Fran's possibly dangerous flirtation with Lockert aboard the Queen Mary and her second episode with Iselin, whereupon, to let her have her fling, Dodsworth returns to America to become a man pushed around in his own home (here the atmosphere is pleasing domestic comedy). Then the story turns menacingly dramatic when, upon his return to Europe, he demands a showdown and Fran announces that as they no longer have anything in common, she is filing a divorce. As wandering Dodsworth finds happiness in the tastefully handled companionship of Edith Cortright, Fran's dream of future bliss with youthful von Obersdorf is blasted by his mother, who forbids a marriage because of the differences in age and on religious grounds. The dramatic quality of the incident is intensified when Fran, calling Dodsworth to her side, childishly tries to wheedle forgiveness. But Dodsworth, castigating her for the shallow, selfish woman she now is, leaves and goes back to Ruth.

Of direct appeal to mature audiences, tne story character and moral being entirely over the heads of minors, the picture provides illuminating entertainment for those contingents. The film seems to be of the quality that will please in both big and small town theatres. While the sophisticates probably will grasp its underlying motivation more readily, any one, man or woman who has the capacity to understand should have no difficulty appreciating what it's all about.

Previewed in Grauman's Chinese theatre. The audience was enthusiastic over the manner in which essentially stage players went about the playing of an essentially stage show. Appreciative of the performances of Huston and Miss Chatterton, it especially applauded elderly Mme. Maria Ouspenskaya's effective bit of work.

The Gallant Defender

(Columbia)

Western Drama

Many a picture has utilized for dramatic purposes the stubborn resistance of the cowmen to the homesteading of lands previously used for grazing, but not all of them have given both sides an even break. This one, perhaps because it is from a story by Peter B. Kyne, who knows the mechanics of plot and interest as he knows his typewriter, does so. There is, consequently, a measure of suspense uncommon in pictures in kind and a degree of plausibility long since despaired of by most of the people who make, exhibit or go to see them.

The principal role is played by Charles Starrett, described as a Dartmouth football star and a newcomer in the field of western heroics, and the girl in the case is portrayed by Joan Perry. Mr. Starrett's personality is in the pattern for the assignment and he does his chores like a veteran. Harry Woods does the dirty work in his accustomed unmistakable manner and Edward J. Le Saint also gives a characteristic performance. The Sons of the Pioneers, a radio quartette, supply a number of harmonic interludes, but these are achieved without stopping the progress of the story and, incidentally, are not bad.

Mr. Starrett is cast as Johnny Flagg, cowboy, who rescued a homesteader attacked by gunmen employed by Munro, unprincipled rancher, to intimidate incoming farmers by murder or other suitable means. Flagg is mistaken for a government man but outwits assailants commissioned to kill him. He assumes leadership of the homesteaders, acting as foreman for Barbara McGrail, who has come to file upon land stolen from her father by Munro, his murderer, and leads them victoriously through a series of melodramatic events culminating in his disposal of Munro by duly deputized six-shooter.

Valiant is the Word For Carrie

(Paramount)

Drama

As this picture comes up on the screen, it presents prospectively a pretty problem for showmen. Actually long, the slow directorial technique accorded the film, in a definite attempt to heighten the motivation's impressive quality, seems to make the film run monotonously long. Essentially the story is one of those sympathy stirring affairs. Carefully produced along lines that are necessary to successful selling, it presents, in Gladys George, a valuable new screen name. Additionally it provides two comparatively unknown child players, Jackie Moran and Charlene Wyatt, with important parts. Both the youngsters skillfully play their roles to the hilt. As the story covers the period of a generation, the child artists are replaced by John Howard, who is acceptable, and Arlene Judge, who expertly carries on the character first created by little Miss Wyatt.

Carrie Snider, scarlet woman of a small southern town, finds it convenient to leave her home rather than permit the populace to run her out. She takes two homeless orphans, Paul and Lady, with her, and sets about making a home for them, a business for herself and respectability for all in New York. Years pass and Carrie's dream of providing beneficial influences for herself and charges is achieved. Lady has come to love Paul jealously. Paul, accidentally causing the death of a man, feels that he has an obligation to the dead man's sister Lili, a girl of uncertain character. The fury of Lady's jealousy, plus the inability of Carrie to break down the strange attachment, causes Lady to marry. Her dreams of happiness for Paul seemingly about to be shattered, Carrie, who intuitively knows the kind of girl Lili is, becomes involved with her in a jailbreak plot. That frustrated by police, Carrie herself lands behind the bars. In a complicated finale, it is not easy to understand what will become of her or her charges, other than it is evident that Carrie is determined to face charges against her. As a sort of epilogue, two stranger friends, Ringrose and Yonne, together soliloquize that the only term descriptive of a woman who struggled so nobly but apparently futilely is "valiant."

Primarily sober toned character and event drama, the story is not entirely lacking in appreciable comedy incident. Nevertheless, the show establishes itself as an attraction that may engage the attention of specialized audiences. Directly a woman's picture, it should under the guidance of intelligent and discerning showmanship appeal significantly to many of this audience contingent.

Previewed in the Paramount theatre, Los Angeles. Parts of the audience demonstrated an understanding and appreciation of what was provided. It was evident that others had difficulty in grasping what it was all about or why. All, however, seemed to approve the individual work of the various principals and supporting players.

The Beloved Vagabond

(Toeplitz - Columbia)

Romance with Music

There is a good deal in the material of this picture, the first Maurice Chevalier has made in England and the second from Toeplitz Productions, with which to fetch the patrons. Chief is Chevalier's name, the particular potency of that value in any locality being the deciding factor of the picture's suitability. Second is the fact that it is from the W. J. Locke novel; where that English best seller has gone the rounds since its publication thirty or forty years ago this appeal may well be placed first.

In the theme of a man who thinks a career and worldly success well lost for the open road, and the life of a vagabond singer, there is opportunity for provocative explanation. Can such a man ever resume his place in society is a question which can be posed, with the promise of a diverting answer in the film.

The story is of Gaston de Nerac, a French architect in love with an English girl. He consents to "desert" her when a rival reveals that he has the power to send her father to prison and will exercise it unless he gets the girl.

Letting career and prospects of fortune go overboard, Gaston sets out for France, taking with him the small son of his landlady. In a remote country town they meet and befriend Blanquette, struggling to carry on alone as the "Paragot Orchestra," after the death of its mainstay, her grandfather.

Gaston adopts the name of Paragot and the three live a carefree, happy life singing to the villagers of France until the winter drives them to Paris. There Paragot meets his old flame and her husband. Jealous, the husband taunts his wife by revealing Paragot's sacrifice.

When the husband dies shortly after, the widow carries Paragot off to London. Their marriage is arranged and a big reception is held the night before. Blanquette and the boy come from Paris with a humble present and Paragot, seeing them treated with contempt, realizes his loathing for respectability and goes back to Paris to marry Blanquette.

Trade shown at night at the Adelphi theatre. The many original touches in presentation, the humor of the final episodes and the quaint Victorian atmosphere were appreciated, even though the film showed some falling off in the unique Chevalier vitality.

Incertidumbre

(United Artists)

Spanish Comedy Drama

This picture is interesting to the English-speaking audience chiefly because it is presented as the last completed feature to be produced in Spain prior to the outbreak of hostilities. The dialogue is in Spanish and the picture is not equipped with English titles.

Production is not up to contemporary American standards. Occasional bits of photography stand out against a mediocre whole. Continuity is jerky and characters appear abruptly in various settings to converse at length. Musical accompaniment is introduced at intervals and abandoned evidently at will. There are three actionful sequences, a nightclub brawl at the opening, an attempt to wreck a telephone line in midpicture and a railroad tunnel rescue at the finish. The feminine lead sings one song.

The story concerns a group of engineers engaged in installing a telephone line, a plot to wreck it, and romantic episodes culminating happily after a series of misunderstandings.

Reviewed at the Cervantes theatre, New York, a spacious cinema in the Spanish community which offers, in addition to films, vaudeville in Spanish. A matinee audience laughed heartily at certain portions of the dialogue and seemed to approve of the picture generally.

Bulldog Edition

(Republic)

Newspaper Drama

This picture invades the tabloid newspaper field and presents a drama that leans more heavily on melodrama than on the straight variety and is crammed with action sequences that accelerate the story to its denouement. Story values, as a whole, however, do not keep pace with its action sequences. The plot has various ramifications which include a three-cornered love theme, a gangster angle and a circulation rivalry between newspapers that stop at nothing less than murder.

The acting is good, as are the production features. Where it falters, probably, is in the knitting together of the whole. Exploitation possibilities are there for natural tie-ups with newspapers, in title and story content. Ray Walker as the circulation manager of a tabloid, Regis Toomey as its managing editor and Evalyn Knapp as its ace cartoonist all give authentic punch to their roles.

In the story Walker and Toomey are both in love with Miss Knapp. Miss Knapp, formerly secretary to Walker, has been transferred to the editorial department because of her sketching ability. Sent out to cover a trial Miss Knapp returns with the wrong verdict and ten minutes after the paper is off the press the entire issue has to be called off the street. The misinformation is traced to a rival tabloid's trickery.

A circulation war is started. Toomey prints damaging articles on the career of a widely known gangster. In retaliation the gangster offers his services to the rival tabloid and with his henchmen terrorizes newsboys and delivery men until Walker's circulation drops almost to the vanishing point. In one of the raids a murder is committed and Miss Knapp, who has witnessed the killing, is held prisoner by the gangster. Walker on a tip finds her but is caught.

The gangster decides to put the two to death and make it appear as suicide. Toomey arrives on the scene, however, followed by the police. Miss Knapp chooses Walker.

Ciboulette

(Franco-American)

French Operetta

This is an all-French production of an operetta generically akin to the material in which Grace Moore has appeared in America and, in less degree, the earlier works of Maurice Chevalier on this side. Dialogue and lyrics are in French, and the film, as seen, is not supplied with English titles.

In photography, staging, technical detail generally, the picture is on a par with contemporary product from any source. The opening sequences are blended together in a manner uncommonly effective and favorably reminiscent of the finer things that Hollywood used to do in silent days and, unfortunately, stopped doing when sound became available as an instrument for challenging interest. The device is a silent opening for a musical film.

The cast, made up of comely and competent players, does not include names familiar to American cinema audiences. The story is light and frothy, in the manner of the continental operetta, and free of the questionable angles sometimes employed in Parisian fiction. The music is pleasant and there is a good deal of it.

The story has to do with a peasant girl enamoured of an aristocratic young man and a musician who brings them together after quite a number of misunderstandings.

Romance Rides the Range

(Spectrum)

Western

In attempting to emphasize the singing voice of the star, Fred Scott, this western suffers from slow tempo. While the story is typically western in its material and allows ample opportunity for fast action and high excitement it misses fire somehow with the resultant lack of suspense and rapid-fire action commonly associated with productions of this type.

Scott has a good voice and an agreeable personality, auguring well for favor with western adherents, as this is the first of a series of six productions starring him.

Marion Shilling represents the love interest in the picture and handles her role capably. Cliff Nazarro, as Shorty, plays straight comedy.

Scott, after completing a season in opera in the East, leaves for a vacation in the West. While still a short distance from his ranch, Scott is of help to Marion Shilling and her brother, who are being molested by Clem Allen.

Funny

Comedy and nonsense is the keynote of this two-reeler featuring Tim and Irene. Tim rents a house in the country and plans to spend a quiet and peaceful vacation. He invites the boss to look him up. Meanwhile the wife (Irene) and her family have moved into the house and turned it into a hotel. When Tim arrives he has to register in his own home. A lot of other indignities are perpetrated against him but he suffers most when his boss arrives and receives the same treatment at the hands of Irene. The boss evidently likes the treatment for he appoints Irene general manager of his business. Tim becomes housekeeper. Running time, 20 minutes.

Advance outlines of productions nearing completion as seen by the Hollywood staff of the Motion Picture Herald

The Man I Marry

(Universal)

Comedy-Romance

Besides introducing Doris Nolan, a New York stage star, who shows indication of becoming an important screen personality, this production also reintroduces a comedy romance story which, while not entirely new in idea, seems to be of that dependable fun provoking quality that presages audience popularity. Covering a wide range, the motivation is original and promises to be gayly exciting and full of those incidents in dialogue, situations, and action that bring forth laughter.

It concerns a girl who ran away from her own wedding and a writing man who would rather be in jail than in love. One is looking for a story for a play; the other is looking for someone to produce his story. All that happens is pretty much in the nature of a battle royal of romance and humor.

An original by M. Coates Webster and adapted to the screen by Harry Clork, it is being directed by Ralph Murphy, whose last effort was "Florida Special."

Opposite Miss Nolan is Michael Whelan, a fixture in such pictures as "Poor Little Rich Girl," "White Fang" and "Sing Baby Sing," who occupies the role of the harassed author. While practically all the important action revolves around this pair, the natural comedy content also brings Richard (Skeets) Gallagher and Cliff Edwards into the picture in characteristic parts. The supporting cast includes another newcomer, Gerald Oliver Smith, noted on the stage for his interpretations of silly Englishman characters, but is generally made up of familiar screen players, among whom are Marjorie Gateson, Nigel Bruce, Ferdinand Gottschalk, Chic Sale, Rollo Lloyd, Peggy Shannon and Richard Carle.

The locales are New York and rural Connecticut and the story is being given the benefit of production backgrounds higher than the usual grade.

Wild Brian Kent

(20th Century-Fox-Principal)

Outdoor Dramatic Romance

This production will picturize the romance, drama, comedy, exciting action and spectacle of one of Harold Bell Wright's most widely read novels, "The Re-Creation of Brian Kent." Wright's prestige, that of the novel and odd departures that have been made in casting assignments loom as an acceptable basis for a sound exploitation campaign.

A story of a man's regeneration, adaptation was affected by James Gruen and the screen play was prepared by Earle Snell and Don Swift, both of whom have long been associated with the producer, Sol Lesser. Direction is by Howard Bretherton, maker of many thrill subjects, including several of the recent "Hopalong Cassidy" series.

Lesser, who has met with considerable success in producing the Wright and Zane Grey stories, is presenting in the leading roles two players not previously identified with outdoor action entertainment. For the hero and title character he chose Ralph Bellamy, whose identity is well known, and the heroine is Mae Clarke, whose previous association with pictures generally was in more sophisticated romance drama or comedy roles. Helen Lowell is included, and Stanley Andrews, Lew Kelly, Eddie Chandler, Richard Alexander and Jack Duffy also are included.

The showmanship intent back of this, and an angle which Lesser hopes exhibitors will recognize, is that while it permits a concentration on exploiting the Wright and story repute, it also makes possible the talking about fresh new faces and personalities in a yarn that has demonstrated its entertainment and commercial value.

Without Orders

(RKO Radio)

Drama

"Without Orders" was taken from a story by Peter B. Kyne which appeared in Collier's several months ago. It deals with safety in commercial aviation. As there is an expected romantic counterpart to the basic drama, treatment accorded the idea in the screen play is somewhat different from that of most aviation pictures. It is not essentially a thriller, though much of that quality is included in action and situations. The story seeks to play up the responsibility of airline operators and pilots for the safety of their patrons. As such, it seems that the film will command the attention and exploitation cooperation of airline operators, rather than antagonizing them as some previous similar pictures have. In the leading roles the production teams Robert Armstrong and Sally Eilers, previously co-featured in "Remember Last Night" and "She Made Her Bed." Both have appeared in other important pictures, Miss Eilers notably in "Bad Girl" and Armstrong in "The Ex Mrs. Bradford."

Secondary but prominent roles are filled by Frances Sage, who made her screen debut as the eloping daughter in "The Witness Chair," and Vinton Haworth, a newcomer who has unique exploitation value in that he was the Jack Arnold in the Myrt and Marge radio broadcast programs. The cast is not large, but two other important players are Ward Bond and Arthur Loft.

The screen play was prepared by J. Robert Bren, credited with "High Tension," "High Voltage" and "Looking for Trouble," and Edmund L. Hartman. Louis Friedlander, who is directing, accounted for "Parole," "The Raven" and "Stormy." Cliff Reid is producing.

God's Country and the Woman

(Warner)

Dramatic Romance

This is a story of romance and drama in the lumber camps, suggested by the James Oliver Curwood novel of the same title. Made on location in the logging country of the Pacific Northwest, it will be presented in color. In gist, it is an action picture. Brother is pitted against brother. One is determined that his feminine rival shall be eliminated. The other, and this gives occasion for the romantic contrast, is equally determined that justice and human rights shall be maintained.

The value of the entertainment which the film is expected to provide from a commercial viewpoint is not solely dependent upon the popularity of the type of story or its creators. The important matter of cast seems to have been pretty well attended to, in that there is a liberal mixture of established currently popular screen personalities and oldtimers not seen for some time in domestic production.

George Brent is starred. Robert Barrat, presently in "Last of the Mohicans," is his brother and perpetrator of the plot to ruin the woman, Beverly Roberts. Alan Hale and Barton MacLane have parts admirably suited to their screen talents, and as the production returns to the screen such notables as El Brendel and Roscoe Ates, it also provides opportunity in the dramatic action for such figures as Joseph King, Billy Bevan, Bert Roach, Addison Richards, Joseph Chehan, Herbert Rawlinson, Victor Potel, Susan Fleming, Mary Treen and Eily Malyon.

Norman Reilly Raine, Peter Milne and Charles Beldon are credited with adapting the story suggested by Curwood's work. To insure that the thrill action, drama and romance should be preserved, William Keighley, maker of "Bullets and Ballots," codirector of "Green Pastures" and director of "G Men," was assigned to direct the film.

A Fool for Blondes

(Universal)

Action Drama

Many worthy exploitation elements are to be found in this forthcoming production. The story it tells, a steel mill yarn, is adapted from a recent Liberty Magazine serial. This fact always constitutes a valuable box office factor, inasmuch as the theme is familiar to many and there is a natural desire to see how it was treated and brought to screen realism. A rough, rugged, he-man dramatic romance, in which two men battle for professional and romantic supremacy, it stars Victor McLaglen, one of the screen's foremost interpreters of vigorous knock-'em-about drama, natural rowdy comedy and exciting action.

With McLaglen featured, the theme is what is expected. He is a tough guy who causes plenty of trouble for himself and everyone who comes in contact with him. Forceful and dynamic, he is the central figure in all the rough and ready boisterous romance, drama, comedy and excitement. Determined to be the top guy, he makes himself the top guy, though there are occasions when he must swallow bitter medicine.

While the Academy Award winning star for "The Informer" stands out as the name highlight, the roster of supporting players should not be considered lightly. Binnie Barnes, now in "Last of the Mohicans," is the girl in the case who is the cause of the inimical rivalry between McLaglen and William Hall, who had his first big screen part in "Postal Inspector." For human interest the picture has hero-worshiping Billy Burrud as the boy whose life the star saves. Comedy is taken care of by Henry Armetta and Adrian Rosley. Others in roles incidental to the thematic elements are Jean Dixon, Edward Norris, Ann Preston, Zeni Vatori, Charles Wilson, Selmar Jackson and Etta McDaniel.

The screen play is credited to Owen Francis and Lewis R. Foster. Direction is in the hands of John Blystone, maker of "Tol'able David" and the more recent "County Chairman" and "Bad Boy."

Wedding Present

(Paramount - Schulberg)

Comedy-Romance

The title, personalities in the cast and story quality are the exploitation dependables of this production. The first picture to be made by B. P. Schulberg under his new "debut" with Paramount, the veteran producer made sure that those values would be incorporated best to serve exhibitor requirements.

The motivating story, adapted from a Paul Gallico Saturday Evening Post yarn, is bright and gay, full of action, has considerable comedy content, intriguing romance, and is topped off by a brand new climax idea.

In lead roles it presents Cary Grant and Joan Bennett, first teamed by Walter Wanger in "Big Brown Eyes," backed by a well above average support, which includes the familiar George Bancroft, Conrad Nagel, Gene Lockhart, William Demarest, Inez Courtney, Edward Brophy, Purnell Pratt, Douglas Wood, George Meeker, Lois Wilson and Mary Forbes. Direction is by Richard Wallace.

In gist the story concerns two persons who can't get along with or without each other. Between trying to fulfill their jobs as newspaper folk, deciding whether or not they should get married, meanwhile playing all sorts of pranks on each other, Grant drives Miss Bennett into Conrad Nagel's arms. But for a wedding present Grant sends her everything from fire engines, laundry wagons and hearses to an ambulance. In the last-named labeled "Insane Asylum," they ride away to see whether they can make a go of living a normal life.

Daddy and I

(RKO Radio)

Comedy-Romance

This production has been scenarized from a published novel of the same title by Gertrude Purcell associated in the adaptation of such stories as "Love Before Breakfast" and "If You Could Only Cook." In content it's comedy romance. It tells of a young girl, playing Cupid, trying to make a matrimonial match for her father. Her well meant efforts result in hilarious complications for herself, her father, the woman she chose to make her new mother, and many other principals.

Though Herbert Marshall, now in "Girl's Dormitory" is the lead name, Anne Shirley is the heroine. Her first modern part, it removes her from the old fashioned type of picture and reveals her as an uptodate high school miss. While it is the first time that Marshall and Miss Shirley have been teamed, the picture will mark the third in which Marshall and the third important figure, Gertrude Michael, have been principals. The other two were "Till We Meet Again" and "Forgotten Faces." A fourth principal is Margot Grahame, remembered for "The Informer" and "The Arizonian" as well as for appearances in several British pictures.

Supporting players listed are Clara Blandick, now in "In His Steps," the veteran character actor, Richard Carle, Frank Coghlan, Jr., formerly known as Junior Coghlan, Helen Parrish, Maxine Jennings and Willie Best.

The production is in the hands of Zion Myers, credited with "Two in the Dark" and "Old Man Rhythm." David Burton, maker of "Princess O'Hara" and "Let's Fall in Love," is the director.

Under Your Spell

(20th Century - Fox)

Comedy-Romance With Music

In returning to the screen Lawrence Tibbett, last seen in "Metropolitan," the producers undoubtedly wisely from a showmanship viewpoint have elected to provide the noted baritone with a preponderance of modern songs and but one or two operatic or classical airs. Equally wisely they have chosen numbers prepared by Howard Dietz and Arthur Schwartz, who accounted for the musical content of "The Little Show" and "The Band Wagon." Furthermore, they caused a comedy vehicle to be written, and made sure there were important parts in it for the accomplished funsters, Gregory Ratoff and Arthur Treacher. As that story goes, it's about a famous opera star pushed around by avaricious managers, publicity agents, admiring women, advertising and endorsement tieup solicitors and sundry others. To get away from it all he hies for the tall timbers, where mountain music is the thing appreciated only to discover after a series of hectic and, sometimes embarrassing, complications that there's a girl who means so much to him she's worth enduring all the hurly burly of living in the spotlight's fierce glare.

A seemingly fast moving, colorful and interesting yarn, radically differing from anything in which Tibbett previously has appeared, it is quite evident that the purpose of the forthcoming film is to give the star a popularity with the masses rather than the specializing classes. While the last-named will not be completely ignored, the character of the story and its music, together with the inclusion of Wendy Barrie, previously seen in Paramount and 20th Century-Fox features, Ratoff and Treacher, and Berton Churchill, Jed Prouty, Claudia Coleman and the newcomer Gregory Gaye who will be seen in Dodsworth," seems to point directly to giving showmen screen merchandise of a dominatingly popular appeal.

Stolen Holiday

(Warner)

Topical Dramatic Romance

Production of this feature foreshadows desirable audience entertainment and, important from an exhibitor viewpoint, possibilities for exploitation of an effective variety. In theme the story is dramatic romance. In a fresh style it establishes its heroine as a world fashion arbiter, causes her to become involved in a financial swindle that scandalizes Europe and, following a tragedy that frees her of any implications, takes her into the arms of the man she loves.

Production details which, against elaborate settings, gown Kay Francis, late star of "Give Me Your Heart" and "The White Angel," in ultra modern styles, and as she goes about her business of supervising the creation of fashions that will be copied all over the world, substantiating effects promise a veritable orgy of fashion shows, a theatric-commercial quality which everyone knows is pointedly appealing to women.

Responsibility for the story to accompany produtcion details was intrusted to scenarist Casey Robinson and director Michael Curtiz, a pair that collaborated on the making of the forthcoming "Charge of the Light Brigade." The photography is by Sidney Hickox, who has been behind the camera in many previous Kay Francis films. Gowns, all in the 1937 mode, were design by Orry-Kelly.

The cast supporting Miss Francis is a roster of players not to be considered lightly. In the principal roles it includes Claude Rains, currently in "Anthony Adverse," Ian Hunter, featured in "To Mary, with Love" and "The Devil Is a Sissy," and Alison Skipworth. The supporting group, all of whom at one time or another are importantly involved in the story, include Walter Kingsford, Alexander D'Arcy, a newcoming European player, Frank Reicher, Frank Conroy, Betty Lawford, Kathleen Howard, Robert Strange and Egon Brecher.

The President's Mystery

(Republic)

Mystery

This story concerns no president of the United States. Nor is it a political story, though certain audience segments may read pointed propaganda favoring a modern social-economic political philosophy as the basis of several situations. Basically, it is a mystery story. A man, grown tired of his occupation as a lobbying corporation attorney, winds up his affairs, planning to retire to a life of rest. After his disappearance his wife is killed and the husband is suspected. In the meantime, during which he has met a freshly inspiring girl, he comes upon a depression ridden community. He organizes the hopeless workers into a profitably cooperative movement. Search for the supposed murderer by the police, and investigation by old line packing companies experiencing intensive business competition entailed by the cooperative lead to the man. But the efforts of the workers establish his innocence and he remains to lead them in the fight against vested monopolistic interests.

It is to be noted, particularly from an exploitation viewpoint, that the Liberty magazine story upon which the production is based is said to have been conceived by Franklin D. Roosevelt. A notable writing group, Rupert Hughes, Samuel Hopkins Adams, Anthony Abbot, Rita Weiman, S. S. Van Dine and John Erskine, a combination of fiction, political and mystery authors, are named as having completed it. The screen transition was effected by Lester Cole and Nathaneal West.

To bring the story to screen realism, an above average talent and name value cast has been selected. Names listed are Henry Wilcoxon, Betty Furness, Sidney Blackmer, Evelyn Brent, Barnett Parker, Mel Buick, Wade Boteler, John Wray, Guy Usher, Robert E. Homans, Si Jenks and Arthur Aylesworth.

Production is being directed by Phil Rosen, and Hugo Riesenfeld is listed as having supervised the musical accompaniment.

CHARLES R. ROGERS EXECUTIVE PRODUCER

WON'T CHANGE OFFER FOR GB, SAY SCHENCKS

Chairman of 20th Century-Fox Confirms Report One of the Ostrers Wants New Terms

Reports cabled from London this week that the Twentieth Century-Fox, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer deal with Gaumont British may be indefinitely postponed because of the insistence of one of the Ostrer brothers that the three-way stock purchase offer be rewritten on different and presumably more favorable terms, have been partially confirmed by Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the Twentieth Century-Fox board.

"We heard today that one of the Ostrers is insisting upon re-trading the terms of the deal. We have made our offer and are standing by it. I do not propose to change the terms," Mr. Schenck said to the press on Tuesday by telephone from his bed at Mt. Sinai Hospital, New York, where he was confined for study of a liver disorder. The executive did not specify whether Mark or Isidore Ostrer was responsible for the rumored change.

Mr. Schenck revealed that under the terms by which the Fox holdings in Gaumont were purchased in 1929, neither party can sell without the consent of the other. In the light of this clause, reports from London that British interests have bid for the Ostrer holdings would indicate that the situation has reached an impasse. Nicholas M. Schenck, president of Loew's, Inc., the third party to the deal, supported in full his brother's stand on the status of the deal and added "A deal was made and we are waiting to see if it will go through as arranged.

Conflicting reports in London, according to wireless dispatches to the New York Times Wednesday, concerning the Twentieth Century-Fox-MGM-Gaumont British deal, resulted in a further slump in the price of shares of Gaumont British Pictures in the City.

"British investors are awaiting the return from the United States of the men who are representing the British interests in the proposed deal, and at that time," the dispatch continued, "it is expected that Mark Ostrer will make an authoritative statement concerning the agreement, if any." Until then, London feels that the positions of the negotiations will remain obscure even though it appears the negotiations still are going forward but with several matters under discussion, The Times added.

Rumors published on Saturday and Monday in London by the financial editor of the Daily Mail declared that the deal had fallen through and that a cable ending negotiations had been sent to New York last week. Later news stories said that Gaumont officials had indicated that Mark Ostrer would issue a statement "concerning negotiations between GB and interested parties" some time this week.

New Maxwell Bid Reported

The London cables further indicated that the shift in the situation was traceable to a renewal of offers for Gaumont British by British interests. One story was that John Maxwell, of British International Pictures, who had made at least one earlier bid for the company, now presented a more substantial offer.

A secondary report, discounted in more conservative quarters, insisted that a group composed of Lord Portal, C. M. Woolf of General Film Distributors, Ltd., and Alexander Korda of London Films have made an offer in competition with Mr. Maxwell's.

A third rumor, denied by Mr. Schenck, was that 20th Century-Fox might sell its holdings in Gaumont British instead of endeavoring to purchase enough additional shares to secure management control through the Metropolis and Bradford Trust, which controls 57 per cent of the outstanding GB stock.

Mr. Schenck in his telephone interview confirmed a report that Mr. Maxwell recently had made an offer to purchase 20th Century-Fox's interest in Metropolis and Bradford. That offer was declined and will continue to be. "We are not selling," was Mr. Schenck's dismissal of the possibility.

Complication Long Rumored

Opposition to the original three-way deal and rumors in motion picture circles in London that it would not be consummated have been current in the English capital since word first was flashed early in July that a tentative basis of purchase had been reached by Mr. Schenck, his brother Nicholas M. Schenck and Isidor Ostrer.

All three parties to the deal had issued denials that negotiations had struck a snag. Last week, when Mr. Schenck returned from London where he had spent several weeks conferring on details of the deal, he told reporters that the distribution machinery planned by the three companies would be ready to start functioning on January 2, 1937, and that GB pictures would be handled in this country by MGM and Fox with the start of the new selling season next spring.

He had said that agreement in principle was complete and that the legal departments of the three companies were drafting the contracts so that the merger of interests could become effective on the first of the year. The points in the original agreement had not been "fundamentally changed," he had emphasized, at that time.

Air Film Shipments Show Large Increase

Air express shipments of production films and newsreel negatives and prints for the first six months of 1936 increased 130 per cent over the first half of last year, according to a report just issued by Air Express Division of Railway Express Agency. In July alone this year, over 6,500 film shipments were handled.

Post Office Bans Ads on Bank Night

Post Office Department officials in Washington are making a determined drive against mail advertising of theatre Bank Nights and have issued hundreds of orders barring issues of publications carrying advertisements or news items of such drawings. Exhibitors who suffer from competition in the field have been invited to file complaints with the department in Washington, where their local postmasters have failed to take action.

Under the regulations of the Post Office Department, all material relative to lotteries is unmailable and decision as to what constitutes a lottery rests with the department and may be challenged only in a Federal court.

Kennedy in London On Case of Scotch

Joseph P. Kennedy's presence in London may be puzzling to the English trade press, but there is no mystery about his visit. He is the head of Somerset Importers, Ltd., distributors in America for whiskies and wines, including Dewar's Ne Plus Ultra. Grover Whalen, former New York police commissioner, is the head of Schenley Distributors, Inc., also a major liquor distributor in America. This summer Mr. Whalen succeeded in taking away from Mr. Kennedy the Dewar franchise.

Mr. Kennedy was summering at Cape Cod at the time and immediately cancelled several weekend parties and other arrangements to hurry to London in an effort to recoup the loss. Ted O'Leary, with FBO and Pathe during the Kennedy regimes and now with Somerset, is in London also.

Modern Theatre Is Opened In Rio de Janeiro by MGM

The Cine Metro, modern de luxe theatre in Rio de Janeiro, was opened this week by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer with a gala showing of "Mutiny on the Bounty." The house is the first in the city to have upholstered seats and air conditioning.

William Melniker, in charge of all MGM theatres outside the United States and Canada, was present at the opening. He is now en route to Montevideo for the opening of another house there October 15.

The picture will be an even greater box-office factor than the play!

IN THE BRITISH STUDIOS

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

Pinewood Opens

Officially inaugurating the new Pinewood Studios at Iver, Bucks, British & Dominions on Monday started production there on "A Man with Your Voice," the first film to be shot in its entirety at this fine new plant, of which Capt. Richard Norton of B & D is managing director. Pinewood space previously was used by Herbert Wilcox for continuation of "London Melody," moved there from BIP, Elstree, on September 13th, but that picture was more than a quarter shot before it got to Iver.

The new B & D picture is being produced by Jack Raymond, and directed by Carrol Reed, who is also joint author, with Anthony Kimmins.

Brought from Hollywood for the leading parts are Ricardo Cortez and Sally Eilers.

Pinewood is built in the beautiful parklands belonging to a mansion once the residence of Colonel Grant Morden. The mansion now provides office facilities and a club for executives and is being developed as a country club enterprise more or less independent of the studio.

An eight-stage studio, of which four are completed and a fifth on the point of completion, Pinewood has several points of novelty in construction and layout. One of the most striking is the overhead lighting system, which has completely abolished cables from the floor. A new sound-proofing material is used for the walls, after special testing by the National Physical Laboratory, and the floor is also sound-proof, even against footsteps. Remote control desks are used for starting cameras, sound equipment, warning lights and so forth and for locking entrances, switching off telephones and for the purpose of isolating floors. A weather protection in moving sets into floors is provided by a glass canopy over some of the gangways between buildings.

Pinewood, apart from being the production center for B & D, Herbert Wilcox Productions and British National, will be in full activity as a service studio before the end of the year.

British Lion in Truth

The British Lion studio at Beaconsfield is going to look just like that very shortly. One of the scenes in the Sandy Powell "Playing the Game" shows that comedian as a theatre call-boy who has the pleasant job of capturing an escaped lion, and an authentic example of the species is already on requisition. Herbert Smith, personally directing the picture, recently has shot scenes at a Labor Exchange; before it is finished, "Playing the Game," which also pictures in detail the other great British institutions, football and the football betting pools, will have almost documentary value as a transcript of the life of the British masses.

Wallace Ford as powder-monkey prepares Grace Bradley for battle, before the taking of a scene in the Gaumont-British "O. H. M. S."

Hollywood Bound

It is the general expectation at the Warner-First National studio at Teddington that Chili Bouchier, now playing opposite Roland Young in "Tzigane," is scheduled for a Warner Hollywood contract. Confirmation is said to wait on approval of her work in this picture, and the floor opinion is that she has done exceptionally good work as a gipsy who develops socially to the degree indicated by addiction to polo and table tennis.

Expected at Teddington from Hollywood are George E. Stone, definitely scheduled for the next Max Miller picture, and Zasu Pitts, to play with Claude Hulbert. Expected there during the next twelve months, as a result of the general authority which Irving Asher has to draw on Warner American contract artists, are Joan Blondell, George Brent, Hugh Herbert, Glenda Farrell, Frank McHugh, Ross Alexander, June Travis, Anita Louise and Jean Muir.

This development goes with the further enlargement of the Warner British plant by a sound floor 133 by 100 feet and executive offices 135 by 40 feet, the most recent stage of a process of enlargement and modernization which has been continuous since Warner bought outright, in 1934, this plant which it first occupied in 1931.

Irving Asher, continuously in charge of Warner production interests in England since the beginning, is equipped to take full advantage of the opportunity now presented to make pictures for Warner American release. He already has sent some very good players from Teddington to Hollywood, including Ian Hunter, Errol Flynn, Sybil Jason and Patric Knowles.

Tauber Film

Walter Forde has finished direction of the Richard Tauber-Diana Napier "Land without Music" from the Oscar Straus operetta, and the picture is in the cutting room. It has a very strong cast. Schnozzle Durante is seen in the part of a traveling American in Europe in stage-coach days, and June Clyde, Esme Percy and George Hayes also are in the list.

Itemized

Criterion's "Ten Thousand Windows" has been retitled "Crime over London." . . . Sir Cedric Hardwicke, back from Hollywood, began in "King Solomon's Mines" for G-B. . . . "Man in the Mirror" was completed at J. H. Studios, Elstree, and all Julius Hagen's three studios are to be empty for two weeks. . . . Dela Films finished the Bebe Daniels-Ben Lyon "Murder in the Stalls" at Beaconsfield. . . . Rene Ray is to play opposite Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., in Criterion's £200,000 picture of the Scottish border, directed by Tay Garnett. Alan Hale is here from Hollywood for the film.

Building the Mill

At Sound City, Shepperton, the finishing touches are being put to a very elaborate exterior set for adaptation of the George Eliot "Mill on the Floss," in which Frank Lawton and Virginia Hopper are starring for John Clein Pictures. Its center piece is an old English mill, flanked by cottages, as the main feature of a 400 foot stretch of river frontage, on which much of the most important action is placed.

A cast of very useful caliber is being assembled for this picture. It already includes Fay Compton, Geraldine FitzGerald, Mary Clare, Athene Seyler, Sam Livesey and Felix Aylmer.

Also in progress at Sound City is "Such is Life," another for distribution by National Provincial. Randall Faye is directing this story of a youthful Australian millionaire who buys restaurants and such things in passing. Gene Gerrard, Claude Dampier, Jean Colin and Eve Gray have the chief parts.

MGM Plans "Romeo" Contest

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has inaugurated an essay contest based upon the story of "Romeo and Juliet" for which two grand prizes of trips to Shakespeare's birthplace, Stratford-on-Avon, England, will be awarded. Contestants will be divided into two groups, one comprising students and the other to be composed of adult members of clubs and study groups.

New Italian Unit Formed

With the participation of American interests, a new Italian company capitalized at approximately $8,000,000 has been formed for motion picture production, according to a report to the Commerce Department from Rome. Production will not begin until next spring.

UNIFORMITY SOUGHT IN THEATRE REPRODUCTION

But Equipment Folk Say Problem Lies in Precision, Not in a Uniform Physical Design

Standardization of sound reproduction in all theatres of the world is the aim of studio sound technicians of Hollywood. With this idea in view, they have initiated a movement to influence major equipment manufacturers to make reproducers as nearly identical in all vital respects as possible.

The general objective of the new effort, according to Motion Picture Daily, appears to be a desire to have the productions of each producer projected and reproduced to the best advantage in all theatres, regardless of the make of sound equipment used in the theatre. Hollywood's studio technicians, whose duties are the development of sound recording, are said to be of the opinion that standard high quality reproduction can be assured only when the two major types of equipment—RCA and Western Electric—possess the same or equal reproducing refinements.

Investigations in the theatre equipment field, made independently, indicate that there is a feeling that it undoubtedly would be beneficial to have all reproducing equipments alike and each capable of the same quality of reproduction, but that the industry most certainly is not organized for that.

Moreover, the only really important difference in the major equipments is said to lie in the precision attained in the design, not in the physical characteristics of the design. Uniformity in design is said not to be needed, observers claiming to have heard nobody assert that one type of recording is uniformly better on one certain make of equipment than on another. Reproduction, it is claimed, varies considerably from theatre to theatre because of old or inexpensive equipments, inadequate maintenance throughout the whole projection-sound system, or because of house deficiencies.

Progress in Recording

Regardless, currency is given report that one important consideration in the studio technicians' current activities in the field of sound reproduction is one which has developed from the rapid forward strides which have been and are being made in the technique of sound recording at the studio. Constantly improving sound and effects are being captured, yet equipment in use in thousands of theatres is said to be incapable of taking it off for the benefit of the audiences for which it is intended, the studio men assert. Their complaint is that the refinements in recording technique are being wasted and will continue to be until every important theatre, regardless of the make of its reproducing equipment, has equal facilities for the projection of sound.

The Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences in Hollywood is represented as furthering the work for uniform sound results in the theatre in several significant ways. Classes in sound recording are sponsored by the Council which not only make available to the student technicians all or most of the refinements in recording as they are developed in the studios, but also tend to school the film colony's sound recorders in identical basic principles of their craft. The result would seem to be advanced recording of equal or similar merit in all studios.

WAITING FOR MAIL, QUIETED BY FILMS

The most patient and best humored waiting public is that in a modern postoffice in Berlin, according to the German Railroads Information Office. "Wait with pleasure" is the new slogan which is posted in the office and motion pictures are making the idea practicable.

A continuous show of ten minute programs is given during business hours and it has been found that the busiest businessmen have time to watch until the end of the program.

With all of Hollywood's sound recording on a par in its essentials, the obvious remaining objective is to realize comparable, uniform reproduction of Hollywood product in any and all theatres. Hollywood influence in attempting to bring this about already is noticeable, it is claimed.

Adapted to Each System

With the introduction several years ago of Western Electric's "Wide Range" and RCA Photophone's "High Fidelity," studio recorders learned to adapt their improving technique to the advantages peculiar to each system. The results, however, were not entirely satisfactory to studio technicians. They discovered that in aiming their recording for the best reproduction which could be realized on the two individual sets, they were developing a specialized recording technique which resulted in improved sound reproduction only in those theatres which were equipped with either "Wide Range" or "High Fidelity." Theatres with equipment other than these frequently had poorer sound than before when newer recording methods came through their older sound equipment. In the face of their striving for improved sound in the theatres this situation, obviously, spurred the technicians' efforts to obtain uniformity in sound reproduction.

In this drive, the studios themselves have contributed significant suggestions, and even refinements to the new reproducing equipment being introduced now by Erpi and RCA, according to an informed authority.

Developments Cited

Douglas Shearer of MGM is credited with having adapted for commercial use the "Fletcher" horn of two frequency bands and multi-cellular units, which was first demonstrated about three years ago in a transmission of a Stokowski Philadelphia Orchestra concert from Philadelphia to New York. The Fletcher horn originated in the Bell Laboratories, but was not believed practicable at the time for use in theatre reproducing equipment. Mr. Shearer's work in adapting it to this use has been recognized to some extent by RCA, which refers to the horn of this type being used in its new "High Fidelity" equipment as the Shearer horn. The same type of two-way multi-cellular horn is also used in the new "Mirrophonic."

A further note of similarity in new sound equipment appears in the use of the rotary stabilized type of scanner now a part of Mirrophonic. This type of scanner, credited with reducing variations in the speed of the film past the scanning point, has been a part of RCA equipment for the past several years.

Some Hollywood factors claim credit also for the introduction of the new amplifiers which reproduce sound in almost any required volume without distortion. They assert that these came from the laboratories of the manufacturer in answer to Hollywood's insistent demand. Some of the amplifiers still in use in theatres date back to 1928 and the days of the wax record, when true volume was an almost unknown quantity in sound reproduction.

The development of the new reproducers has pleased the Hollywood technicians in at least one very vital respect, according to reports. They assert now that neither Mirrophonic nor the new High Fidelity requires any specialized recording, such as they say was necessary to get maximum results from "Wide Range" and the earlier "High Fidelity." The result is that sound is not only better than it was in theatres using the new equipment, but that improvements are also noticeable in theatres having older equipment. The last result they trace, of course, to advances in recording technique.

New Installations

An example of the interest being shown currently in realizing uniform reproduction results is pointed out in the installation of new equipment by M-G-M and Loew's in many of the houses in which "The Great Ziegfeld" was opened and, now, in all of the theatres in which "Romeo and Juliet" is being roadshown. These installations are being made under the direct supervision of Mr. Shearer and Lester B. Isaac, director of sound and projection for the Loew circuit. The two wrestled with tone control problems encountered in the individual roadshow houses, as well as supervising the installations. Both RCA and Erpi equipment is used, further suggesting the ambition to encourage uniformity in reproducers. Installations include the Astor, New York; Nixon, Pittsburgh; Maryland, Baltimore; His Majesty's, Montreal; National, Washington; Colonial, Boston; Chestnut, Philadelphia; American, St. Louis; Erlanger, Buffalo; Royal Alexandria, Toronto; Hanna, Cleveland; Cass, Detroit; Geary, San Francisco; Carthay Circle, Los Angeles, and Erlanger, Chicago.

The entire Loew circuit is to be re-equipped in the near future and present indications, according to company officials, are that both RCA and Erpi installations will be made.

General Starts as National Company

Formation of General Pictures, a new national producing and distributing company, was made known in New York this week by Robert E. Welsh, who was a producer for Monogram for two years and more recently has been with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Mr. Welsh is vice-president in charge of production for General Pictures.

Fenn Kimball, Los Angeles financier, is president of the new company. Mr. Kimball is in Manhattan to establish offices of the company and will appoint a sales manager before he returns to Hollywood.

The company plans to produce 24 pictures during the new season, with the first release planned for about November 1. Production will be started at the RKO Pathe studio immediately upon Mr. Welsh's arrival in California, he said. Distribution is to be partly through General's own exchanges which it plans to open in a number of key cities and through franchise in others. Mr. Welsh left for California Tuesday.

'Film Daily' Appoints Bahn Managing Editor

Chester B. Bahn this week became managing editor of The Film Daily. The former motion picture critic of the Syracuse, N. Y., Herald succeeds Don Carle Gillette, who resigns after seven years to produce stage plays, starting with "In the Bag."

John W. Alicoate, Film Daily publisher, gave the departing and the incoming managing editors a luncheon at the Cinema Club on Wednesday.

French Prize Picture Opens

"La Kermesse Heroique," the French film awarded the gold medal at the Venice International Exposition for 1936, was given its American premiere on Tuesday evening when it was offered as the opening attraction of the new Filmarte theatre on 58th Street, New York. A review of the production will appear in next week's issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

Greenwood Off to England; To Merge Theatre Units

W. E. Greenwood, British exhibitor who sailed for London last week, said prior to his departure that the five theatre companies in which he is interested were about to be consolidated in one new corporation to be known as the Majestic Theatres Corporation, Ltd. Mr. Greenwood arrived, via Quebec, on June 9 and, during his stay, covered 11,500 miles by car, the itinerary including visits to the studios in Hollywood.

"I thought that there were more theatres in proportion to the population here than in England," he said, "but your prices of admission are much cheaper than ours and there is less new construction here than in England."

Mulvey, Rose on Goldwyn Board

James Mulvey has been elected vice-president of Goldwyn Productions and subsidiaries, and reelected to the board of directors. David Rose, retired Kansas City manufacturer, was elected a vice-president and director. He will act as a financial adviser, with headquarters on the coast. Mr. Mulvey will return to New York from Hollywood in two weeks.

Denver Groups Move Offices

Headquarters of two theatre groups in Denver have been moved. Fox Intermountain division has moved into new offices in the Paramount theatre building from the Isis theatre, and Civic Theatres, operated by A. P. Archer and Joe Dekker, have moved from the Egyptian theatre in north Denver to the Santa Fe theatre building.

Batcheller Sets Eight Titles

George R. Batcheller, producer of Chesterfield pictures, has revealed the eight titles which will complete his season's program. They are "Fugitive From Justice," "House of Secrets," "Dancing in the Dark," "The Adorable Cheat," "Betrayed," "Beauty Racket," "Alone," and "Red Lights Ahead."

MacLean Staff Complete

Douglas MacLean Production has completed its staff and has moved into Pathe Studio in Hollywood. Jules Schermer has been appointed executive assistant to Mr. MacLean; Emile deRuelle, production manager; Jack Bellamy, chief accountant, and Eleanor Lauzon has been appointed to the production staff.

Standard Gets Franchise

A contract has been closed between Ben S. Cohen, president of Burroughs-Tarzan, and Joe Silverman of Standard Film of Kansas City and Omaha for the latter to distribute the former's product in Western Missouri, Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska. Offices have been opened in Omaha and in Kansas City.

Columbia Appoints Two

William C. Lengel, Columbia eastern story editor, has appointed Michel Kraike as story scout for the New York office and Eve Ettinger head of the reading department. Mr. Kraike was assistant to Katherine Brown at Selznick-International.

MAJORS ARE DISCUSSING COPYRIGHT UNION ENTRY

Kilroe Proposes U. S. Become Member If Concessions Desired by Industry Are Made

Attorneys of large companies, comprising the copyright committee of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, will meet next week to take action on a recommendation that Congress be asked to make the United States a member of the International Copyright Union. The recommendation was made in a report submitted to the committee this week by Edward P. Kilroe, chairman, who returned recently from a seven weeks trip abroad gathering data in connection with the Berne Copyright Committee.

Revisions of the Berne rules which Mr. Kilroe suggested be made before Congress is petitioned, were thoroughly discussed at a two hour session at the MPPDA office in New York, on Monday. The chairman will reduce the analysis to writing and it will be studied by the members before the meeting next week.

The motion picture industry, as the largest user of copyrights in America, is regarded as having the most influential voice in determining the Government's action. Mr. Kilroe in his report expressed the belief that the Berne Committee will revise its rules in accordance with any reasonable representations made by the United States as a condition of its cooperation.

The principal concessions desired by the industry before it recommends American adherence to the Berne Committee involve four major points. The committee at present prohibits the changing of an author's work in any detail after it has been acquired for production, publication or any other purpose. American executives want the right to change purchased material, not only for obvious practical reasons but also because they believe that this right can be contracted for.

The international rules also permit the copyrighting of an oral idea. The American industry will ask that a record of any idea be in existence when the copyright is issued. Copyrights are obtainable on forms or styles of acting under the Berne rules and the American industry is opposed to this.

The final major change desirable to the industry, Mr. Kilroe said, is designation of the person or organization which has the legal right to bring suit for copyright infringement as the author of the copyrighted material. The Berne rules at present permit the producer or director of a picture to be designated the copyright author, rather than the person or concern by whom they are employed.

If these principal changes are made by the international committee there appears to be no doubt that the MPPDA committee will recommend American entry into the Berne Committee, Mr. Kilroe indicated. "It is apparent," he said, "that they want us to join the convention. I believe that they will consent to any reasonable concession."

Attending the session on Monday, in addition to Mr. Kilroe, were: James L. Polk, Paramount; Adolph Schimmil, Universal; Benjamin Pepper of O'Brien, Driscoll & Raftery, representing United Artists; David O. Decker, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; Robert Dan, RKO; Morris Ebenstein, Warner Brothers; and Irving Moross, Columbia.

Jack Springer Dies; New York Exhibitor

Funeral services, attended by 500 New York exchange men and exhibitors were held for Jack W. Springer, late head of the Springer and Cocalis Circuit, at St. Thomas' Church, Mamaroneck, N. Y., Tuesday. Burial was at the Kensico Cemetery and was attended by only members of the family.

Mr. Springer, one of the best known exhibitors in the metropolitan area, died Saturday morning in Polyclinic Hospital of a cerebral hemorrhage following an illness of two days. He was 41 years old and is survived by his mother, Cora A. Springer, and a sister, Mrs. Louis George. He was unmarried.

Born in New York and graduated from New York University in 1914, Mr. Springer was commissioned a second lieutenant and served overseas during the World War. Later, in conjunction with Sam Cocalis, he established an important neighborhood circuit which now numbers more than 60 houses. He also operated a number of houses not in connection with his partner.

NYU's Film Course Will Open This Week

New York University will inaugurate a new series of lectures in its course on motion pictures with the opening of the university this week under the direction of Professor Frederick M. Thrasher, associate professor of education, at its downtown school. The course will consist of two series of lectures, one each Thursday evening, the first group running to February, the second through June.

The screen's contribution to contemporary life will be the basic theme of the course, which will be given with the cooperation of the National Board of Review. Various representative figures in the film business and fields related to it will lecture each week. The opening session will be addressed by Terry Ramsaye, editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, who will speak on "New Trends in the History of the Movies." Louis Nizer, Howard S. Cullman, John S. Martin, Wilton Barrett and Max Fleischer will be among the lecturers during the first half of the course.

Burroughs Changes Distribution

Far West Exchange's franchise for distribution of Burroughs-Tarzan pictures in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland and Seattle has been terminated by mutual consent. Olmstead Stebbins exchanges have taken over the work.

CHANTICLEER CROWED WHEN "F.H." WAS BORN, SAYS WILL C. SMITH

Executive of National Theatre Supply Tells Why Series of Special Tributes Is Planned for the "Richardson Week"

Declares Pioneer Advocate of "Better Projection" Has Merited Respect as "Man Who Is Not Afraid to Fight"

by WILL C. SMITH

Without any wish to minimize the work of many minds—creative and constructive—who have done so much toward the origin and development of the motion picture industry, none have made a greater contribution than F. H. Richardson. For thirty years he has aggressively and relentlessly pioneered in this field, and it is not too much to say that the campaign he has carried on so many years for "Better Projection" has been worth millions of dollars to the industry and of inestimable value to the public.

F. H. RICHARDSON

The work of "F. H." or "Rich," as he is known to thousands of men throughout the world, has not been without much criticism and often with intense opposition. Even those who have always remained his friends have been worried at one time or another by the things "F. H." has said and done. Every organization to which he belonged and many of which he was not a member have been "annoyed" by his efforts, and all too frequently he has been subjected to ridicule, particularly by those who were not always in the best position to form correct judgments. His has been truly the work of a pioneer, opening up new fields, utterly unafraid of the consequences to others and least of all as to what would happen to himself. His friends always felt he was taking them toward the light even though he frequently made them grope in the darkness. These friends, however, continue to retain their admiration for a man to whom "the best was none too good." His opponents, competitors or even enemies, give F. H. the respect that comes to a man who is not afraid to fight and continues to win many of his battles.

Will C. Smith has been closely identified with the motion picture industry for over thirty years, is one of the earliest members of Local 306, the American Projection Society, and the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. At one time he was general manager of the Nicholas Powers Company, afterwards in the supply business, and for some years has been connected with National Theatre Supply Company. At the present time he represents the general office of the National Theatre Supply Company and is at 1560 Broadway.

Friends of Mr. Richardson wishing to participate in the "Richardson Week" Celebration, and all organizations desiring to join in honoring the pioneer of "Better Projection," are requested to write to W. C. Smith, Secretary, "Richardson Week" Honorary Committee, 1560 Broadway, New York City.

F. H. Richardson was born in the little town of Centerville, Iowa, on October 25th, 1866, and it is more than likely that it was about dawn, the chanticleer crowing lustily. This has always been the spirit of "F. H." In his youth he was a pupil of the same school that General John J. Pershing attended, and has some interesting recollections of a man who was also a real fighter. Iowa and other states in that section bred a self-reliant, pioneer type, and the people who were born and lived there developed a sturdy individualism. Self-reliance and courage were more important than money or education. Every man, woman and child had to stand squarely on his own feet if he wished to survive. Out of this environment came F. H. Richardson, and if many of us thought he was wrong in many instances, none of us ever thought he was afraid. Producers, cinematographers, theatre owners, managers, projectionists, manufacturers, dealers, publishers, editors, writers, advertising managers, etc., found that "F. H." was constantly asking embarrassing questions which it was often difficult to answer.

Although Mr. Richardson was one of the earliest members of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers and at one time a Governor, it was by no means easy for him to induce the SMPE to give projection the attention he thought it deserved. He continued, however, persistently to carry on a campaign to get the Society to devote more time to projection, and with the help of others this organization was brought to realize that projection was a highly important but greatly neglected subject. In view of the many activities of Mr. Richardson as a writer and an ardent advocate of "Better Projection," arrangements are now being made to honor him suitably by a "Richardson Week" celebrating his 70th Anniversary on October 25th.

"Richardson Week" will be inaugurated by the American Projection Society with a banquet to be held on Saturday, October 24th, 1936 at the Hotel Pennsylvania, New York City. The International Projector Corporation and the National Theatre Supply Company will give a luncheon in honor of Mr. Richardson on Tuesday, October 27th, and the staff of the QUIGLEY PUBLICATIONS will follow later in the week with a luncheon at which Mr. Richardson will also be the guest of honor.

The International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Motion Picture Machine Operators, the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, the Projectionist Guild of England, and other organizations in this field will be asked to cooperate. It is also proposed to hold a historical exhibition of old models of projector mechanisms for five days in the Hotel Pennsylvania.

RKO Team Wins Ball Title and Quigley Cup

The RKO team in the Motion Picture Baseball League was declared the winner of the 1936 championship this week and will be awarded the Quigley trophy as the result of its 11-5 victory over the Skouras team. The Music Hall team won the Billboard trophy for the greatest number of games won, RKO took the League President's Cup for the second highest total of games won, and Consolidated won the Variety trophy for the highest total of runs. The officers and managers of the league teams decided that the Music Hall be declared the champion over the regular season, although it was unable to participate in the playoffs.

Police Again Seize Print of "Ecstasy"

In face of an order by Circuit Court Judge Ray Cowan in Kansas City temporarily restraining the city from interfering with the exhibition of "Ecstasy," the city police have arrested Breckenridge Fagin and Robert F. Lakenan, Jr., of the Royal theatre, for showing the picture. The police confiscated the print and the two exhibitors are out on $500 bail, pending hearing of the case.

CALLING OF DAN MATTHEWS: Richard Arlen, Charlotte Wynters—Good box office and much favorable comment for this picture. Better than some so called specials and leaves a little for the tax collector. Found this company very fair in business methods and goodwill is always an important asset, especially in the amusement business. Some companies seem absolutely ruthless. Running time, 64 minutes. Played August 5-6.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. Downtown patronage.

MR. DEEDS GOES TO TOWN: Gary Cooper, Jean Arthur—An ace production that more than delighted two slightly better than normal audiences. We were disappointed in the attendance, as the weather was ideal and the production well known. Played September 9-10.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

PRIDE OF THE MARINES: Charles Bickford, Florence Rice—Played this Bargain Day and last chapter of "Flash Gordon." Business was swell. Don't think it would get much by itself. Played August 26.—Kenneth Richardson, Richardson Theatre, Seneca, S. C. Small town patronage.

First National

BLACK FURY: Paul Muni, Karen Morley—Went back and picked this one up. It did average business for Saturday night Played August 29, night.—Kenneth Richardson, Richardson Theatre, Seneca, S. D. Small town patronage.

BULLETS OR BALLOTS: Edward G. Robinson, Joan Blondell—This one makes you wish it were fact instead of fiction. Too bad someone can't get to the bottom of these racket setups as Eddie does in this interesting exposure. Bad box office results spoiled our estimate of this one, unfortunately. Played September 4-5.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

BULLETS OR BALLOTS: Edward G. Robinson, Joan Blondell—A good picture from acting and production standpoint but a trifle far fetched to see Edward G. knocking down twice his weight and size with a flip of his wrist. He is too tough for a little guy. Business was very poor on this one and I attribute it to the fairy tale atmosphere which seems to be a part of Robinson's pictures. Running time, 81 minutes. Played August 23-24.—Mary E. Lind, Ute Theatre, Rifle, Col. Small town patronage.

BULLETS OR BALLOTS: Edward G. Robinson, Joan Blondell—This did a little more than average and entertained. Played August 21-22.—Kenneth Richardson, Richardson Theatre, Seneca, S. C. Small town patronage.

CHINA CLIPPER: Pat O'Brien, Beverly Roberts, Ross Alexander, Humphrey Bogart—Excellent. A very good picture. The cast does great work. The story carries along the development of flying the Pacific. Beverly Roberts has a very pleasing personality and she also can act. I think that the little lady is going places with the right roles. Our audience went for her in a big way and she should be definite box office after she gets known a little more. —A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

GOLDEN ARROW, THE: Bette Davis, George Brent—This picture pleased. It has comedy and was well put together.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

HEARTS DIVIDED: Marion Davies, Dick Powell —Glad it was only booked one day. Business took a licking. Played August 17.—Kenneth Richardson, Richardson Theatre, Seneca, S. C. Small town patronage.

HEARTS DIVIDED: Marion Davies, Dick Powell—Dick Powell should not be billed in picture of this type as it will kill him at any box office. Running time, 68 minutes. Played September 7-9.—E. W. Savage, Palace Theatre, Booneville, Ark. Small town and rural patronage.

WHITE ANGEL, THE: Kay Francis, Ian Hunter —Very good picture of the more serious type. Business very poor, no drawing power. Played August 15-16.—N. E. Frank, Wayland Theatre, Wayland, Mich. Small town patronage.

WHITE ANGEL, THE: Kay Francis—Beautiful picture but no good for small towns. Had this booked for three days but pulled it after the second day. Good thing I did for the company, as they would have only owed me a lot of money. Wish these high guarantee specials would work both ways as the exhibitor would sure like to see a little overage come his way once in a while.—Mary E. Lind, Ute Theatre, Rifle, Col. Small town patronage.

WHITE ANGEL, THE: Kay Francis, Ian Hunter —Very good picture but did not register at the box office. Should not be classed as a special. Running time, 89 minutes. Played August 31-September 2.—E. W. Savage, Palace Theatre, Booneville, Ark. Small town and rural patronage.

Gaumont-British

IT'S LOVE AGAIN: Jessie Matthews, Robert Young—The picture pleased the few who came out to see it. Miss Matthews should have a new story. They have made three and they are almost all alike. —W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

ABSOLUTE QUIET: Lionel Atwill, Irene Hervey—Not much to it but it pleased fairly well. No extra business.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

ABSOLUTE QUIET: Lionel Atwill, Irene Hervey —Not suitable for week end business. Managers should encourage all patrons to see this picture from the beginning. Running time, 68 minutes. Played September 3-5.—E. W. Savage, Palace Theatre, Booneville, Ark. Small town and rural patronage.

ANNA KARENINA: Greta Garbo, Fredric March —Good enough show but it is so highbrow that it is just a flop in a small town like mine and how we get disappointed when it's all over. Use your own judgment as to playing this one. Running time, 10 reels. Played September 6-7.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

DEVIL DOLL, THE: Lionel Barrymore, Maureen O'Sullivan—This seems to be a one night show. We had a half a house the first night and about one-eighth of one the second. They just didn't like it. Running time, 80 minutes. Played September 1-2.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

FURY: Spencer Tracy, Sylvia Sidney—A good dramatic picture. Rather heavy for us. Did not draw very well. It's a good picture of its kind.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

FURY: Spencer Tracy, Sylvia Sidney—Highly dramatic stuff. Should prove good attraction most any place. Well done. Played August 30-31.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

FURY: Spencer Tracy, Sylvia Sidney—A Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer thunderbolt aimed at a deplorably lax lynch law. A most excellent picture and one you must not miss. Played to weekend business and to a nice crowd.—Mrs. E. L. Tait, Lauder Theatre, Mount Forest, Ontario, Canada. Small town patronage.

GREAT ZIEGFELD, THE: William Powell, Myrna Loy, Luise Rainer—To my mind, "The Great Ziegfeld" is without doubt the finest musical picture ever produced. Had any company other than Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer produced it, I seriously doubt if it would have been half as important as it really is. But under the strong manpower of this major company, and with its vast resources, the picture emerges as a musical triumph that will not soon be forgotten. I saw it as a roadshow, and have watched it twice during its engagement here. Actually, it is so big that after seeing it I feel like two cents; that here, in this magnificent production, is reflected a portrayal of a great showman's life in such an ambitious manner that I feel my own life is almost utterly worthless. Those who play it should by all means use the overture, and advertise in advance the time of shows and urge their patrons to see it from the beginning. This is most important. I think everyone who had a hand in the making of the picture, from producer Hunt Stromberg down to the last extra, should forever be proud. And I think every exhibitor who plays it should thank his lucky stars that he has Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer under contract. Running time, 180 minutes. Played September 6-12.—Ralph Cokain, Indiana Theatre, Marion, Ind. General patronage.

KIND LADY: Alice MacMahon, Basil Rathbone—Whoever conceived this conglomeration should be removed from active service for the sake of the millions of film fans who are unfortunate enough to have to sit through it. After one performance, the ushers had a holiday. Too bad, as Metro produces some great pictures. Running time, 78 minutes.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. Downtown patronage.

MURDER IN THE FLEET: Robert Taylor, Jean Parker—Went back and picked this one up. Glad of it. Business above average. Played August 25.—Kenneth Richardson, Richardson Theatre, Seneca, S. C. Small town patronage.

NO MORE LADIES: Joan Crawford, Franchot Tone, Robert Montgomery—This picture proved the biggest box office flop for some time, for no reason whatsoever. It had star value, but was surely wasted on our audience. Does 50 per cent below program picture.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

PURSUIT: Chester Morris, Sally Eilers—OK for Friday and Saturday date. Speed, action and thrills provide good entertainment. Running time, seven reels. Played September 4-5.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

ROBIN HOOD OF EL DORADO, THE: Warner Baxter, Ann Loring, Margo—One of the year's nicest photoplays. Warner Baxter at his best. While the first night's response to this picture was anything but gratifying, the second and third nights picked up astonishingly. The female element thought it extremely brutal in spots but liked it just the same. Played August 24-26.—Mrs. E. L. Tait, Lauder Theatre, Mount Forest, Ontario, Canada. Small town patronage.

SAN FRANCISCO: Clark Gable, Jeanette MacDonald, Spencer Tracy, Jack Holt—This is fine from every standpoint. Played September 7-8.—Kenneth Richardson, Richardson Theatre, Seneca, S. C. Small town patronage.

SAN FRANCISCO: Clark Gable, Jeanette MacDonald, Spencer Tracy, Jack Holt—Lavish. Stunning. The utmost in cinema entertainment. The earthquake scene is the finest conception ever accomplished and the voice of Jeanette MacDonald positively thrilled. We played this while it was playing its eighth consecutive week at Loew's, Toronto, and set a new house record. Truly one of the greatest pictures of all time.—Mrs. E. L. Tait, Lauder Theatre, Mount Forest, Ontario, Canada. Small town patronage.

SPEED: James Stewart, Wendy Barrie—Plenty of comedy and action in this one. It pleased and we did extra business.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

SPEED: James Stewart, Wendy Barrie—Good program picture. Suitable for midweek or weekend business. Running time, 70 minutes. Played September 10-22.—E. W. Savage, Palace Theatre, Booneville, Ark. Small town and rural patronage.

TOUGH GUY, THE: Jackie Cooper—Jackie seems to be growing fast but this did not hurt the drawing power of the picture. An exciting and entertaining picture of a boy and his dog, "Rin Tin Tin, Jr." Saturday night audience well pleased, with almost double the amount of kiddies turning out. Played September 5.—John J. Metzger, Oriental Theatre, Beaver City, Neb. Small town patronage.

WIFE VS. SECRETARY: Clark Gable, Myrna Loy, Jean Harlow—Good picture. Fair business.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

WIFE VERSUS SECRETARY: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow, Myrna Loy—This picture did not live up to our expectations as far as box office value is concerned. But that doesn't mean to say it isn't good. On the contrary, the picture is good and pleased all who saw it. Played August 10-12.—Mrs. E. L. Tait, Lauder Theatre, Mount Forest, Ontario, Canada. Small town patronage.

Paramount

DESERT GOLD: Larry Crabbe, Marsha Hunt—Very good and so was business. Played August 22.—Kenneth Richardson, Richardson Theatre, Seneca, S. C. Small town patronage.

HANDS ACROSS THE TABLE: Carole Lombard, Fred MacMurray—A really delightful performance which drew average business and pleased everyone. Played September 5.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

PRINCESS COMES ACROSS, THE: Fred MacMurray, Carole Lombard—Pleased our Sunday crowd but fell off terribly on Monday. MacMurray always good but Carole as a Swede was a washout. Anyway they liked it but forgot to tell their friends about it. The next day was opening of school, which helped to cut down the crowd. Played September 6-7.—John J. Metzger, Oriental Theatre, Beaver City, Neb. Small town patronage.

RETURN OF SOPHIE LANG, THE: Gertrude Michael, Ray Milland—A good story well played. Miss Michael fine in this. No drawing power though. Played September 4-5.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SPENDTHRIFT: Henry Fonda, Pat Paterson, Mary Brian—A little bit different story in this good production. Played August 28-29.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

THREE CHEERS FOR LOVE: Eleanore Whitney, Robert Cummings—Contrary to some fan magazine reports we found this a very acceptable piece of film fare. Miss Whitney's tapping is tops and Cummings has a nice personality. Nothing big but full of pep and has some nice dance numbers and songs. Played August 26-27.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

THREE ON A TRAIL: William Boyd, Jimmy Ellison—These westerns are all good and they do business. Played August 29, day.—Kenneth Richardson, Richardson Theatre, Seneca, S. C. Small town patronage.

TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE, THE: Fred MacMurray, Sylvia Sidney, Henry Fonda, Fuzzy Knight—Perhaps the biggest box office attraction we have played in our theatre. Outgrossed anything by more than $100 and did we have it coming to us. After "Anything Goes," "Klondike Annie," "Rose of the Rancho," "Broadcast of 1936," etc., we still think we have something coming. I played this same day as my competitor in nearest town and am wondering how much more could have been done on the picture with open territory. Played June 25-27.—John J. Metzger, Oriental Theatre, Beaver City, Neb. Small town patronage.

TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE, THE: Sylvia Sidney, Henry Fonda, Fred MacMurray, Spanky McFarland—A marvelous photographic achievement. Capacity crowds every night and then some. Largest Saturday night in the theatre's history. All we do now is yearn for more like it. Played August 20-22.—Mrs. E. L. Tait, Lauder Theatre, Mount Forest, Ontario. Small town patronage.

13 HOURS BY AIR: Fred MacMurray, Joan Bennett—Very good program picture which everybody liked and held up both days at the box office. Although some exhibitors claim Paramount below par this season, we found it, on the average, one of our best bets, and we have used it for past 20 years. Remember when Biographs were tops? Running time, 75 minutes. Played September 11-12.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. Downtown patronage.

Republic

CAPPY RICKS RETURNS: Robert McWade, Florine McKinney—Good story. Good crowd and all classes satisfied. This independent offering surprised us. Not big, but different from the story by Peter B. Kyne. Running time, 68 minutes. Played September 9-10.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. Downtown patronage.

RKO Radio

ANNIE OAKLEY: Barbara Stanwyck, Preston Foster—A much better picture than you would expect. It seems to satisfy all classes of patrons. Personally I did not see anything that would set me raving but the returns at the box office were very acceptable. Played September 4-5.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. General patronage.

DANCING PIRATE: Charles Collins, Steffi Duna—Slow business. Didn't see it. I wasn't interested. So were the patrons. Played August 10.—Kenneth Richardson, Richardson Theatre, Seneca, S. C. Small town patronage.

EX-MRS. BRADFORD, THE: William Powell, Jean Arthur—We ran this as a special but I fail to see how its gets that way. Just a fair program picture, in my judgment. They kill off too many jockeys with their fantastic spiders. Running time, 81 minutes. Played August 28-29.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

FARMER IN THE DELL: Fred Stone, Jean Parker—We did our usual midweek business to satisfied audiences. Played September 2-3.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

LAST OUTLAW, THE: Hoot Gibson, Harry Carey—This picture pleased the western fans. The westerns fans are getting rather scarce in these parts. We must be getting the small towns educated to the classy pictures.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

LAST OUTLAW, THE: Harry Carey. Hoot Gibson—It did all right on Bargain Day and opened a new serial. It was liked a lot, being almost as good as "Powder Smoke Range," but none of them get that good. It was better than the average western. Played September 3-4.—Kenneth Richardson, Richardson Theatre, Seneca, S. C. Small town patronage.

LOVE ON A BET: Gene Raymond, Wendy Barrie—One of the best little pieces of entertainment we have had in the light comedy line for some time. Lots of laughs and good story that old and young will enjoy. Used it on a Bargain Night but it will fit in any place you care to play it. Played September 8.—John J. Metzger, Oriental Theatre, Beaver City, Neb. Small town patronage.

SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE: Gene Raymond, Margaret Callahan—Fair program. RKO has disappointed me this year. Am playing "Dancing Pirate" soon and I am dreading it. Maybe it won't be so bad as everyone says it is?—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

SPECIAL INVESTIGATOR: Richard Dix—The picture pleased.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

YELLOW DUST: Richard Dix, Ieila Hyams—Very good crowd and think they were satisfied. Played August 15.—Kenneth Richardson, Richardson Theatre, Seneca, S. C. Small town patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

BORDER PATROLMAN, THE: George O'Brien—I suppose that it is natural for a star to try to rise above the so called horse operas, but when he has made his reputation as a riding western star, he should stick to his knitting and not go highbrow as this picture is. Swanky hotels, the rich, spoiled heiress and Georgie to tame her. It has a pretty good story and is not a bad picture, but George is not in his boots and saddle and there is where the western fans expect to see him. Hence some disappointment was apparent in the audience.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

CHAMPAGNE CHARLIE: Paul Cavanagh, Helen Wood—Good program picture which holds interest all the way through. Running time, six reels. Played September 2.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

COUNTRY DOCTOR, THE: Jean Hersholt, Dorothy Peterson, Dionne Quintuplets—Return engagement. Did a little better than average business. Played August 14.—Kenneth Richardson, Richardson Theatre, Seneca, S. C. Small town patronage.

EDUCATING FATHER: Jed Prouty, Shirley Deane—This is another one of the series of the Jones family. A simple little picture that has some laughs, and Fox evidently thinks that they are going to be another Chan series for them. But of this I have my doubts. Unless they get some stories that will hold up this type of picture the public will tire of them, is my opinion.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

EDUCATING FATHER: Jed Prouty, Shirley Deane—These Jones family series are really something for the small town exhibitor to work on. Played my first one on Bank Night to a large audience and received nothing but enthusiastic comment. Consequently they are sold here. If you can get them on the first one, the rest will be easy. Played August 27.—Mary E. Lind, Ute Theatre, Rifle, Col. Small town patronage.

GENTLE JULIA: Jane Withers—Here is a child actress who can really act. Fox is certainly fortunate in tying up two remarkable youngsters. Good juvenile stars are always popular. Remember Baby Peggy and Jackie Coogan. This picture grossed more for us than any of the last three Temples. Running time, 63 minutes. Played September 6-8.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. Downtown patronage.

HALF ANGEL: Frances Dee, Brian Donlevy—Interesting programmer. Certainly not the super attraction the salesman spoke of when he sold us the twelve super-supers from 20th Century. No drawing card with us. Played September 9-10.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

HUMAN CARGO: Claire Trevor, Brian Donlevy—A very good newspaper-gangster picture. Played to satisfied customers.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

LITTLE MISS NOBODY: Jane Withers, Ralph Morgan—The reform school again! When will they get these child stars out of this atmosphere. However, this one still makes okay entertainment. Played August 28-29.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

MESSAGE TO GARCIA, A: Wallace Beery, Barbara Stanwyck, John Boles—It's a good picture that did not draw.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

MESSAGE TO GARCIA, A: John Boles, Wallace Beery, Barbara Stanwyck—A cut and dried "special" of the blood and thunder type, which failed to interest the public on a warm night. The children liked it, but the ladies stayed away. "Everybody's Old Man," a programmer from Fox, much better for us, and left us a few dimes for the payroll. This buying a year's program in advance is one of the toughest guessing games in the world, for the exhibitors. Running time, 80 minutes. Played September 13-15.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. Downtown patronage.

POOR LITTLE RICH GIRL, THE: Shirley Temple, Alice Faye, Gloria Stuart, Jack Haley, Michael Whalen—Shirley's most modern production. Up to par all around. Played September 6-7.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

POOR LITTLE RICH GIRL, THE: Shirley Temple, Alice Faye, Gloria Stuart, Jack Haley, Michael Whalen—Same Temple business. That is saying enough. I don't think it is quite as entertaining as some of her last oncs. Hope Fox doesn't let her slip. Played August 31-September 1.—Kenneth Richardson, Richardson Theatre, Seneca, S. C. Small town patronage.

STATE FAIR: Will Rogers, Janet Gaynor—Have been doing as much business on these Rogers reissues as the first time we showed them. Rogers is still our biggest draw. Played September 12-13.—N. E. Frank, Wayland Theatre, Wayland, Mich. Small town patronage.

THANKS A MILLION: Dick Powell, Ann Dvorak, Guy Kibbee, Fred Allen—Glad to see Powell in this as it was better than what he has been getting lately from Warner (namely, "Colleen" and "Midsummer Night's Dream"). Rubinoff fine. Let's see more of him. His music in the first reel when he was playing for the bus driver was the best part of the picture to me.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

UNDER TWO FLAGS: Ronald Colman, Victor McLaglen, Claudette Colbert—Good picture to the poorest business for some time.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

United Artists

GHOST GOES WEST, THE: Robert Donat, Jean Parker—A conundrum! If you know your audience you can easily estimate if it will go over in your house. The better class will appreciate its sly pokes at Americans while the opposite type of patrons will call it silly and impossible. Slow start hurts it for the neighborhood trade's liking. Played September 8.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

LITTLE LORD FAUNTLEROY: Freddie Bartholomew, Dolores Costello Barrymore—An excellent film. All actors do their work well. It seems as though an old story that pleases never gets too old to get them in. Running time, 102 minutes. Played September 4-5.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

THINGS TO COME: Raymond Massey—A different kind of a picture, well produced, but too heavy and not at all pleasing. Business was off considerable. It is interesting, but did not please.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

Universal

COWBOY AND THE KID, THE: Buck Jones, Dorothy Revier—This one clicked better than expected and is not bad entertainment. Not as westerny, perhaps, as some. Played September 1.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

DON'T GET PERSONAL: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—Very entertaining and did better than average Saturday night business. Played September 5th, night.—Kenneth Richardson, Richardson Theatre, Seneca, S. C. Small town patronage.

DRACULA'S DAUGHTER: Otto Kruger, Mar-

News of Big Chance Soon Spreads in Neighborhood

A fire started yesterday afternoon in the basement of the Eagle Theater, a motion-picture house at 1852 Third Avenue, between 102d and 103d Streets. Mrs. Mary McCord, matron in charge of the children's section, smelled smoke about 3:45 o'clock and informed David Olsen, assistant manager of the theater.

Olsen, as soon as he had turned in an alarm, switched on the lights and mounted the stage. He announced that there was a small fire in the basement which would be extinguished within a few minutes and asked the spectators to leave the house quietly, assuring them that they might return without charge when the fire was out.
